JUDICIAL DECISIONS UPON THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE CONSCRIPTION ACT.

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, Judge Cadwalader delivered an opinion in September, 1863, a condensation of which is subjoined from the New York Tribune of September 11, 1863 :

The powers conferred by the Constitution upon Congress, to raise and support armies and make rules for their government, are distinct from the powers which are conferred on it as to the militia of the respective States. Until the act in question, the national armies had been raised by voluntary enlistment. The system of enrollment and draft had long been matured as to the militia of the States. But until the summer of 1862 the utmost penalty for not serving when drafted from such militia for the service of the United States had been pecuniary, with limited imprisonment for non-payment. The act of Congress of 17th July, 1862, authorized impressment into the military service of the United States of those persons drafted from the militia under that act, who, when ordered to attend at the place of muster, disobeyed.

The specific power of impressment had not been previously conferred. But, under the former system, though the fine for not serving had, when received, been considered an equivalent for service, the payment had nevertheless been enforced, or the penalty of imprisonment inflicted by courts-martial when the money was not otherwise collected. The constitutionality of this former jurisdiction of courts-martial may be considered as established. (5 Wheaton 1.) It would not have been constitutional if disobedience to attend at a place of muster had not been a military offence. Congress, unless it had the power of absolutely subjecting a drafted person to military rule from the time of the draft, could not have thus made his disobedience before he was mustered into service a military offence.

The act of Congress of 1795, which fixed the time of arrival at the place of rendezvous as the period of the commencement of the military service, might constitutionally, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, have made the time of draft the period. (5 Wheaton, 17, 18, 30, and see pp. 36, 37, 56, 64, 65.) The constitutionality of the act of 17th July, 1862, when the question was considered here in March last, in McCall's case, appeared therefore to be established by authority. If the question had been thought an open one, the same view of the effect of the Constitution would have been taken.

The act of 3d of March, 1863, has adopted a like system on an extended scale, for the purpose of raising national armies independently of the militia of the States. Under the former laws which have been mentioned, a question such as that now under consideration could not arise. The question under those laws could only have been that of a military court's exercise of jurisdiction over a person who having been lawfully drafted already owed military service. There could not have been any dispute that the primary question whether he had been lawfully drafted or was liable to serve, was open to decision by the ordinary tribunals under a writ of habeas corpus. Here, however, the question is whether a military commission can so decide the original question of liability to serve as absolutely as to deprive all other tribunals of cognizance of it.

The enactments of the law in question are not so arranged that its provisions for the preparatory enrollment, and those for the draft, are always separated. They must however, be kept distinct when they are considered with reference to the Constitution. The most unlimited system of mere enrollment could not be constitutionally objectionable.

But a system of drafting might be arbitrary and latitudinarian to such an extent as to encroach upon constitutional rights. * * * * The constitutional authority to enact the law which is under consideration was derived exclusively from the power to raise armies. It cannot be enlarged under the authority which the Constitution also confers to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying the powers delegated, this one included, into execution.

After citing the provision of the act, the judge says :

This review of the principal enactment of the law suffices to indicate its general purposes. The organization of armies under it is to cease on the termination of the civil war, for whose exigencies it provides; and the term of service of those drafted under it cannot exceed three years, though the war should continue longer. Such limitations of the time would have prevented the compulsory requirement of military service from being unconstitutional, though it had included every able-bodied male inhabitant.

[From the Illinois State Journal of June 17, 1864.]

THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE ENROLLMENT ACT AFFIRMED.

In the United States Circuit Court, Judges David Davis and S. H. Treat upon the bench, an important decision was rendered on the 15th instant. It was on a motion to quash the indictment in the case of "The United States agt. John Graham and others," for resistance to the enrollment in Fulton county last summer. The case was ably argued for the prosecution by Messrs. Lawrence Weldon and W. H. Herndon, and by Messrs. Judd and James for the defence. The court rendered a decision affirming the constitutionality of the enrollment act, based upon the provision of the Constitution empowering Congress to raise and equip armies. This is the first decision under the enrollment act rendered in this State, and is therefore important. The motion to quash the indictment was granted, on the ground that the punishment of the particular class of offenders charged was not specifically provided for in the act of July, 1863. It was admitted, however, that the act as amended by the act of February, 1864, covers the whole point, and that, as the law now stands, resistance to the enrollment is liable to the severest penalties. The decision was rendered by Judge Treat, Judge Davis concurring.

THE TWO DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

A majority of the judges of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, as constituted in November, 1863, pronounced the enrollment law unconstitutional. Chief Justice Lowrie and Justices George W. Woodward and James Thompson concurred in this judgment, and Justices William Strong and John M. Read dissented. These points are covered by the decision :

1. The Constitution of the United States recognizes only two sorts of military land forces, viz., "the militia," and the "regular or standing army."

2. The conscription act of March 3, 1863, is not founded on that clause of the Constitution which provides for calling forth the militia, because the persons drafted under the act are not to be armed, organized, and disciplined under the militia law, nor are they called forth under State officers, as required by the Constitution.

3. There is no power given to recruit the regular Army by forced levies. This can only be done by voluntary enlistments.

4. The mode of "raising armies" by forced recruiting for the suppression of rebellion or insurrection is not authorized by the Constitution, because such cases are expressly provided for by the power therein given for calling out the dormant forces, or militia.

5. The Constitution authorizes levies of the "militia of the States" in its organized form in cases of rebellion and invasion, but in no other case or mode than is therein provided.

6. The mode of coercion provided for this purpose by the act of March 3, 1862, is unconstitutional, because

(1) It is incompatible with the provisions of the Constitution relative to the militia.

(2) It exhausts the militia force of the several States, which existed as an institution before the formation of the Federal Government, and was not only not granted away but expressly reserved at the formation of the Constitution; annuls the remedy for insurrection expressly provided by the Constitution, and substitutes a new one not therein provided for; and converts into national forces as part of the regular army of the General Government the whole militia force of the States, not on the contingency therein provided for nor in the form therein prescribed, but entirely irrespective thereof.

(3) It incorporates into this new national force every civil officer of the State except the Governor, and every officer of its social institutions and military organization within the prescribed age, thus subjecting the civil, social, and military organizations of the States to the Federal power to "raise armies."

(4) It provides for a thorough fusion of the army and the militia, two forces which are kept distinct by the Constitution, by investing the President with power to assign the soldiers obtained by the draft to any corps, regiment, or branch of service at his pleasure.

(5) It subjects the citizen to the rules and articles of war before he is in "actual service," and proposes to effect this purpose by merely drawing his name from a wheel and serving notice of that fact upon him.

The key-note of Judge Woodward's opinion is this paragraph :

The great vice of the conscript law is, that it is founded on an assumption that Congress may take away, not the State rights of the citizen, but the security and foundation of his State rights. And how long is civil liberty expected to last, after the securities of civil liberty are destroyed? The Constitution of the United States committed the liberties of the citizen in part to the Federal Government, but expressly reserved to the States, and the people of the States, all it did not delegate. It gave the General Government a standing army, but left to the States their militia. Its purposes in all this balancing of powers were wise and good, but this legislation disregards these distinctions and upturns the whole system of government when it converts the State militia into "National forces," and claims to use and govern them as such.

Chief Justice Lowrie and Justice Thompson elaborate the same point.

1864, Jan. 16—The same court, then differently constituted by the defeat of Chief Justice Lowrie at the October election and the choice of Daniel Agnew, directed the orders granted in the cases heard in November to be vacated, and affirming the constitutionality of the enrollment act, overruled the motions for injunctions to restrain certain provost marshals from proceeding with the enrollment and draft. Messrs. Strong, Read and Agnew constituted the majority, and Woodward and Thompson the minority.

Justice Agnew closed his opinion with stating these conclusions:

The constitutional authority to use the national forces creates a corresponding duty to provide a number adequate to the necessity. The duty is vital and essential, falling back on the fundamental right of self-preservation, and the powers expressed to declare war, raise armies, maintain navies, and provide for the common defence. Power and duty now go hand in hand with the extremity until every available man in the nation is called into service, if the emergency requires it, and of this there can be no judge but Congress.

They may proceed, therefore, to the exhaustion of the whole element from which the State draws its militia, for the people, under the two powers, are the same; while the supremacy of the national power, provided in section 2 of article 6, necessarily draws to itself the whole number, if required by the exigency, to the exclusion of the State power.

And in reason why should a major power be restricted by a minor? The power to raise armies comprehends for its purposes the whole scope of the purposes of armies, while the authority to call out the militia is confined to the enumerated three.

But it is a mistake in fact to say this case exhausts the militia. It enrolls probably all; for how can any be drafted without all be known? But the draft is confined to so many as are needed for the emergency, while the others remain in the militia. And if you deny the power to repeat the draft, what is that but to say your force shall not increase with the necessity?

Nor is it true that the enrollment under this law exhausts the militia. Neither the law of Congress, nor the laws of the States, so far as we know them, have enrolled all able bodied men capable of militia duty. A wide margin yet exists in the law of the nation; but we do hear of this margin being written all over in the seceded States.

As to the objection to the 13th section, providing the punishment of desertion for those who fail to appear, it is only necessary to say, we cannot presume the complainant will be guilty of failing to perform his legal duty subsequent to the draft, when he finds the law valid which drafts him. He asks us to relieve him from the draft, not from a military trial for misconduct. Whenever he chooses to incur the proposed penalty for disobeying a valid law, it will be in time for the proper tribunal to arrest an illegal mode of punishment.

The question of jurisdiction is unnecessary to a decision. The point is too important, the cases too numerous, and the labor too great. It should therefore be left for a decision when it shall have to be met.

For all these reasons I concur in rescinding the order for a preliminary injunction.

GOVERNOR SEYMOUR AND THE DRAFT.

The result of the repeated conferences between the State authorities of New York and the War Department, was to ascertain that the State had been called to furnish 12,533 men more than her quota; and the House of Representatives of that State, during its late session, passed this resolution:

Resolved. That the thanks of this House be and are hereby tendered to his Excellency Governor Seymour for calling the attention of the General Government at Washington to the errors in the apportionment of the quota of this State under the enrollment act of 3d March, 1863, and for his prompt and efficient efforts in procuring a correction of the same.

GENERAL M'CLELLAN URGED A DRAFT IN 1861.

Soon after General McClellan assumed command of the army, succeeding General Scott, he wrote this letter to the President:

WASHINGTON, August 20, 1861.

SIR: I have just received the inclosed dispatch in cipher Colonel Marcy knows what he says, and is of the coolest judgment. I recommend that the Secretary of War ascertain at once by telegram how the enrollment proceeds in New York and elsewhere, and that, if it is not proceeding with great rapidity, drafts be made at once. We must have men without delay.

Respectfully your obedient servant,

DISPATCH FROM COL. R. B. MARCY TO GENERAL M'CLELLAN.

NEW YORK, August 20, 1861.

I urge upon you to make a positive and unconditional demand for an immediate draft of the additional troops you require. Men will not volunteer now, and drafting is the only successful plan. The people will applaud such a course, rely upon it. I will be in Washington to-morrow.

R. B. MARCY.

certificate and the bounty of $100 and the slave shall be free. [For whole section, and for other votes on colored soldiers, see other pages.]

IN SENATE.

Pending the consideration of the bill of 1862, 1862, July 10—Mr. DAVIS, of Kentucky, moved to strike out the words "or any military or naval service for which they may be found competent:" which was rejected—yeas 11, nays 27, as follows:

OTHER PROCEEDINGS ON THIS SUBJECT.

Third Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress. IN HOUSE.

1863, January 27—Mr. STEVENS offered a bill for the enlistment of 150,000 soldiers, persons of color or of African descent, to serve for five years, and to receive a bounty of $5, and pay at the rate of $10 per month, recruiting stations to be established in free or slave States, regimental officers to be white, company officers white or colored as the President may direct. Slaves and freemen may be enlisted; such persons shall never again be slaves but the United States shall pay for such of them as belong to persons not disloyal.

Mr. HICKMAN offered a substitute authorizing the organization of three hundred colored regiments to be uniformed in a special and marked manner, to serve for seven years, at a monthly pay of $6 50, one half to be retained till discharged—their officers to be of collegiate education and receive twice the pay of other officers. The bill contained a colonization feature, and appropriated the proceeds of confiscation to be applied to educational purposes in the States in which the property confiscated, lies.

The bill was repeatedly before the House, was severely "filibustered," and was finally modified by Mr. STEVENS to read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to enroll, arm, equip, and receive into the land and naval service of the United States, such number of volunteers of African descent as he may deem useful to suppress the present rebellion, for such term of service as he may prescribe, not exceeding five years. The said volunteers to be organized according to the regulations of the branch of service in which they may be enlisted, to receive the same rations, clothing, and equipments as other volunteers, and monthly pay not to exceed that of other volunteers; to be officered by persons appointed and commissioned by the President, and to be governed by the rules and articles of war and such other rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the President: Provided, That nothing herein contained, or in the rules and articles of war, shall be so construed as to authorize or permit any officer of African descent to be appointed to rank, or to exercise military or naval authority over white officers, soldiers, or men in the military or naval service of the United States; nor shall any greater pay than ten dollars per month, with the usual allowance of clothing and rations, be allowed or paid to private or laborers of African descent which are, or may be, in the military or naval service of the United States: Provided further, That the slaves of loyal citizens in the States exempt by the President's proclamation of January 1, 1863, shall not be received into the armed service of the United States, nor shall there be recruiting offices opened in either of the States of Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, or Missouri, without the consent of the Governor of said State having been first obtained.

IN SENATE.

Pending the army appropriation bill, 1864, April 22—Mr. WILSON offered these resolutions:

That all persons of color who have been or may be mustered into the service of the United States shall receive the same uniform, clothing, arms, equipments, camp equipage, rations, medical and hospital attendance, pay and emoluments, other than bounty, as other soldiers of the regular or volunteer forces of the United States of like arm of the service, from and after the 1st day of January, 1864, and that every person of color who shall hereafter be mustered into the service shall receive such sums in bounty as the President shall order in the different States and parts of the United States, not exceeding one hundred dollars.

That all persons enlisted and mustered into service as volunteers under the call dated October 17, 1864, for 300,000 volunteers, who were at the time of enlistment actually enrolled and subject to draft in the State in which they volunteered, shall receive from the United States the same amount of bounty, without regard to color.

That the same premium shall be allowed for each colored recruit now mustered, or hereafter to be mustered, into the service of the United States, as is or shall be allowed for white recruits: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall previously give his assent to the same.

Which were agreed to—yeas 31, nays 5, as follows:

Mr. DAVIS moved to add these words as a new section :

Which was disagreed to—yeas 10, (Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Powell, Saulsbury.) nays 27.

Mr. HENDRICKS offered a new section :

The army appropriation bill was then passed—yeas 36, nay 1, (Mr. Powell.)

IN HOUSE.

April 30—The House Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend by substituting a bill, making these changes. May 1st was fixed as the date of increased pay; the bounty to be given to those colored soldiers enlisted under the call of Oct. 17, 1863, is limited to $100; and these two sections are substituted for the Senate's last two :

That in every case where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, that any regiment, or any battery, or any company of cavalry, of colored troops, has been enlisted and mustered into the service of the United States, under any authorized assurance given by any officer or agent of the United States, or by any Governor of any State, authorized thereto by the President or the Secretary of War, that the non-commissioned officers and privates of such regiment, battery, or company, should be paid the same as other troops of the same arm of the service, then they shall be so paid for the period of time counting from the date of their being respectively mustered into the service to the 1st day of May, A.D. 1864.

That there may be reserved at the discretion of the Secretary of War, and under such regulation as he may prescribe, a portion of the pay of any colored soldier, not exceeding in any case more than one-third thereof, to be applied to the support of the family of such soldier, or of other near relatives dependent on him for support.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to strike from the section the word "pay," which was lost—yeas 53, nays 85.

A division of the question was called; the first amendment of the House was disagreed to; and that of the Senate—being the first paragraph of bill passed, April 22, above—was agreed to—yeas 80, nays 51, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, John B. The second amendment of the Committee (with regard to bounty) was agreed to, and the Senate amendment, as amended, was agreed to—yeas 79, nays 52.

The third and fourth House amendments were disagreed to. The following amendment was then adopted as a substitute for the third proposition of the Senate :

That all free persons of color who have been or may be mustered into the military service of the United States shall from the date of their enlistment receive the same uniform, clothing, arms, equipments, camp equipage, rations, medical and hospital attendance, pay and emoluments, and bounty, as other soldiers of the regular or volunteer forces of the United States of like arm of the service.

Yeas 73, nays 55. The NAYS were—

The fourth amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in, being in another bill.

May 3—The Senate insisted on its amendments, and appointed a Committee of Conference, which,

May 25—Reported, and recommended the adoption of this section as a substitute for those adopted by the two Houses :

That in every case where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that any regiment of infantry, or any battery, or any company of cavalry, of colored troops has been enlisted and mustered into the service of the United States, under any authorized assurance given by any officer or agent of the United States, or by any Governor of any State authorized thereto by the President or the Secretary of War, the non-commissioned officers and privates of such regiment, battery, or company shall be paid the same as other troops of the same arm of the service, then they shall be so paid for the period of time counting from the date of their being respectively mustered into the service to the 1st day of January, 1864: Provided, however, That this section shall not be construed to prevent like payment to other colored troops from the time of their being mustered into the service, if such shall be held by the proper authority to be their right under the law.

Which was rejected—yeas 25, nays 121. The YEAS were :

Messrs. Baily, Boyd, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Thomas T. Davis, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Hooper, Kasson, McAllister, McBride, McIndoe, Morrill, Amos Myers, Perham, Price, Schenck, Shannon, Smith, Smithers, Thomas, Tracy, Whaley, Woodbridge—25.

ANOTHER CONFERENCE REPORT.

June 10—The second Committee of Conference on the army appropriation bill recommended the following section relating to the pay of colored troops, as a substitute :

That all persons of color who were free on the 19th day of April, 1861, and who have been enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States, shall from the time of their enlistment be entitled to receive the pay, bounty, and clothing allowed to such persons by the laws existing at the time of their enlistment. And the Attorney General of the United States is hereby authorized to determine any question of law arising under this provision. And if the Attorney General aforesaid shall determine that any such enlisted persons are entitled to receive any pay, bounty, or clothing in addition to what they have already received, the Secretary of War shall make all necessary regulations to enable the pay department to make payment in accordance with such determination.

June 11—It was concurred in, without division in the Senate.

June 13—The report was adopted in the House—yeas 72, nays 58, as follows:

Mr. Cox moved to table the motion; which was disagreed to—yeas 68, nays 87.

The resolution was then adopted.

1864, May 16—Mr. RICE, of Maine, introduced a bill for the enrollment, organization, and service of certain persons of African descent in the militia of the several States; which was referred to the Committee on the Militia.

OPINION OF ATTORNEY GENERAL BATES ON PAYING A COLORED CHAPLAIN.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE,

April 23, 1864.

SIR: You have done me the honor to refer to me a communication to yourself from his excellency John A. Andrew, Governor of Massachusetts, with accompanying papers, relative to the claim of Rev. Samuel Harrison for pay as chaplain of the 54th regiment of Massachusetts volunteers.

It appears by Governor Andrew's letter and the other papers that Mr. Harrison, who is a colored man, was duly elected, and on the 8th day of September, 1863, commissioned by Governor Andrew as a chaplain of the 54th regiment of Massachusetts volunteers in the service of the United States; that on the 12th of November, 1862, he was mustered and accepted into the service of the United States at Morris Island, South Carolina, by the proper mustering officer, and actually performed the duties of chaplain of that regiment then and since serving in South Carolina. On demanding his pay as chaplain, he was met by the following refusal in writing, signed by the paymaster at Hilton Head:

"Samuel Harrison, chaplain of the 54th regiment Massachusetts volunteers, (colored troops), asks pay at the usual rate, $100 per month and two rations, which, he being of African descent, I decline paying, under act of Congress passed July 17, 1862, employing persons of African descent in military service of the United States. The chaplain declines to receive anything less."

You have requested my opinion whether the paymaster should have paid as demanded, and, if he should, whether it is your duty to order him to do so.

The 54th regiment of Massachusetts volunteers was organized in the same manner as were other regiments of State volunteers under the following order of the War Department, dated January 26, 1863, viz:

"Ordered, That Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, is authorized, until further orders, to raise such number of volunteer companies of artillery for duty in the forts of Massachusetts and elsewhere, and such corps of infantry for the volunteer military service, as he may find convenient, such volunteers to be enlisted for three years or until sooner discharged, and may include persons of African descent, organized into separate corps. He will make the usual needful requisitions on the appropriate staff bureaus and officers for the proper transportation, organization, supplies, subsistence, arms, and equipments of such volunteers."

"EDWIN M. STANTON,

"Secretary of War."

I do not know that any rule of law, constitutional or statutory, even prohibited the acceptance, organization, and muster of "persons of African descent" into the military service of the United States as enlisted men or volunteers. But whatever doubt might have existed on the subject had been fully resolved before this order was issued, by the eleventh section of the act of 17th July, 1862, chapter 195, which authorized the President to employ as many persons of African descent as he might deem necessary and proper for the suppression of the rebellion, and for that purpose to organize and use them in such manner as he may judge best for the public welfare, and the twelfth section of the act of same date, chapter 201, which authorized the President to receive into the service of the United States for the purpose of constructing entrenchments, or performing camp service, or any other labor, or any military or naval service for which they might be found competent, persons of African descent, such persons to be enrolled and organized under such regulations, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws, as the President might prescribe.

The 54th Massachusetts regiment was therefore organized and mustered into the service of the United States under clear authority of law.

But the fifteenth section of the act of 17th July, 1862, chapter 201, after directing that all persons who have been or shall be enrolled in the service of the United States under that act shall receive the pay and rations then allowed by law to soldiers, according to their respective grades, contains this proviso: "That persons of African descent who under this law shall be employed shall receive ten dollars per month and one ration, three dollars of which monthly pay may be in clothing."

Whether persons of African descent "enrolled in the service of the United States" as private soldiers are included within the words "persons of African descent who under this law shall be employed," thereby limiting their pay as soldiers to ten dollars a month, is not the question you have submitted to me; for Mr. Harrison was not a private soldier, but an officer, serving under the commission of the Governor of Massachusetts, the authenticity and validity of which were recognized and admitted by the United States when he was mustered into its service. But the question is, can a person of African descent lawfully hold the office and receive the pay of chaplain of a volunteer regiment in the service of the United States?

I have already said that I knew of no provision of law, constitutional or statutory, which prohibited the acceptance of persons of African descent into the military service of the United States; and if they could be lawfully accepted as private soldiers, so also might they be accepted as commissioned officers, if otherwise qualified therefor. But the express power conferred on the President by the eleventh section of the act of 17th July, 1862, chapter 195, before cited, to employ this class of persons for the suppression of the rebellion as he may judge best for the public welfare, furnishes all needful sanction of law to the employment of a colored chaplain for a volunteer regiment of his own race. Nor is any prohibition of the employment of such person found in the statutes which declare the qualifications of chaplains. The ninth section of the act to authorize the employment of volunteers, &c., of 22d July, 1861, chapter 9, provides that there shall be allowed to each regiment one chaplain, who shall be appointed by the regimental commander on the vote of the field officers and company commanders on duty with the regiment at the time the appointment shall be made. The chaplain so appointed must be a regularly ordained minister of a Christian denomination, &c. The seventh section of the act of 3d August, 1861, chapter 42, for the better organization of the military establishment, declares that one chaplain shall be allowed to each regiment of the army, to be selected and appointed as the President may direct, provided that none but regularly ordained ministers of some Christian denomination shall be eligible to selection or appointment. The eighth section of the act of 17th July, 1862, chapter 200, declares that the two sections last cited shall be construed to read as follows:

"That no person shall be appointed a chaplain in the United States army who is not a regular ordained minister of some religious denomination, and who does not present testimonials of his present good standing as such minister, with a recommendation for his appointment as an army chaplain from some authorized ecclesiastical body, or not less than five accredited ministers belonging to said religious denomination."

The closest inspection of these provisions will discover nothing that precludes the appointment of a Christian minister to the office of chaplain because he is a person of African descent. I therefore conclude that Mr. Harrison was the lawfully appointed and qualified chaplain of the 54th Massachusetts regiment.

The ninth section of the act of the 17th July, 1862, chapter 200, provides that thereafter, the compensation of all chaplains in the regular or volunteer service or army hospitals shall be one hundred dollars per month and two rations a day when on duty. Was Mr. Harrison entitled to this rate of compensation, or was he limited to the pay of ten dollars a month and one ration, fixed by the proviso to the fifteenth section of the act of 17th July, 1862, chapter 201?

It will be observed that this proviso declares that ten dollars a month and one ration shall be received by persons of African descent employed under the law of which it is a part, viz., the act of 17th July, 1862, chapter 201. Now, we have seen that it is not necessary to resort to that law to find authority for the appointment of Mr. Harrison as chaplain, for, apart from the authority which might be presumed to exist prior to the enactment of any of these statutes, the eleventh section of the act of 17th July, 1862, chapter 195, sufficiently warranted it. To bring him, then, within the sweep of this proviso, and thus withdraw him from the reach of the act which specifically fixes the pay of the class of officers to which by clear law he belongs, would violate the plainest principles of construction. The act, of which the proviso is a part, was not intended, in my opinion, either to authorize the employment or fix the pay of any persons of African descent, except those who might be needed to perform the humble offices of labor and service for which they might be found competent. The twelfth section authorizes them to be received into service for the purpose of constructing entrenchments, or performing camp service, or any other labor, or any military or naval service for which they might be found competent. The thirteenth section declares that when any man or boy of African descent, who, by the laws of any State, shall owe service or labor to any person aiding the rebellion, shall render such service as this act provides for, he, his mother, wife and children shall be free thereafter, with certain exceptions. And the fifteenth section fixes their pay as before stated.

While it is true that the words of the twelfth section are broad enough to embrace all persons of African descent who may be received into the military or naval service of the United States, it is yet quite evident from the terms of the whole section, as well as from the promise of freedom held out to such persons who were slaves, in the thirteenth section, that in limiting their pay to ten dollars a month and one ration, Congress had in view the class who were fitted only for the humbler kinds of service referred to, and not persons who, under the authority of other laws, might be appointed to positions requiring higher qualifications, and entitled to a higher rate of pay. To assume that because Mr. Harrison is a person of African descent he shall draw only the pay which this law establishes for the class it obviously refers to, and be deprived of the pay which another law specifically affixes to the office he lawfully held, would be, in my opinion, a distortion of both laws, not only unjust to him, but in plain violation of the purpose of Congress.

I therefore think that the paymaster should have paid Mr. Harrison his full pay as chaplain of a volunteer regiment.

Your attention having been specially called to the wrong done in this case, I am also of opinion that your constitutional obligation to take care that the laws be faithfully executed makes it your duty to direct the Secretary of War to inform the officers of the pay department of the army that such is your view of the law, and I do not doubt that it will be accepted by them as furnishing the correct rule for their action.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
EDWARD BATES,
Attorney General.

The President.

PROTECTION OF COLORED SOLDIERS.

THE PRESIDENT'S ORDER.

[General Orders No. 252.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, July 31, 1863.

The following order of the President is published for the information and government of all concerned:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, July 30, 1863.

It is the duty of every Government to give protection to its citizens, of whatever class, color, or condition, and especially to those who are duly organized as soldiers in the public service. The law of nations, and the usages and customs of war, as carried on by civilized powers, permit no distinction as to color in the treatment of prisoners of war as public enemies. To sell or enslave any captured person, on account of his color, and for no offence against the laws of war, is a relapse into barbarism, and a crime against the civilization of the age.

The Government of the United States will give the same protection to all its soldiers; and if the enemy shall sell or enslave any one because of his color, the offence shall be punished by retaliation upon the enemy's prisoners in our possession.

It is therefore ordered that for every soldier of the United States killed in violation of the laws of war, a rebel soldier shall be executed; and for every one enslaved by the enemy, or sold into slavery, a rebel soldier shall be placed at hard labor on public works, and continued at such labor until the other shall be released and receive the treatment due to a prisoner of war.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By order of Secretary of War.

E. D. TOWNSEND, Assistant Adjutant General.

FROM THE RULES OF WAR ADOPTED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

57. So soon as a man is armed by a sovereign Government, and takes the soldier's oath of fidelity, he is a belligerent; his killing, wounding, or other warlike acts are no individual crimes or offences. No belligerent has a right to declare that enemies of a certain class, color, or condition, when properly organized as soldiers, will not be treated by him as public enemies.

58. The law of nations knows of no distinction of color, and if an enemy of the United States should enslave and sell any captured persons of their army, it would be a case for the severest retaliation, if not redressed upon complaint. The United States cannot retaliate by enslavement; therefore death must be the retaliation for this crime against the law of nations.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH AT THE BALTIMORE FAIR, APRIL 18, 1864.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: Calling it to mind that we are in Baltimore, we cannot fail to note that the world moves. [Applause.] Looking upon the many people I see assembled here to serve as they best may the soldiers of the Union, it occurs to me that three years ago those soldiers could not pass through Baltimore. I would say, blessings upon the men who have wrought these changes, and the ladies who have assisted them. [Applause.] This change which has taken place in Baltimore is part only of a far wider change that is taking place all over the country.

When the war commenced three years ago, no one expected that it would last this long, and no one supposed that the institution of slavery would be materially affected by it. But here we are. [Applause.] The war is not yet ended, and slavery has been very materially affected or interfered with. [Loud applause.] So true is it that man proposes and God disposes.

The world is in want of a good definition of the word liberty. We all declare ourselves to be for liberty, but we do not all mean the same thing. Some mean that a man can do as he pleases with himself and his property. [Applause.] With others it means that some men can do as they please with other men and other men's labor. Each of these things are called liberty, although they are entirely different. To give an illustration: A shepherd drives the wolf from the throat of his sheep when attacked by him, and the sheep of course thanks the shepherd for the preservation of his life; but the wolf denounces him as despoiling the sheep of his liberty, especially if it be a black sheep. [Applause.]

This same difference of opinion prevails among some of the people of the North. But the people of Maryland have recently been doing something to properly define the meaning of the word, and I thank them from the bottom of my heart for what they have done and are doing. [Applause.]

It is not very becoming for a President to make a speech at great length, but there is a painful rumor afloat in the country in reference to which a few words shall be said. It is reported that there has been a wanton massacre of some hundreds of colored soldiers at Fort Pillow, Tennessee, during a recent engagement there, and he thought it fit to explain some facts in relation to the affair. It is said by some persons that the Government is not in this matter doing its duty. At the commencement of the war it was doubtful whether black men would be used as soldiers or not. The matter was examined into very carefully, and after mature deliberation, the whole matter resting as it were with himself, he in his judgment decided that they should. [Applause.] He was responsible for the act to the American people, to a Christian nation, to the future historian, and, above all, to his God, to whom he would have one day to render an account of his stewardship. [Applause.] He would now say that in his opinion the black soldier should have the same protection as the white soldier, and he would have it. [Applause.] It was an error to say that the Government was not acting in the matter. The Government has no direct evidence to confirm the reports in existence relative to this massacre, but he himself believed the facts in relation to it to be as stated. When the Government does know the facts from official sources, and they prove to substantiate the reports, retribution will be surely given. [Applause.] What is reported, he thought, would make a clear case. If it is not true, then all such stories are to be considered as false. If proved true, when the matter is thoroughly examined, what shape is to be given to the retribution? Can we take the man who was captured at Vicksburg and shoot him for the victim of this massacre? If it should happen that it was the act of only one man, what course is to be pursued then? It was a matter requiring careful examination and deliberation, and if it should be substantiated by sufficient evidence all might rest assured that retribution would be had. [Applause.]

Confederate Use of Colored Persons. 1861.

A dispatch from Charleston, dated January 1, 1861, from R. R. Riordan to Hon. Perry Walker, at Mobile, describes the preparations for war, and contains this closing paragraph:

Large gangs of negroes from plantations are at work on the redoubts, which are substantially made of sand-bags and coated with sheet-iron.

A Washington dispatch to the Evening Post says:

A gentleman from Charleston says that everything there betokens active preparations for fight. The thousand negroes busy in building batteries, so far from inclining to insurrection, were grinning from ear to ear at the prospect of shooting the Yankees.

The Charleston Mercury of January 3, 1861, announced:

We learn that one hundred and fifty able-bodied free colored men, of Charleston, yesterday offered their services gratuitously to the Governor to hasten forward the important work of throwing up redoubts wherever needed along our coast.

In April, the Lynchburg (Va.) Republican announced:

We learn that about seventy of the most respectable free negroes in this city have enrolled themselves and design tendering their services to the Governor, to act in whatever capacity may be assigned them in defence of the State. Three cheers for the patriotic free negroes of Lynchburg.

A letter in the Petersburg (Va.) Express, dated at Norfolk on the 23d April, says:

The negroes in all this section of the country, slave and free, are as loyal as could be desired. They freely proffer their services to the State, and zealously contend for the privilege of being allowed to work on the batteries. Yesterday Gen. Gwynn declined the services of three hundred from Hampton who solicited employment on the batteries, and twice and thrice that number could be obtained in this city and vicinity in a single day, if it was thought advisable to accept them. Indeed, the entire fortifications of this harbor might be constructed by the voluntary labor of negroes, who would claim no higher reward than the privilege of being allowed to contribute their share toward the defence of the State, and the protection of their masters and mistresses, who had always extended a sheltering hand over them.

In June, the rebel Legislature of Tennessee passed this enlistment bill, which became a law:

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That from and after the passage of this act the Governor shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, to receive into the military service of the State all male free persons of color between the ages of fifteen and fifty, or such numbers as may be necessary, who may be sound in mind and body, and capable of actual service.

2. That such free persons of color shall receive, each, eight dollars per month, as pay, and such persons shall be entitled to draw, each, one ration per day, and shall be entitled to a yearly allowance each for clothing.

3. That, in order to carry out the provisions of this act, it shall be the duty of the sheriffs of the several counties in this State to collect accurate information as to the number and condition, with the names of free persons of color, subject to the provisions of this act, and shall, as it is practicable, report the same in writing to the Governor.

4. That a failure or refusal of the sheriffs, or any one or more of them, to perform the duties required, shall be deemed an offence, and on conviction thereof shall be punished as a misdemeanor.

5. That in the event a sufficient number of free persons of color to meet the wants of the State shall not tender their services, the Governor is empowered, through the sheriffs of the different counties, to press such persons until the requisite number is obtained.

6. That when any mess of volunteers shall keep a servant to wait on the members of the mess, each servant shall be allowed one ration.

This act to take effect from and after its passage.

W. C. WHITHORNE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

B. L. STOVALL,

Passed June 23, 1861.

HOW SLAVES ARE EMPLOYED BY THE "CONFEDERATES."

The following paragraph appears in the Memphis (Tennessee) Avalanche of the 3d of September:

A procession of several hundred stout negro men, members of the "domestic institution," marched through our streets yesterday in military order, under command of Confederate officers. They were all armed and equipped with shovels, axes, blankets, &c. A merrier set were never seen. They were brimfull of patriotism, shouting for Jeff. Davis and singing war songs.

The Avalanche of the 7th September said:

Upwards of one thousand negroes, armed with spades and pickaxes, have passed through the city within the past few days. Their destination is unknown, but it is supposed that they are on their way to the "other side of Jordan."

NEW ORLEANS, November 23.

Over twenty-eight thousand troops were reviewed to-day by Governor Moore, Major General Lovell, and Brigadier General Ruggles. The line was over seven miles long. One regiment comprised 1,400 free colored men.

THE ENROLLMENT OF FREE NEGROES IN REBELDOM.

In the Virginia House of Delegates, on the 4th of February, on the subject of enrolling free negroes for the rebel army, the following debate took place. We copy the official report of the proceedings from the Richmond Examiner:

The bill amending the convention act for the enrollment of free negroes was, on motion of Mr. Prince, taken up. Among the amendments in this bill Mr. Prince called attention to the one allowing ten cents for each negro so enrolled to the sheriff or officer so enrolling them. He proposed to strike out this amendment and insert in lieu of the proposed compensation that if the said officers fail to comply with the requisitions of this law, they be subjected to a penalty of not less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars. As these officers were exempt from military duty, he said, it was about as little as they could do to perform the service of enrolling the free negroes of their respective counties as a part of their official duties. His amendment was adopted.

Mr. RIVES proposed that the amendment in the bill respecting the term of the enlistment of negroes be amended to make the term ninety days, instead of a hundred and eighty. His reason for this was the fact that the families of many of the free negroes so enlisted, having no other means of support, would, as had been the case in his own county, suffer very much from want.

Mr. PRINCE agreed to compromise with the gentleman on one hundred and twenty days.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Botetourt, hoped that the amendment would not pass. One hundred and eighty days were only six months; and if white men could be drafted for two years, he saw no reason why free negroes should be entitled to such charitable discrimination.

Mr. RIVES replied that he made the proposition from no particular friendship to free negroes; if it were in his power, he would convert them all into slaves to-morrow. But it was simply to call the attention of the House to the fact that, in his own county, many severe cases of suffering had occurred among the families of free negroes from this cause, and he thought that possibly some alleviation might be brought about by the amendment proposed.

The amendment was rejected, and the bill was then ordered to its engrossment.

In the debate in the Rebel Congress, March 10, Mr. FOOTE of Tennessee, alluding to the fall of Nashville, said:

Gen. Johnston had called for 1,000 or 1,500 slaves to work on the fortifications, and that the call had been fully answered, when Nashville was surrendered.

DRAFT OF NEGROES FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

[From the Richmond Examiner, October 18, 1862.]

We notice that in Texas, and in some portions of the Mississippi valley, the proposition is urged to make a conscription or forced levy of slaves, where their labor is necessary for the army. Since the invasion of the South the Yankees have stolen tens of thousands of negroes, and made them useful as teamsters, laborers in camp, &c. It appears that slaveholders are averse, for some reasons, to hire their negroes in the Confederate army. The prejudice is certainly an ignorant and mean one. As the war originated and is carried on in great part for the defence of the slaveholder in his property, rights, and the perpetuation of the institution, it is reasonable to suppose that he ought to be first and foremost in aiding and assisting, by every means in his power, the triumph and success of our arms. Good wages are offered, and proper care and attention will be given every negro hired to the army, and the slaveholder ought to remember that for every negro he thus furnishes he puts a soldier in the ranks.

November 2—Governor Joseph E. Brown, of Georgia, issued a call announcing that if a sufficient supply of negroes be not tendered within ten days, General Mercer will, in pursuance of authority given him, proceed to impress, and asking of every planter of Georgia a tender of one fifth of his negroes to complete the fortifications around Savannah. This one fifth is estimated at 15,000.

This paragraph was published in the New York Times, July 15, 1862:

The Adjutant General of the Confederate States publishes a general order from the Rebel War Department, directing recruiting officers, duly accredited, to draft every white or mulatto male found throughout the South who is able to bear arms, and who is between the ages of twenty and fifty-five years, whether such persons may have obtained substitutes for themselves or not; and willful evasion of this order is to be severely punished.

The Governor of South Carolina in July, issued a proclamation for 3,000 negroes to work on the fortifications, "the need for them being pressing."

GEORGIA, ALABAMA, AND MISSISSIPPI SENTIMENT.

[From the Savannah, (Ga.) News, Sept. 2.]

EMPLOYMENT OF NEGROES IN THE REBEL ARMY.

A joint committee of the Alabama Legislature, just adjourned, reported a resolution in favor of the proposition to employ slaves in the military service of the Confederate States, which proposition, we see, is favored by many of the presses of Mississippi and Alabama. After discussion in the Alabama House, the resolution was adopted by a vote of sixty-eight yeas to twelve nays, after striking out the words "military" before service, and "soldiers" at the end of the resolution. The resolution was amended and read as follows:

That it is the duty of Congress to provide by law for the employment in the service of the Confederate States of America, in such situations and in such numbers as may be found absolutely necessary, the able-bodied slaves of the country, whether as pioneers, sappers and miners, cooks, nurses and teamsters.

In this form we can see no objection to the resolution.

THE CHANGING SENTIMENT OF CONGRESS.

In the Rebel House of Representatives, December 29th, Mr. DARGAN, of Alabama, introduced a bill to receive into the military service all that portion of population in Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Florida, known as "Creoles."

Mr. Dargan supported the bill in some remarks. He said the Creoles were a mixed-blooded race. Under the treaty of Paris in 1803, and the treaty of Spain in 1810, they were recognized as freemen. Many of them owned large estates, and were intelligent men. They were as much devoted to our cause as any class of men in the South, and were even anxious to go into service. They had applied to him to be received into service, and he had applied to Mr. Randolph, then Secretary of War. Mr. Randolph decided against the application, on the ground that it might furnish to the enemy a pretext of arming our slaves against us. Some time after this he was again applied to by them, and he went to the present Secretary of War, Mr. Seddon, and laid the matter before him. Mr. Seddon refused to entertain the proposition, on the ground that it did not come up before him through the military authorities. To obviate this objection, Gen. Maury, at Mobile, soon afterwards represented their wishes to the War Department. Mr. Seddon refused the offer of their services, on the ground that it would be incompatible with the position we occupied before the world; that it could not be done.

Mr. Dargan said he differed with the Secretary of War. He cared not for "the world." He cared no more for their opinions than they did for ours. He was anxious to bring into service every free man, be he who he may, willing to strike for our cause. He saw no objection to employing Creoles; they would form a potent element in our army. In his district alone a brigade of them could be raised. The crisis had been brought upon us by the enemy, and he believed the time would yet come when the question would not be the Union or no Union, but whether Southern men should be permitted to live at all. In resisting subjugation by such a barbarous foe he was for employing all our available force. He would go further and say that he was for arming and putting the slaves into the military service. He was in favor even of employing them as a military arm in the defence of the country.

NEGRO LABOR UPON FORTIFICATIONS.

The Mayor of Charleston, Charles Macbeth, summons all slaveholders within the city to furnish to the military authorities forthwith, one-fourth of all their male slaves between the ages of fifteen and fifty, to labor upon the fortifications. The penalty announced, in case of failure to comply with this requisition is a fine of $200 for every slave not forthcoming. Compensation is allowed at the rate of $400 a year.

All free male persons of color between the ages of fifteen and fifty are required to give themselves up for the same purpose. Those not complying will be imprisoned, and set to work upon the fortifications along the coast. To free negroes no other compensation than rations is allowed.

NEGROES IN THE ARMY.

The Richmond press publish the official copy of "An act to increase the efficiency of the army by the employment of free negroes and slaves in certain capacities," passed Feb. 17, by the Rebel Congress. The negroes are to perform "such duties as the Secretary of War or Commanding General may prescribe." The first section is as follows:

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That all male free negroes, and other free persons of color, not including those who are free under the treaty of Paris, of 1812, or under the treaty of Spain, of 1819, resident in the Confederate States, between the ages of eighteen and fifty years, shall be held liable to perform such duties with the army, or in connection with the military defences of the country, in the way of work upon the fortifications, or in government works for the production or preparation of materials of war, or in military hospitals, as the Secretary of War or the Commanding General of the Trans-Mississippi Department may, from time to time, prescribe; and while engaged in the performances of such duties shall receive rations and clothing and compensation at the rate of eleven dollars a month, under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may establish: Provided, That the Secretary of War or the Commanding General of the Trans-Mississippi Department, with the approval of the President, may exempt from the operations of this act such free negroes as the interests of the country may require should be exempted, or such as he may think proper to exempt on the ground of justice, equity or necessity.

The third section provides that when the Secretary of War shall be unable to procure the services of slaves in any military department, then he is authorized to impress the services of as many male slaves, not to exceed twenty thousand, as may be required, from time to time, to discharge the duties indicated in the first section of the act.

The owner of the slave is to be paid for his services; or, if he be killed or "escape to the enemy," the owner shall receive his full value.

Governor Smith, of Virginia, has made a call for five thousand male slaves to work on the batteries, to be drawn from fifty counties. The call for this force has been made by the President under a resolution of Congress.

General Magruder's proclamation to Texans, March 4, thus closes:

The slaveholding gentlemen of each county are respectfully requested to meet together at their respective county seats, or some convenient point, and appoint one or more of their number to accompany their negroes to Houston, and see that they are made comfortable. One-fourth of all the male hands between the ages of seventeen and fifty years in each county, without regard at this time to the numbers which have been previously furnished, will accomplish the purpose of fortifying Houston within a short time; and planters and all others are assured that the necessity of this course is manifest to the Major General commanding, and could be made so to them, but that his plans would thus be made known to the enemy.

By command of Maj. Gen. J. Bankhead Magruder:
EDMUND P. TURNER, A. A. Gen.
Houston, March 4, 1864.

"CONFEDERATE" LEGISLATION UPON NEGRO PRISONERS AND THEIR WHITE OFFICERS WHEN CAPTURED.*

1863, May 1—An act was approved declaring that the commissioned officers of the enemy ought not to be delivered to the authorities of the respective States, (as suggested in Davis's message;) but all captives taken by the Confederate forces ought to be dealt with and disposed of by the Confederate Government.

President Lincoln's emancipation proclamations of September 22, 1862, and January 1, 1863, were resolved to be inconsistent with the usages of war among civilized nations, and should be repressed by retaliation; and the

* December 23, 1862—Jefferson Davis issued a proclamation of outlawry against Major General B. F. Butler, the last two clauses of which are:

Third. That all negro slaves captured in arms be at once delivered over to the executive authorities of the respective States to which they belong, to be dealt with according to the laws of said States.

Fourth. That the like orders be executed in all cases with respect to all commissioned officers of the United States when found serving in company with said slaves in insurrection against the authorities of the different States of this Confederacy.

President is authorized to cause full and complete retaliation for every such violation, in such manner and to such extent as he may think proper.

Every white commissioned officer commanding negroes or mulattoes in arms against the Confederate States shall be deemed as inciting servile insurrection, and shall, if captured, be put to death, or be otherwise punished, at the discretion of the court.

Every person charged with an offence made punishable under the act shall be tried by the military court of the army or corps of troops capturing him; and, after conviction, the President may commute the punishment in such manner and on such terms as he may deem proper.

All negroes and mulattoes who shall be engaged in war or taken in arms against the Confederate States, or shall give aid or comfort to the enemies of the Confederate States, shall, when captured in the Confederate States, be delivered to the authorities of the State or States in which they shall be captured, to be dealt with according to the present or future laws of such State or States. (See Appendix.)

Unemployed Generals.

1863, December 13—Mr. FARNSWORTH offered this resolution, which was agreed to :

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform this House of the names, number, pay, and emoluments of major generals and brigadier generals of volunteers, and of the regular army, and their staffs respectively, not on duty, and the length of time which has elapsed since each of them has been relieved from duty, and which of them, and how many, are not now on duty in consequence of wounds or disability incurred in the service.

The Secretary of War replied, substantially, that twenty-five general officers—fourteen major generals and eleven brigadier generals—were entirely unemployed, and that certain officers of their personal staffs were also unemployed with them, numbering twenty-five. At the same time another list was furnished of general officers on duty who were not actually commanding or serving with troops, amounting in number to thirty-nine, making an aggregate of eighty-nine officers reported as being either unemployed altogether or not employed in the command of troops.

A similar resolution was adopted in the Senate, on motion of Mr. TRUMBULL :

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish the Senate with the names of all the major and brigadier generals who are without commands equal to a brigade, stating how long each has been without such command, and whether each has a staff; and if so, how numerous, and of what rank, and what amount of pay, including commutations and rations, each, including those of his staff, has been receiving while so without a command; and also that he inform the Senate how many major and brigadier generals are in command of departments, districts, and posts in the loyal States; and whether any necessity exists that requires that these departments, districts, and posts should be commanded by officers of such high rank, with their numerous and expensive staffs.

1864, January 18—Mr. HOLMAN offered this preamble and resolution; which were agreed to :

Whereas this House has been officially informed that a large number of officers of the army, including a number of major and brigadier generals, have been for a long period of time, relieved from active service, while still receiving the full pay pertaining to their rank; and whereas such policy, while embarrassing to the officers so relieved, is manifestly unjust to the country, and interferes with just and proper promotions in the army: Therefore,

Resolved, That, in the judgment of this House, the policy of retaining in the pay of the Government officers who have been indefinitely relieved from active service, not physically disabled by wounds, and who have not been placed on the retired list, ought to be discontinued; and that the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire what legislation, if any, is necessary to effect a remedy in the premises, and reduce the number of general officers not employed in active service, and report by bill or otherwise.

May 12—The House resumed consideration of the joint resolution providing that all major and brigadier generals, who, on the 1st of July, 1864, shall not be in the performance of duty or service corresponding to their respective grades and rank, and who shall not have been engaged in such duty or service for three months continuously next prior to that date, shall then be dropped from the rolls of the army—no officer to be included whose absence from duty shall have been occasioned by wounds received, or disease contracted in the line of his duty while in the military service or while a prisoner. This to vacate volunteer commissions only.

Mr. COX moved to add this proviso :

Provided, That when any officer comprehended in this act shall demand a board of inquiry according to the rules and regulations in such cases, and who shall be willing to serve, that such board shall be forthwith convened; and if said board shall find him competent to command in the rank to which he is entitled, he shall be at once restored to active service with full pay: And provided further, That all officers who have received the thanks of Congress during the present war shall be exempted from the provisions of this act.

Which was disagreed to—yeas 46, nays 69.

Mr. KERNAN offered a substitute providing for a board to examine into the competency, fitness, and efficiency of major and brigadier generals, as described in the joint resolution; and each officer found by the board to be incapable of properly and efficiently following his duties shall be dropped, &c.; which was disagreed to—yeas 50, nays 69.

The joint resolution was then passed—yeas 72, nays 45, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Jacob B. Blair, Boutwell, Boyd, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Denning, Driggs, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Higby, Hotchkiss, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Resolutions relating to the War.

ITS OBJECT.

First Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN HOUSE.

1861, July 13—Mr. HOLMAN asked leave to offer these resolutions :

Resolved, That the sole object of the Government in its present and future military operations, resulting from the armed resistance to its authority, is, and ought to be, to maintain the integrity of the Union, as established by the Constitution, the enforcement of the laws, and the protection of the constitutional rights of the loyal citizens of every State; and such operations ought not to be suspended until the authority of the Federal Government shall have been firmly established throughout its territorial limits.

Resolved, That the Union must be preserved, and that no adjustment of pending difficulties can ever be sanctioned by the Government that is not based on the acknowledged integrity of the Union, and the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States.

Leave was not obtained.

1861, July 15—Mr. ALLEN, of Ohio, offered the following resolutions :

Resolved, That whenever the States now in rebellion against the General Government shall cease their rebellion and become loyal to the Union, it is the duty of the Government to suspend the further prosecution of the present war.

Resolved, That it is no part of the object of the present war against the rebellious States to interfere with the institution of slavery therein.

Which were ruled out of order by the Speaker.

August 5—Mr. ALLEN moved to suspend the rules, that he might offer a similar resolution, but it was disagreed to.

1861, July 22—Mr. NOBLE, of Ohio, offered this resolution:

Resolved, That the contest now existing between the Government of the United States and the disloyal organizations now existing in certain States which are now waging an unjustifiable war upon the constitutional authority of the Government, should be treated and regarded by all loyal citizens not as a sectional war, nor an anti-slavery war, nor a war of conquest or subjugation, but simply as a war for the maintenance of the Government, the suppression of rebellion, and the preservation of all the rights of all the States full and undiminished, as they were purchased by the blood of the Revolution of 1776, and secured by all the provisions and compromises of the Federal Constitution, and for no other purpose whatever.

The resolution went over, Mr. BURNETT indicating a desire to debate it. It was not again reached.

1861, July 22—Mr. CRITTENDEN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the present deplorable civil war has been forced upon the country by the disunionists of the southern States now in revolt against the constitutional Government and in arms around the capital; that in this national emergency Congress, banishing all feeling of mere passion or resentment, will recollect only its duty to the whole country; that this war is not waged upon our part in any spirit of oppression, nor for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, nor purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of those States; but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired; that as soon as these objects are accomplished the war ought to cease.

The question being divided,

The House adopted the first clause of the resolution:

Resolved, That the present deplorable civil war has been forced upon the country by the disunionists of the southern States now in revolt against the constitutional Government, and in arms around the capital.

1861, July 31—Mr. PENDLETON, of Ohio, offered this joint resolution:

Resolved, That, under the Constitution, the rights, powers, and duties of all the States of the Union are equal; that the Union is founded in this equality; that in order to maintain the Constitution and the Union, this equality must be preserved; that every honest effort to perpetuate the Union must be made in accordance with the Constitution, and with a purpose to maintain this equality; that an attempt on the part of the Federal Government to subjugate any of the States, and hold them as territories or provinces, or to interfere with their State governments, or with their domestic institutions, or to abolish or interfere with slavery within their limits, would be an attempt to destroy this equality, and would, if successful, subvert the Constitution and the Union.

Resolved, therefore, &c. That Congress does hereby solemnly declare that hostilities against the so-called Confederate States shall be so prosecuted as to enforce obedience to the obligations of the Constitution, and the laws passed in accordance therewith; and that they shall not be so prosecuted as to reduce to a position of inferiority any of the States, or to interfere with their State governments, or to abolish slavery within their limits.

Ruled out of order by the Speaker.

Second Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

1861, December 2—Mr. ELIOT offered this joint resolution:

Resolved, &c. 1. That in behalf of the people of these States, we do again solemnly declare that the war in which we are engaged against the insurgent bodies now in arms against the Government has for its object the suppression of such rebellion and the re-establishment of the rightful the National Constitution and laws over the entire extent of our common country. 2. That while we disclaim all power under the Constitution to interfere, by ordinary legislation, with the institutions of the several States, yet the war now existing must be conducted according to the usages and rights of military service, and that during its continuance the recognized authority of the maxim that the safety of the State is the highest law, subordinates rights of property and dominates over civil relations. 3. That therefore we do hereby declare that, in our judgment, the President of the United States, as the commander-in-chief of our army, and the officers in command under him, have the right to emancipate all persons held as slaves in any military district in a state of insurrection against the National Government, and that we respectfully advise that such order of emancipation be issued whenever the same will avoid to weaken the power of the rebels in arms, or to strengthen the military power of the loyal forces.

Mr. DUNN moved that it be tabled, which was disagreed to—yeas 56, nays 70, as follows:

Mr. ROSCOE CONKLING moved to insert in the third resolution, after the word "slaves," the words, "held by rebels;" which was agreed to.

It was then postponed; and December 17th, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary—yeas 77, nays 57.

Same day, Mr. CAMPBELL offered this resolution:

Resolved, That in legislating to meet the exigencies of the present rebellion, Congress should confiscate the property, slaves included, of all rebels, and protect the property and rights, under the Constitution and laws, of all loyal citizens.

Which was postponed for the present.

Same day, Mr. STEVENS offered this preamble and resolution:

Whereas slavery has caused the present rebellion in the United States; and whereas there can be no solid and permanent peace and union in this Republic so long as that institution exists within it; and whereas slaves are now used by the rebels as an essential means of supporting and protracting the war; and whereas by the law of nations it is right to liberate the slaves of an enemy to weaken his power: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be requested to declare free, and to direct all of our generals and officers in command to order freedom to all slaves who shall leave their masters, or who shall aid in quelling this rebellion.

Sec. 2. And be it further resolved, That the United States pledge the faith of the Union to make full and fair compensation to all loyal citizens who are and shall remain active in supporting the Union for all the loss they may sustain by virtue of this act.

Which, also, was postponed for the present.

Dec. 4—Mr. HOLMAN offered the following resolution:

Whereas this House, on the 22d day of July last, by an almost unanimous vote, adopted the following resolution submitted to the House by Hon. J. J. CRITTENDEN, of Kentucky:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, That the present deplorable civil war, has been forced upon the country by the disunionists of the southern States now in revolt against the constitutional Government and in arms around the capital; that in this national emergency Congress, banishing all feelings of mere passion or resentment, will recollect only its duty to the whole country; that this war is not waged upon our part in any spirit of oppression nor for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, nor for the purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of the States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and to preserve the Union with its dignities, equality, and the rights of the several States unimpaired, and that as soon as these objects are accomplished the war ought to cease.

And whereas since that time no event has occurred to change the policy of the Government: Therefore,

Resolved, That the principles above expressed are solemnly reaffirmed by this House.

1862, March 3—Mr. HOLMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House, the unfortunate civil war into which the Government of the United States has been forced by the treasonable attempt of the southern secessionists to destroy the Union, should not be prosecuted for any other purpose than the restoration of the authority of the Constitution, and that the welfare of

IN SENATE.

1861, December 20—Mr. WILLEY introduced the following, which was not acted upon:

Resolved, That the existing war, forced upon the country by the instigators of the rebellion without justifiable cause or provocation, was, and is, designed by them to destroy the Union and the Constitution; and their purpose, moreover, was at first, and is now, to disavow and repudiate the fundamental principles of republican government on which our fathers established the Union and the Constitution.

1861, December 16—Mr. TEN Eyck offered this resolution:

Resolved, That the present war is for the Union, according to the Constitution; that its object is to save the former and enforce the latter—was so in the beginning, is now as carried on, and should be, to the last; that measures, extreme and radical, disruptive in themselves, involving in a common fate as well the loyal as disloyal, should not be resorted to; and that in crushing treason—wide-spread and hateful as it is—the Government itself cannot prove traitor to organic law.

Third Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN HOUSE.

1862, Dec. 4—Mr. STEVENS offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Union must be, and remain, one and indivisible forever.

2. That if any person in the employment of the United States, in either the legislative or executive branch, should propose to make peace, or should accept, or advise the acceptance, of any such proposition on any other basis than the integrity and entire unity of the United States and their Territories as they existed at the time of the rebellion, he will be guilty of a high crime.

3. That this Government can never accept the mediation or permit the intervention of any foreign nation, during this rebellion, in our domestic affairs.

4. That no two Governments can ever be permitted to exist within the territory now belonging to the United States, and which acknowledged their jurisdiction at the time of the insurrection.

Which were read, and postponed for the present.

Same day, Mr. WICKLIFFE offered this amendment, which, being out of order, was not entertained:

That any officer of the United States, either executive, legislative, or judicial, who is opposed to close the present war upon preserving the Constitution as it is, with all its guarantees and privileges, and the union of the States as established by said Constitution, is unworthy to hold such office, and should be dismissed or removed from the same.

1862, December 5—Mr. VALLANDIGHAM offered the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Union as it was must be restored and maintained one and indivisible forever under the Constitution as it is—the fifth article, providing for amendments, included.

2. That if any person in the civil or military service of the United States shall propose terms of peace, or accept or advise the acceptance of any such terms, on any other basis than the integrity and entirety of the Federal Union, and of the several States composing the same, and the Territories of the Union, as at the beginning of the civil war, he will be guilty of a high crime.

3. That this Government can never permit the intervention of any foreign nation in regard to the present civil war.

4. That the unhappy civil war in which we are engaged was waged in the beginning, professedly, not in any spirit of oppression or for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, or purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of those States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired, and was so understood and accepted by the people, and especially by the army and navy of the United States; and that, therefore, whoever shall pervert, or attempt to pervert, the same to a war of conquest and subjugation, or for the overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of any of the States, and to abolish slavery therein, or for the purpose of destroying or impairing the dignity, equality, or rights of any of the States, will be guilty of a flagrant breach of public faith and of a high crime against the Constitution and the Union.

5. That whoever shall propose by Federal authority to extinguish any of the States of this Union, or to declare any of them extinguished, and to establish territorial governments within the same, will be guilty of a high crime against the Constitution and the Union.

6. That whoever shall affirm that it is competent for this House or any other authority to establish a dictatorship in the United States, thereby superseding or suspending the constitutional authorities of the Union, and shall proceed to make any move toward the declaring of a dictator, will be guilty of a high crime against the Constitution and the Union and public liberty.

Which were laid upon the table—yeas 79, nays 50, as follows:

1862, December 8—Mr. WRIGHT offered the following joint resolutions:

Resolved, &c., That the rebellion, on the part of the seceding States, against the Government and laws of this Union, was deliberately wicked, and without reasonable cause; the compact of the Union being perpetual, no State has the constitutional power to forcibly secede, and that there was no grievance, real or imaginary, upon the part of the seceding States, for the redress of which the Constitution does not furnish ample remedies.

2. That the rebellion being in contravention of the Constitution and laws, it is the duty of the Government to put it down, without regard to cost, or the consequences that may befall those engaged in it, and all necessary constitutional means for this purpose, and this alone, should be furnished by the people. That inasmuch as the great and wicked crime invoked the power of the sword, the war should be prosecuted with all the vigor and strength and means of the Federal Government till rebellion be subdued, and no longer.

3. That an honorable peace is desirable; but no peace while armed opposition menaces the Capital and threatens the overthrow of the Union; nor that peace which would be established upon the dismembered fragments of a mighty and prosperous nation; and that man who would entertain peace upon these conditions is a traitor to his country, and unworthy the protection of its laws.

4. That the war was inaugurated solely for the suppression of the rebellion, and the restoration of the Union as it was; that any and all attempts to change or divert this line of policy is a fraud upon the nation, a fraud upon the memory of the gallant men who have sacrificed their lives, and a fraud upon the living soldiers who now stand up as a wall between their loved country and its wicked invaders.

5. That the value of dollars and cents does not enter into the momentous question of the maintenance of popular liberty, or the preservation of a free Government, any more than the lives and comfort of the traitors who have conspired or leagued together for their destruction.

6. That the Union restored the war should cease, and the seceding States be received back into the Union with all the privileges and immunities to which they were originally entitled.

Mr. LOVEJOY moved to table them, which was rejected—yeas 43, nays 68, as follows:

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

IN HOUSE.

1863, December 14—Mr. FINCK offered this resolution, which was laid over under the rule:

Whereas, in the opinion of this House, the Federal Government is invested by the Constitution of the United States with all necessary power and authority to suppress any resistance to the due execution of the laws thereof, and to employ the army and navy in aid of the civil authority to disperse all armed resistance to the rightful power and jurisdiction of the United States; and whereas, in the judgment of this House, the army and navy cannot be rightfully used to subjugate and hold as conquered territory any of the States of this Union: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That in this national emergency Congress will forego all feeling of mere passion or resentment, and will recollect only its duty to the country; that this war should not be waged on our part in any spirit of oppression, nor in any spirit of conquest or subjugation, or for the purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of the States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and preserve the Union, with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired; and as soon as these objects are attained the war ought to cease.

1863, Dec. 14—Mr. HOLMAN offered these resolutions:

Resolved, that the doctrine, recently announced, that the States in which an armed insurrection has existed against the Federal Government have ceased to be States of the Union, and shall be held, on the ultimate defeat of that insurrection, as Territories or subjugated provinces, and governed as such by the absolute will of Congress and the Federal Executive, or restored to the Union on conditions unknown to the Constitution of the United States, ought to be rebuked and condemned as manifestly unjust to the loyal citizens of those States, tending to prolong the war and to confirm the treasonable theory of secession, and if carried into effect must greatly endanger the public liberty and the constitutional powers and rights of all of the States, by centralizing and consolidating the powers of the government, State and national, in the Federal Executive.

2. That the only object of the war ought to be to subjugate the armed insurrection which for the time being suspends the proper relations of certain States with the Federal Government, and to re-establish the supremacy of the Constitution; and the loyal citizens of those States, and the masses of the people thereof, submitting to the authority of the Constitution, ought not to be hindered from restoring the proper relations of their respective States with the Federal Government, so far as the same is dependent on the voluntary act of the people, by any condition except unconditional submission to the Constitution and laws of the United States. In the language heretofore solemnly adopted by Congress, the war ought not to be waged on our part for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, or purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of those States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and to preserve the Union, with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired; and as soon as these objects are accomplished the war ought to cease.

3. That all necessary and proper appropriations of money ought to be promptly made by this Congress for the support of the military and naval forces of the Government, and all measures of legislation necessary to increase and promote the efficiency of the army and navy and to maintain the public credit ought to be adopted; that through a vigorous prosecution of the war, peace, on the basis of the union of the States and the supremacy of the Constitution, may be the most speedily obtained.

Which were laid upon the table—yeas 88, nays 66, as follows:

Feb. 3.—Mr. COFFROTH asked consent to offer this preamble and resolution:

Whereas this once happy and prosperous nation has been for nearly three years attempting to crush a cruel, unjust, and unrighteous rebellion; and whereas Congress did on the 22d of July, 1861, with unparalleled unanimity declare "that in this national emergency, Congress, banishing all feelings of mere passion or resentment, will recollect only its duty to the whole country; that this war is not waged on their part in any spirit of oppression, or for any purpose of conquest, or subjugation, or purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of these States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired; and that as soon as these objects are accomplished the war ought to cease;" and whereas the President of the United States did, on the 23d of September, A. D. 1862, and on the 1st of January, A. D. 1863, and on the 8th of December, A. D. 1863, issue proclamations in direct violation of this resolution; and whereas said proclamations have divided the Union people of the North, who at one time were united in their efforts to crush the rebellion: Therefore, in order to unite all the Union-loving people, and to carry out the spirit of said resolution and restore the "Union as it was" under the "Constitution as it is."

Be it resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to withdraw said proclamations, so that all the Union-loving people may again unite to maintain the supremacy of the Constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired.

1863, December 16.—Mr. JAMES S. ROLLINS offered this resolution:

Resolved, That, prompted by a just patriotism, we are in favor of an earnest and successful prosecution of the war, and that we will give a warm and hearty support to all those measures which will be most effective in speedily overcoming the rebellion and in securing a restoration of peace, and which may not substantially infringe the Constitution and tend to subvert the true theory and character of the Government; and we hereby reiterate that the present deplorable civil war has been forced upon the country by the disunionists now in revolt against the constitutional government; that in the progress of this war, Congress, banishing all feeling of mere passion or resentment, will recollect only its duty to the whole country; that this war is not waged on our part in any spirit of oppression, nor for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, nor purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of those States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired; that as soon as these objects are accomplished, the war ought to cease.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

IN SENATE.

1864, February 23.—Mr. CARLILE introduced this joint resolution, which was ordered to be printed:

Resolved, Sec. 1. That the military power of the Government can only be rightfully exerted against individuals in arms opposing its authority. That the prosecution of hostilities against the citizens of the States in rebellion ought to be for the sole purpose of maintaining the constitutional Union, and for the restoration of the Union upon the basis of the Constitution, leaving to each State the regulation of its own domestic policy, and protecting each and all in the enjoyment of the right of self-government as recognized by the Constitution of the United States.

2. That the President be requested to declare by proclamation, whenever the people of any of the States now resisting the authority of the United States shall reorganize their State government by repudiating the ordinances of secession adopted in their name and shall recognize their obligations to the Union under the Constitution, full pardon and amnesty to the people of such State, assuring the citizens thereof that all their rights of person and of property under the Constitution shall be restored to and enjoyed by them; excepting, however, from such pardon and amnesty such persons as shall be designated by the Legislatures of the several States as fit persons to be held for trial before the judicial tribunals of the United States under the laws thereof.

ITS PROSECUTION.

Special Session of Senate—1861.

1861, March 26.—Mr. BRECKINRIDGE offered this resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate recommend and advise the removal of the United States troops from the limits of the Confederate States.

Mr. CLINGMAN offered this substitute:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, it is expedient that the President should withdraw all the troops of the United States from the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, and abstain from all attempts to collect revenues in the said States.

March 27—Mr. TRUMBULL offered this resolution:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, the true way to preserve the Union is to enforce the laws of the Union; that resistance to their enforcement, whether under the name of anti-coercion or any other name, is encouragement to disunion; and that it is the duty of the President to use all the means in his power to hold and protect the public property of the United States, and enforce the laws thereof, as well in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas, as within the other States of the Union.

No vote was taken upon either of these propositions.

First Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN SENATE.

1861, July 26—The Senate passed the following resolution, offered by Mr. CLARK:

Be it resolved, &c., That we, as representatives of the people and States, respectively, do hereby declare our fixed determination to maintain the supremacy of the Government and the integrity of the Union of all these United States; and to this end, as far as we may do so, we pledge the entire resources of the Government and people, until all rebels shall submit to the one and cease their efforts to destroy the other.

The vote was—yeas 34, nays 1, as follows:

NAYS—Mr. Breckinridge—1.

IN HOUSE.

July 15—Mr. McCLENDON offered the following resolution:

Whereas a portion of the people of the United States, in violation of their constitutional obligations, have taken up arms against the National Government, and are now striving, by aggressive and iniquitous war, to overthrow it and break up the Union of these States: Therefore,

Resolved, That this House hereby pledges itself to vote for any amount of money and any number of men which may be necessary to insure a speedy and effectual suppression of such rebellion and the permanent restoration of the Federal authority everywhere within the limits and jurisdiction of the United States.

The resolution was agreed to—yeas 121, nays 5. (Burnett, Grider, Norton, Reid, and Benjamin Wood.)

July 22—Mr. VANDEVER asked consent to offer this resolution:

Resolved, That the maintenance of the Constitution, the preservation of the Union, and the enforcement of the laws, are sacred trusts which must be executed; that no disaster shall discourage us from the most ample performance of this high duty; and we pledge to the country and the world the employment of every resource, national and individual, for the suppression, overthrow, and punishment of rebels in arms.

Consent was first refused, but it was afterwards offered, and by unanimous consent, considered and agreed to.

July 22—Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, offered this resolution:

Resolved, That the reverses of the army of the United States yesterday, the 21st instant, at Bull's Run, caused by the rebel army, have in no manner impaired the ultimate success of our arms, but that the cause of human liberty, the preservation of the Union, and the maintenance of the laws pervading the hearts and affections of more than twenty millions of people, are a sure and certain guarantee that the flag of our country shall be upheld, and the Union preserved to the people; that we call on all loyal people of the Union to respond manfully to the demand of the Government in furnishing men and money, and to stand together in its support with their lives and fortunes.

The resolution was laid on the table, without a call of the yeas and nays.

Second Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN SENATE.

1862, May 26—Mr. SUMNER offered this resolution:

Resolved, That in the prosecution of the present war for the suppression of a wicked rebellion, the time has come for the Government of the United States to appeal to the loyalty of the whole people everywhere, but especially in the rebel districts, and to invite all, without distinction of color or class, to make their loyalty manifest by ceasing to fight or labor for the rebels, and also by rendering every assistance in their power to the cause of the Constitution and the Union, according to their ability, whether by arms, or labor, or information, or in any other way; and, since protection and allegiance are reciprocal duties, dependent upon each other, it is the further duty of the Government of the United States to maintain all such loyal people, without distinction of color or class, in their rights as men, according to the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

June 18—Mr. GRIMES offered this resolution:

Resolved, (as the opinion of the Senate,) That it is the right and duty of the Government to call all loyal persons within the rebellious States to its armed defence against the traitors who are seeking its overthrow.

Third Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN HOUSE.

1862, December 5—Mr. MORRILL offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That at no time since the commencement of the existing rebellion, have the forces and materials in the hands of the executive department of the Government been so ample and abundant for the speedy and triumphant termination of the war as at the present moment; and it is the duty of all loyal American citizens, regardless of minor differences of opinion, and especially the duty of every officer and soldier in the field, as well as the duty of every department of the Government—the legislative branch included—as a unit, to cordially and unitedly strike down the assassins, at once and forever, who have conspired to destroy our Constitution, our nationality, and that prosperity and freedom of which we are justly proud at home and abroad, and which we stand pledged to perpetuate forever.

Which was agreed to—yeas 105, nays 1, as follows:

NAY—Mr. William J. Allen—1.

Mr. Cox offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the word "assassins," used in the resolution this day offered by the member from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL], is intended by this House to include all men, whether from the North or the South, who have been instrumental in producing the present war, and especially those in and out of Congress who have been guilty of flagrant breaches of the Constitution, and who are not in favor of the establishment of the Union as it was and the Constitution as it is.

Which was laid upon the table—yeas 85, nays 41, as follows:

1862, December 15—Mr. CONWAY offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That freedom and slavery cannot co-exist in the same Government without producing endless strife and civil war; that "a house divided against itself cannot stand;" and that "this nation must be all free or all slave."

2. That the American Union consists of those States which are now loyal to the Federal Constitution.

3. That a restoration of the Union, as it existed prior to the rebellion, would be a greater calamity than the rebellion itself, since it would give new life to the "irrepressible conflict," and entail upon the nation another cycle of bitter contention and civil war.

4. That the seceded States can only be put down, if at all, by being regarded as out of constitutional relations with the Union, and by being assailed upon principles of ordinary warfare as between separate nations.

5. That if any person in the employment of the United States, in either the legislative or executive branches, should propose to make peace, or should accept or advise the acceptance of any such proposition on any basis which would restore the slave power to its former supremacy in the Government, or by any new compromise or amendment of the Constitution recognize slavery as an element of power, such person will be guilty of a high crime.

6. That the superior resources and military prowess of the North in the struggle are beyond dispute, and that the question of its success turns not upon its relative ability, but on the fitness of its chief Executive Magistrate to give effect to its power.

7. That it is unsafe to intrust the execution of any system of administration to persons who are not in cordial sympathy therewith, and that no change of policy in the conduct of the war is more than nominal which is not accompanied by a complete change in the personnel of the executive department.

8. That it is a matter for serious reflection whether another election for President must not supervene before the rightful authority of the nation can be established, and whether, in the mean time, it is not a flagrant waste of our energies to continue the war.

9. That unless the army of the West shall have swept through the valley of the Mississippi to its mouth, and the army of the Potomac annihilated the legions of Lee and Jackson, thus subverting the military power of the rebellion, within a reasonable time, the best interests of the country and humanity will require a cessation of hostilities.

10. That the States of the North, composing the American nation and wielding its power, must ever remain one and indivisible on the basis of freedom for all, without distinction of race, color, or condition; that their mission must ever be to extend their own civilization over the entire continent; and that whatever derangements, difficulties, checks, or defeats they may encounter, they must forever cherish and pursue the inspiring idea of nationality and continental dominion.

Which were laid upon the table—yeas 132, nay 1, as follows:

NAY—Mr. Conway—1.

1863, January 5—Mr. BLAKE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this House earnestly desires the most speedy and effectual measures taken to put down the rebellion; that any propositions for peace or cessation of hostilities at this time on any terms other than an unconditional submission of the rebels now in arms against the Government to the requirements of the Constitution and laws, would be pusillanimous and traitorous; that the members of this House do hereby give the most earnest assurances to the people of the United States that they will cheerfully co-operate with the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy in any measures he may deem proper, sanctioned by the Constitution and the laws of civilized warfare, to strengthen the military power of our gallant soldiers in the field defending the Government, and to weaken that of the enemy laboring to destroy it.

2. That the only alternative Government can or ought at this time to offer to rebels, is, submit or be conquered.

Which was considered, but no action taken thereon.

January 8—Mr. HOLMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the duty of maintaining the integrity of the Union of the States under the present form of government, with the limitations of the Constitution unimpaired, is most sacred and obligatory, and no proposition tending to destroy the Union, or violate the obligations of the Constitution, can rightfully be entertained or considered by the representatives of the people in any of the departments of the Government.

2. That the free and unrestricted navigation of the Mississippi river must be restored and maintained as the common and absolute right of the people of all of the States, and the duty to vindicate the same against every effort to impair it, is imperative, and cannot, under any circumstances, be abandoned by the Government of the United States.

The consideration of which was postponed until the 14th instant, but not again called up.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

IN HOUSE.

1864, January 7—Mr. AMOS MYERS offered the following, which were referred to the Select Committee on the Rebellious States:

Whereas, in the opinion of this House, the Federal Government is invested by the Constitution of the United States with all necessary power and authority to suppress any resistance, whether armed or unarmed, to the rightful power and jurisdiction of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That in this national emergency Congress will forego all feeling of mere passion, except that which loyalty dictates, all resentment except such as is due to treason; and that this war of national self-defence against armed rebels, insurrectionary traitors, and sympathizing abettors, should be waged on our part until such rebels and traitors are conquered into love for the Union, and made obedient to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and take the oath of allegiance to the country, and of submission to the emancipation proclamation, and the proclamation of December 8, 1863; and when those objects are accomplished, the leading rebels and chief traitors should be hung, and the war cease.

1864, January 18—Mr. GREEN CLAY SMITH offered this preamble and resolution:

Whereas a most desperate, wicked, and bloody rebellion exists within the jurisdiction of the United States, and the safety and security of personal and national liberty depend upon its utter and absolute extinction: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the political, civil, moral, and sacred duty of the people to meet it, fight it, crush it, and forever destroy it.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN moved to lay them on the table; which was disagreed to—yeas 26, nays 102.

The YEAS were:

The resolution was then agreed to—yeas 112, nays 16, as follows:

1864, Feb. 8—Mr. WM. G. BROWN offered the following resolutions, which were laid over under the rule:

Whereas our beloved country, our highly cherished institutions, Constitution, and Union of the States, are all imperilled by a causeless and wicked rebellion: Be it therefore,

Resolved, That it is the duty of every loyal citizen to give to the Government, and to the agents in its employ, both in the cabinet and in the field, all the legitimate aid and comfort in his power in their efforts to put down such rebellion.

2. That, as the rebels began the war, we will prosecute it until the last insurgent is disarmed and the authority of the United States acknowledged over every foot of ground belonging to the Republic.

3. That in the prosecution of the war we will use all the military power of the Government, but will combine with it all the means of conciliation calculated to give to the Government and country an honorable and lasting peace.

4. That it is the duty of the Government, so far as it is in its power to give equal protection to all loyal citizens without reference to their locality, whether residing within the seceded or loyal States; and one of the strong incentives to a vigorous prosecution of the war is to rescue our loyal brethren of the rebellious States from the domination of a military despotism.

1864, Feb. 8—Mr. JACOB B. BLAIR offered the following preamble and resolutions, which were laid over under the rule:

Whereas the present deplorable civil war was inaugurated and is still carried on by a few desperate but daring men who, without any cause whatever, have not only filled the land with widows and orphans and caused almost untold millions of treasure to be spent, but have put in peril the very life of that Government which never deprived them of one solitary right, but which was so mild and beneficent it was only known by the blessings it conferred. And whereas Jefferson Davis, the chief of rebels, is reported to have said in a speech delivered in Jackson, Mississippi, in December, 1862: "My only wonder is that we consented to live so long a time in association with such miscreants (referring to the people of the North) and have loved a Government rotten to the core. Were it ever to be proposed again to enter into a union with such a people I could no more consent to do it than to trust myself in a den of thieves." And whereas this same high official in the great synagogue of rebellion has repeatedly since, in his messages to the Rebel Congress, utterly repudiated the idea of ever ceasing his wicked designs and returning to his allegiance to the Government, whose Constitution and laws he has trampled under foot; and has also declared that no compromise would be entertained by him, or those he represents, that did not secure to the States in rebellion their independence and final separation from the United States. And whereas Alexander H. Stephens, the Vice President of the so-called Southern Confederacy, is reported to have said in a speech delivered in the month of July, 1863, at Charlotte, North Carolina, "As for reconstruction, such a thing was impossible; such an idea must not be tolerated for an instant. Reconstruction would not end the war, but would produce a more horrible war than that in which we are now engaged. The only terms on which we can obtain permanent peace is final and complete separation from the North. Rather than submit to anything short of that, let us all resolve to die like men worthy of freedom." And whereas John Letcher, in one of his messages to the rebel legislature of the State of Virginia, declared: "The alliance between us is dissolved, (meaning between the United States and the southern States,) never, I trust, to be renewed, at any time, under any conceivable state of circumstances." And whereas the Richmond Enquirer, one of the organs and advocates of this imaginary Southern Confederacy, in its issue of January 9, 1863, says: "Separation is inevitable. War has failed to prevent it. Peace cannot stop it. An armistice with propositions for reconstruction by constitutional amendments of conventions of States would very soon reveal the fact that separation was final; and so far as one generation can speak for its successors, it is eternal." And whereas the Richmond Dispatch of January 10, 1863, another organ of the leaders of this wanton and unprovoked rebellion, said in response to a peace and reunion speech, delivered in New York by the editor of the Express, "That we assure him that the people of the Confederate States would infinitely prefer being the vassals of France or England; nay, they would prefer to be serfs of Russia, to becoming in any manner whatever associated politically or otherwise with the Yankee States." And further, "that President Davis expressed the sentiment of the entire Confederacy in his speech the other night, (in Richmond,) when he said 'the people would sooner unite with a nation of hyenas than with the detestable Yankee nation. Anything but that. English colonization, French vassalage, Russian serfdom—all, all are preferable to any association with the Yankees.'" And whereas the Richmond Sentinel, still another advocate of this new-fledged Confederacy, in its comments on the proceedings of what is known as the Frank Pierce meeting, held at Concord, New Hampshire, on the 4th of July, 1863, says, "Do the New Hampshire Democrats suppose for one moment that we could so much as think of a reunion with such a people? Rather tell one to be wedded to a corpse; rather join hands with the fiend from the pit. The blood of many thousands of martyrs is between us. A thousand feelings of horror repel the idea of a renewal of affection." And whereas the Richmond Whig, another mouth-piece of treason and of crime, in its issue of the 10th of January, 1863, speaking of those who are opposed to breaking up the Union bequeathed to them by their fathers, says, "They are by nature menials, and fitted only for menial duties. They are in open and flagrant insurrection against their natural lords and masters, the gentlemen of the South. In the exercise of their assumed privileges they deport themselves with all the extravagant airs, the insolence, the cruelty, the cowardice and love of rapine, which have ever characterized the revolt of slaves. The former leniency of their masters only serves to aggravate the ferocity of their nature. When they are again reduced to subjection, and taught to know their place, we must take care to put such trammels about them that they will never have an opportunity to play their tricks again." It is, therefore,

Resolved, That any attempt on the part of the Government of the United States to conciliate the leaders of the present rebellion, or compromise the questions involved, would be but an attempt on the one hand to rob the gallows of its own, and on the other to humiliate and bring into utter contempt this Government in the estimation of the civilized world.

2. That every State which has ever been is still a State in the Union, and that when this rebellion shall have been put down each of the so-called seceding States will have the same rights, privileges, and immunities under the Constitution as any of the loyal States, except so far as the holding of African slaves in bondage is affected by the President's proclamation of the 1st of January, 1863, the action of Congress on the subject, or the events of the war.

3. That this House utterly repudiate the doctrine advanced by some, that the so-called seceding States have ceased to be States of and in the Union, and have become Territories thereof, or stand in the relation of foreign powers at war therewith.

1864, Feb. 29—Mr. SCHENCK offered these resolutions:

Resolved, That the present war which this Government is carrying on against armed insurrectionists and others, banded together under the name of "Southern Confederacy," was brought on by a wicked and wholly unjustifiable rebellion, and all those engaged in or aiding or encouraging it are public enemies, and should be treated as such.

2. That this rebellion shall be effectually put down; and that, to prevent the recurrence of such rebellion, in future, the causes which led to this one must be permanently removed.

3. That in this struggle which is going on for the saving of our country and free government, there is no middle ground on which any good citizen or true patriot can stand; neutrality, or indifference, or anything short of a hearty support of the Government, being a crime where the question is between loyalty and treason.

A division of the question having been called, The first resolution and the first branch of the second were agreed to. The second branch of the second resolution, "And that, to prevent the recurrence of such rebellions in future, the causes which led to this one must be permanently removed," was agreed to—yeas 124, nays none, as follows:

1864, March 14—Mr. JOHN H. RICE offered the following resolutions, which were laid over under the rule:

Whereas the vital principle of our national life emanated from and survives in the grand and Heaven-inspired declaration "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;" and whereas the Government of the United States was established and the Constitution adopted in the earnest desire and confident expectation that both would speedily and finally operate in harmony with said "declaration," and thereby secure to all native and naturalized citizens equal civil rights and privileges, regardless of all conditions of birth, race, descent, worldly possessions, or religious faith; and whereas the system of American slavery has been and is utterly subversive and destructive of the aforesaid principles, desires, and expectations, and has been the fruitful progenitor of all manner of evils—social, moral, and political—producing cruelty and oppression to the slave, demoralization and degradation to the free laborer, and brutalization and arrogance in the slave-driver and the slave-master, and has finally culminated in robbery and murder, rebellion and civil war, and has thus conclusively demonstrated that it cannot be longer tolerated with safety to the Government and peace to the Union, and that justice, sound morality, and national unity, each and all, demand its entire extinction; and whereas our people of African descent have in the present war been more unanimous in their loyalty to the Government and their devotedness to the Union than any other class, and have, at the call of Congress and the Executive, sprung to arms to protect the one and maintain the other, and have bravely and nobly vindicated their courage and their manhood upon the land and upon the water—on the battle-field and on the gun-deck; and whereas the freedmen in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in the United States have, by their obedience to the laws, their willingness to labor, their desire for improvement, and their ability to perform military service, evinced their capabilities as citizens and soldiers, and thus practically reversed and annihilated the monstrous judicial dictum and heartless party dogma that "they have no rights which white men are bound to respect;" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States should, by positive and effective legislation, and in accordance with the true theory of our republican form of government, guaranty and secure equality of civil rights and privileges to all classes of persons residing within the District of Columbia and the Territories, and whatever else the Government of the United States possesses sole and exclusive jurisdiction, who are required and made liable, under the Constitution and the laws, to contribute to the support and maintenance of the Government by taxation and military service, and in like manner to protect, secure, and defend all persons in life, liberty, and lawful pursuits, throughout the length and breadth of the Republic.

2. That American slavery, having engendered the rebellion and sustained and prolonged the war, by which uncounted thousands of the best citizens of the Republic have been made to suffer and bleed and die, and being subversive of natural right and justice, contrary to the spirit of our institutions, destructive of the best interests of society, disgraceful to our civilization, dangerous to the Republic, and accursed of God and all good men, should not be longer tolerated, but should, by force of law in the adhering States and the power of arms in the rebellious States, be forever abolished and exterminated.

3. That all statutes, legislative acts, and city ordinances, having the force of law, in the District of Columbia and the organized Territories of the United States, whereby persons of African descent residing therein are deprived of their civil rights and restrained of their just privileges, ought in justice to be repealed and declared void.

May 23—Mr. KINNEY, of Utah Territory, offered this resolution; which was adopted:

Resolved, (as the sense of this House,) That the present crisis in the history of this causeless and unjustifiable rebellion calls loudly upon Congress for united patriotic legislation; that while our gallant and self-sacrificing soldiers are, with a courage unexampled either in ancient or modern warfare, sustaining the honor of the nation in the field, they are entitled to the thanks of the country and the hearty support of Congress; and, forgetting for the present all differences upon old party issues, it is the duty of Congress to sustain the constituted authorities of the country in their efforts to suppress the rebellion.

Propositions for "Peace."

First Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN HOUSE. (See Appendix.)

1861, July 15—Mr. BENJAMIN WOOD offered this resolution:

Resolved, That this Congress recommend the Governors of the several States, to convene their Legislatures for the purpose of calling an election to select two delegates from each Congressional District, to meet in general Convention at Louisville, in Kentucky, on the first Monday in September next, the purpose of the said Convention to be to devise measures for the restoration of peace to our country.

The resolution was laid on the table—yeas 93, nays 51, as follows:

July 29—Mr. Cox asked leave to offer this resolution:

Whereas it is the part of rational beings to terminate their differences by rational methods, and inasmuch as the differences between the United States authorities and the seceded States have resulted in a civil war, characterized by bitter hostility and extreme atrocity; and although the party in the seceded States are guilty of breaking the national unity and resisting the national authority: Yet,

Be it resolved, First. That while we make undiminished and increased exertions by our navy and army to maintain the integrity and stability of this Government, the common laws of war, consisting of those maxims of humanity, moderation, and honor, which are a part of the international code, ought to be observed by both parties, and for a stronger reason than exists between two alien nations, inasmuch as the two parties have a common ancestry, history, prosperity, glory, Government, and Union, and are now unhappily engaged in lacerating their common country. Second. That, resulting from these premises, while there ought to be left open, as between two alien nations, the same means for preventing the war being carried to outrageous extremities, there ought also to be left open some means for the restoration of peace and union. Third. That to this end—the restoration of peace and union on the basis of the Constitution—there be appointed a committee of one member from each State, who shall report to this House, at its next session, such amendments to the Constitution of the United States, as shall assuage all grievances, and bring about a reconstruction of the national unity; and that for the preparation of such adjustment and the conference requisite for that purpose, there be appointed a commission of seven citizens of the United States, consisting of Edward Everett of Massachusetts, Franklin Pierce of New Hampshire, Millard Fillmore of New York, Reverdy Johnson of Maryland, Martin Van Buren of New York, Thomas Ewing of Ohio, and James Guthrie of Kentucky, who shall request from the so-called Confederate States the appointment of a similar commission, and who shall meet and confer on the subject in the city of Louisville on the first Monday of September next. And that the committee appointed from this House notify said commissioners of their appointment and function, and report their action to the next session as an amendment of the Constitution of the United States to be proposed by Congress to the States for their ratification, according to the fifth article of said Constitution.

The motion to suspend the rules and allow its introduction was lost—yeas 41, nays 85, as follows:

August 5—Mr. CALVERT offered the following resolution:

That whilst it is the duty of Congress, by appropriate legislation, to strengthen the hands of Government in its efforts to maintain the Union and enforce the supremacy of the laws, it is no less our duty to examine into the original causes of our dissensions, and to apply such remedies as are best calculated to restore peace and Union to the country: Therefore, it is

Resolved, (The Senate concurring herein,) That a joint committee, to consist of nine members of this House and four members of the Senate, be appointed to consider and report to Congress such amendments to the Constitution and laws as may be necessary to restore mutual confidence and insure a more perfect and durable Union amongst these States.

Which was laid on the table—yeas 72, nays 39, as follows:

August 5—Mr. MAY offered the following:

Whereas the Government of the United States of America was created by its written Constitution, and derived its first powers alone from the consent of the people, as contained in that instrument, and it has no other powers, and force and arms can neither preserve nor rightfully be permitted to violate it under any authority whatsoever: and whereas Washington and other great sages and patriots, who founded our General Government, solemnly warning their countrymen, predicted its destruction from the establishment of a sectional political party; and they also entreated a spirit of compromise whenever necessary to preserve the Union; and whereas a civil war now exists among the States which have been united, and which, having already prostrated the peace, prosperity, and happiness of the people, and destroyed many valuable citizens, now threatens their destruction in countless numbers, and by its inevitable tendency, if not necessity, the final overthrow of free constitutional government: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the success of the Republican party, founded, as it is, on a sectional, social, and political question, is justly responsible for the origin of our present national misfortunes.

2. That the uncompromising spirit hitherto manifested by the representatives of that party has prevented a peaceful compromise and adjustment of our unhappy difficulties when the same was practicable.

3. That if the present war continues, the only safety and refuge of constitutional government and civil liberty will be found in the constitutions and sovereignty of the several States, and afterwards, through them, the only hope of a future and more harmonious reconstruction of the Union.

4. That it is impossible by arms to subjugate the people of the seceded States, united as they are in such numbers, so fully prepared and resolved, and actuated by motives which represent the just pride and dignity of equals, of trained freemen, of American citizens; and also believing, as they do to a man, that State, home, wife, children, property, all and every security and benefit of Government is at stake, and that the most cruel and merciless means, forced by the necessities of an exhausting and desolating war, are to be employed against them.

5. That in view of all these public calamities, and to avoid them, recognizing the necessities which control human affairs, as our fathers of the revolution did, it becomes the duty of Congress, before it closes its present session, to provide for the appointment of commissioners to procure an armistice between the contending armies, and restore peace at all events; and who shall be empowered to arrange a compromise to preserve the Union, if possible; but if not, then a peaceful separation of the respective States of the Union, as well such as now claim to have seceded, as others which may by the sovereign will of their citizens also hereafter ordain to secede; and that the said commissioners be solemnly enjoined so to conduct their negotiations as to obtain, if possible, in the future, a happy, harmonious, and perpetual reconstruction of our Union of States.

Mr. MAY moved to suspend the rules so as to consider it at once; which was lost—yeas and nays not ordered.

Second Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress. IN SENATE.

1861, December 4—Mr. SAULSBURY offered this joint resolution:

Whereas the people of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee are in revolt against the constitutional Government and authority of the United States, and have assumed to secede from the Federal Union, and to form an independent government under the name of the Confederate States of America: and whereas the Congress of the United States approving the sentiment expressed by the President, in his annual message, "that the Union must be preserved, and hence all indispensable means must be employed," and believing that kind and fraternal feeling between the people of all the States is indispensable to the maintenance of a happy and prosperous Union, and being willing to manifest such feeling on their part, to the end that peace may be restored to a distracted country, and the Union and Constitution be preserved and maintained, and inviting the co-operation of the people of the aforesaid States in the accomplishment of objects so beneficial to each and all, do resolve as follows:

Resolved, &c., That Millard Fillmore, Franklin Pierce, Roger B. Taney, Edward Everett, George M. Dallas, Thomas Ewing, Horace Binney, Reverdy Johnson, John J. Crittenden, George E. Pugh, and Richard W. Thompson be, and they are hereby, appointed commissioners on the part of Congress, to confer with a like number of commissioners, to be appointed by the States aforesaid, for the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the Constitution, and that they report the result of their said conference to Congress for approval or rejection.

2. That upon the appointment of commissioners, as hereby invited, by said States, and upon the meeting of the joint commission for the purpose of conferences aforesaid, active hostilities shall cease, and be suspended, and shall not be renewed unless said commission shall be unable to agree, or in case of an agreement by them, said agreement shall be rejected either by Congress or by the aforesaid States.

It was laid on the table.

Third Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress. IN SENATE.

1862, December 3—Mr. DAVIS offered the following joint resolution:

Resolved, &c., That it be, and is hereby, recommended to all the States to choose as many delegates, severally, as they are entitled to Senators and Representatives in Congress, to meet in convention in Louisville, Kentucky, on the first Monday in April next, to take into consideration the condition of the United States, and the proper means for the restoration of the Union; and that the Legislatures of the several States take such action on this proposition as they may deem fit at the earliest practicable day.

Which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

IN HOUSE.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this House does earnestly desire that the most speedy and effectual measures be taken for restoring peace in America; and that no time may be lost in proposing an immediate cessation of hostilities, in order to the speedy final settlement of the unhappy controversies which brought about this unnecessary and injurious civil war, by just and adequate security against the return of the like calamities in times to come; and this House desires to offer the most earnest assurances to the country that they will, in due time, cheerfully co-operate with the Executive and the States for the restoration of the Union, by such explicit and most solemn amendments and provisions of the Constitution as may be found necessary for securing the rights of the several States and sections within the Union under the Constitution.

The resolution giving rise to debate, was laid over.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND HON. FERNANDO WOOD.

MR. WOOD TO PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

NEW YORK, December 8, 1862.

HON. ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States:

DEAR SIR: On the 25th of November last I was advised by an authority, which I deemed likely to be well informed as well as reliable and truthful, that the Southern States would send Representatives to the next Congress, provided that a full and general amnesty should permit them to do so. No guarantee or terms were asked for other than the amnesty referred to. Deeming this information of great value, if well founded, I communicated it in substance to the Hon. George Opdyke, the mayor of this city, whom I knew to hold confidential relations to members of your Administration, and proposing, through him, that if the Government would permit the correspondence, under its own inspection, I would undertake to procure something definite and positive from persons connected with the so-called Confederate authorities. Mr. Opdyke stated in reply that several Senators from New England States were then in this city on their way to Washington, to whom he would at once communicate the proposition, and advise me of the answer. Knowing that these gentlemen were your friends, and supposing that they would immediately confer with you on their arrival at the capital, and supposing that I should be speedily informed of the result, I have delayed until now making a communication direct to you.

I now learn, however, from Mr. Opdyke this day, that he failed to see these Senators when in New York, and that he had not made the proposition, and that therefore you are not in possession of it as coming from myself.

As an humble but loyal citizen, deeply impressed with the great necessity of restoring the Union of these States, I ask your immediate attention to this subject. The magnitude of the interests at stake warrant some executive action predicated upon this information, if it be only to ascertain if it be grounded upon even probable foundation. If it shall prove groundless no harm shall have been done, provided the inquiry be made, as it can be, without compromising the Government or injury to the cause in which it is now engaged. If, however, it shall prove well founded, there is no estimate too high to place upon its national value.

Now, therefore, Mr. President, I suggest that gentlemen whose former political and social relations with the leaders of the Southern revolt may be allowed to hold unofficial correspondence with them on this subject—the correspondence to be submitted to you. It may be thus ascertained what, if any, credence may be given to these statements, and also whether a peaceful solution of the present struggle may not be attainable. I am sure nothing that I can say can add to your own well known desire to produce this result. Your exalted position, the embarrassments and responsibilities which surround you upon all sides, the bleeding condition of the country, becoming exhausted, not only in the impoverishment of its best life blood, of its industrial production, but in the deterioration and consequent destruction of our political institutions—all call upon you, as our chief ruler, to take one step upon the road of peaceful effort, by which to ascertain whether the time has not arrived when other methods than brute fighting may not accomplish what military force has failed to do.

In the origin of this struggle, you foresaw, that such a time would come. Your inaugural address delivered near two years ago, pointed with prophetic vision the certain results of the impending conflict of arms. Your language then was, "Suppose you go to war, you cannot fight always, and when, after much loss on both sides, and no gain on either, you cease fighting, the identical questions as to terms of intercourse are again upon you." You saw that after a bloody and terrible struggle "the still small voice of reason" would intervene and settle the controversy. You knew that since the establishment of Christian civilization negotiation and compromise have, sooner or later, determined every military conquest. It cannot be otherwise here. It is not the time arrived when, to quote your own language, we should "cease fighting," at least long enough to ascertain whether "the identical questions" about which we began the fight may not be amicably and honorably adjusted, and the "terms of intercourse" be once more peaceably established? It is to this end that I now address you—with confidence in your patriotism, and with no desire to interfere with your legitimate constitutional prerogatives.

I am, with high respect, yours very truly,

FERNANDO WOOD.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN TO MR. WOOD.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

WASHINGTON, December 12, 1862.

HON. FERNANDO WOOD:

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 8th, with the accompanying note of same date, was received yesterday.

The most important paragraph in the letter, as I consider, is in these words: "On the 16th of November last I was advised by an authority which I deemed likely to be well informed as well as reliable and truthful, that the Southern States would send representatives to the next Congress, provided that a full and general amnesty should permit them to do so. No guarantee or terms were asked for other than the amnesty referred to."

I strongly suspect your information will prove to be groundless: nevertheless, I thank you for communicating it to me. Understanding the phrase in the paragraph above quoted—"the Southern States would send representatives to the next Congress"—to be substantially the same as that "the people of the Southern States would cease resistance, and would inaugurate, submit to, and maintain the national authority within the limits of such States, under the Constitution of the United States," I say that in such case the war would cease on the part of the United States; and that if within a reasonable time "a full and general amnesty" were necessary to such end, it would not be withheld.

I do not think it would be proper now to communicate this, formally or informally, to the people of the Southern States. My belief is that they already know it; and when they choose, if ever, they can communicate with me unequivocally. Nor do I think it proper now to suspend military operations to try any experiment of negotiation.

I should nevertheless receive, with great pleasure, the exact information you now have, and also such other as you may in any way obtain. Such information might be more valuable before the 1st of January than afterward.

While there is nothing in this letter which I shall dread to see in history, it is, perhaps, better for the present that its existence should not become public. I therefore have to request that you will regard it as confidential.

Your obedient servant,

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

MR. WOOD TO PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

NEW YORK, December 17, 1862.

HIS EXCELLENCY ABRAHAM LINCOLN:

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 12th instant was handed to me on the afternoon of the 15th instant by Mr. Wakeman, the postmaster of this city.

Pardon me, Mr. President, when I say that your reply has filled me with profound regret. It inclines what I had conceived to be an innocent effort to ascertain the foundation for information in my possession of a desire in the South to return to the Union. It thus appears to be an indication on your part to continue a policy which, in my judgment, is not only unwise, but, in the opinion of many, is in conflict with the constitutional authority vested in the Federal Government.

I think, however, that my proposition is in keeping with your own expressed conditions upon which the war shall cease. You say that "when the people of the southern States would cease resistance, and would inaugurate, submit to, and maintain the national authority within the limits of such States under the Constitution of the United States, that in such case the war would cease on the part of the United States."

Admitting this position as correct, you will see that as a condition precedent to such submission the opportunity to do so must be afforded. It cannot be expected that the southern people will cease resistance, so long as we proclaim our intention to destroy their local institutions, their property, and their lives, and accompany the declaration with corresponding legislative, executive, social, and political action. They cannot cease resistance, and inaugurate, submit to, and maintain the Federal authority, if we will not let them alone long enough to do so. If they really desire acquiescence, and are willing to send delegates to the next Congress, as I am advised, how can they do so without the opportunity, and without some intimations or guarantees as to the reception of their representatives at Washington? The act of sending representatives to Congress is within itself a full compliance with your own conditions. If thus represented by their own selected agents, chosen under the forms and in pursuance of their own local State laws governing such elections, they will compose an integral portion of the Government, and thus give the assurance of an "acquiescence and submission" of the very highest and most satisfactory character.

My respectful suggestion was that you should put it in their power to take this course. It would require a simple proclamation of general amnesty, to be qualified, if you please, by such conditions as to render it void in case of non-compliance within a limited period. You have established a precedent for this mode of speaking to those people. Your Emancipation Proclamation told of punishment. Let another be issued, speaking the language of mercy and breathing the spirit of conciliation.

The painful events which have occurred since my communication of the 8th instant but embolden me to renew its suggestions. I hope you will now no longer refuse "to suspend military operations to try an experiment of negotiation." I feel that military operations so bloody and exhausting as ours must sooner or later be suspended. The day of suspension must come. The only question is, whether it shall be before the whole American people, North and South, shall be involved in general ruin, or whether it shall be whilst there is remaining sufficient of the recuperative element of life by which to restore our once happy, prosperous, and peaceful American Union.

In compliance with your request that your letter shall not for the present become public, I shall withhold its publication at this time.

With high regard, yours, &c.,

FERNANDO WOOD.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

IN SENATE.

1864, June 9—Mr. DAVIS, of Kentucky, sought to introduce this joint resolution, but objection was made:

A joint resolution to restore peace among the people of the United States.

Resolved, &c., That three years of civil war in which the enormous expenditure of blood and treasure has no parallel in the world's history, and whose wide-spread rapine and diabolical cruelties have shocked Christendom, and which, from alternating success, has produced no essential results, prove that war was not the proper remedy for our national troubles.

2. That if the people of America would save and restore their shattered Constitution and avert from themselves and their posterity the slavery of a military despotism and of a public debt, the interest upon which all the avails of their labor and economy will never meet, they must bring this war to a speedy close.

3. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to propose a cessation of arms and an amnesty to the authorities of the Confederate States of America, with a view to a convention of the people of all the States to reconstruct their Union; and if that cannot be effected, then that said convention agree upon the terms of a separation of the States without the further effusion of blood, and of a lasting peace among them.

IN HOUSE.

1863, Dec. 14—Mr. FERNANDO WOOD offered this resolution:

Whereas the President, in his message delivered to this House on the 9th instant, and in his recommendation to the people to assemble at their places of worship and give thanks to God for recent victories, claims that the Union cause has gained important and substantial advantages; and whereas, in view of these triumphs, it is no longer beneath our dignity nor dangerous to our safety to evince a generous magnanimity becoming a great and powerful people, by offering to the insurgents an opportunity to return to the Union without imposing upon them degrading or destructive conditions: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to appoint three commissioners, who shall be empowered to open negotiations with the authorities at Richmond, to the end that this bloody, destructive, and inhuman war shall cease, and the Union be restored upon terms of equity, fraternity, and equality, under the Constitution.

Mr. ELLIHU B. WASHBURNE moved that the resolution lie on the table, which was agreed to—yeas 98, nays 59, as follows :

Dec. 17—Mr. GREEN CLAY SMITH offered these resolutions :

1. Resolved, That as our country, and the very existence of the best government ever instituted by man, are imperilled by the most causeless and wicked rebellion that the world has seen, and believing, as we do, that the only hope of saving this country and preserving this Government is by the power of the sword, we are for the most vigorous prosecution of the war until the Constitution and laws shall be enforced and obeyed in all parts of the United States; and to that end we oppose any armistice, or intervention, or mediation, or proposition for peace from any quarter, so long as there shall be found a rebel in arms against the Government; and we ignore all party names, lines, and issues, and recognize but two parties in this war—patriots and traitors.

2. That we hold it to be the duty of Congress to pass all necessary bills to supply men and money, and the duty of the people to render every aid in their power to the constituted authorities of the Government in the crushing out of the rebellion, and in bringing the leaders thereof to condign punishment.

3. That our thanks are tendered to our soldiers in the field for their gallantry in defending and upholding the flag of the Union, and defending the great principles dear to every American patriot.

A division of the question having been called, and the question being on the first resolution :

Mr. ANCONA moved that it be laid on the table; which was disagreed to—yeas 60, nays 100, as follows :

NAY—Mr. Benjamin G. Harris—1.

The third resolution was agreed to—yeas 163, nays 1, (Mr. B. G. Harris.)

On this vote, Messrs. James C. Allen, Wm. J. Allen, Ancona, Eden, Harrington, Knapp, Long, Longyear, McDowell, Pendleton, Robinson, Stiles, Voorhees, Webster, Chilton A. White and Fernando Wood—16, who are not recorded before, voted aye; and Mr. Hooper, who is recorded before, did not vote.

1864, Jan. 7—Mr. JOHN D. BALDWIN offered this preamble and resolution :

Whereas the organized treason having its headquarters at Richmond exists in defiant violation of the national Constitution and has no claim to be treated otherwise than as an outlaw; and whereas this Richmond combination of conspirators and traitors can have no rightful authority over the people of any portion of the national Union, and no warrant for assuming control of the political destiny of the people of any State or section of this Union, and no apology but that of conspiracy and treason for any assumption of authority whatever: Therefore,

Resolved, That any proposition to negotiate with the rebel leaders at Richmond (sometimes called "the authorities at Richmond") for a restoration of loyalty and order in those portions of the Republic which have been disorganized by the rebellion is, in effect, a proposition to recognize the ringleaders of the rebellion as entitled to represent and bind the loyal citizens of the United States whom they oppress, and to give countenance and support to the pretensions of conspiracy and treason; and therefore every such proposition should be rejected without hesitation and delay.

Mr. Cox moved to lay the resolution on the table, which was disagreed to; and it was then passed—yeas 88, nays 24, as follows:

The preamble was then agreed to—yeas 102, nays none, as follows:

Resolved, That as our country and the existence of the old Union are imperilled by a rebellion against the wisest and best government ever devised by man, we are for the most united, determined, and vigorous prosecution of the war for the purpose of enforcing the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof in all parts of the United States; but at the same time we are for adding to force the power of conciliation and compromise so far as is consistent with an honorable and lasting peace, and founded solely upon a restoration of the Union under the Constitution, and in no event to agree to or countenance a dissolution of the Union; and that we believe the appointment of commissioners upon the part of the Federal Government, to meet commissioners similarly appointed by the insurgent States, to convene in some suitable place for the purpose of considering whether any, and if any, what plan may be adopted consistent with the honor and dignity of the nation, and based upon a restoration of the whole Union, by which the present war may be brought to a close, and the lives, limbs, and health of the gallant officers and soldiers of the Union preserved, and the liberties of the people maintained, is not inconsistent with the honor and dignity of the Federal Government, but, as an indication of the spirit which animates the adhering States, would, in any event, tend to strengthen us in the opinion of other nations and the loyal people of the insurgent States; and hoping, as we sincerely do, that the people of the southern States would reciprocate the peaceful indications thus evinced, and believing, as we do, that under the blessings of God great benefits would arise from such conference, we most earnestly recommend such conference to the consideration of the President and Senate of the United States, and request their co-operation therein, and hope that the President will appoint commissioners for that purpose.

2. That the people of the several States now in rebellion against the Government of the United States, whenever they shall desire to return to the Union and obey the Constitution of the United States, and laws made in pursuance thereof, have a right under and by virtue of the said Constitution to reorganize their respective State governments with all their domestic institutions as they were before the war, and to elect representatives to the Congress of the United States, and to be represented in the Union with all the rights of the people of the several States, and without any conditions precedent except that of being liable to be punished according to the Constitution and laws made in pursuance thereof, as their laws and acts of secession are unconstitutional and void.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS they were laid upon the table—yeas 78, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Jacob B. Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, William G. Jan. 18—Mr. DAWSON, of Pennsylvania, offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas a great civil war like that which now afflicts the United States is the most grievous of all national calamities, producing as it does, spoliation, bloodshed, anarchy, public debt, official corruption, and private immorality, the American Government cannot rightfully wage such a war upon any portion of its people, except for the sole purpose of vindicating the Constitution and laws and restoring both to their just supremacy; and whereas this House, on the 22d day of July, 1861, speaking in the name of the American people and in the face of the world, solemnly and truly declared that it was waged for no purpose of conquest or oppression, but solely to restore the Union, with all the rights of the people and the State unimpaired; and whereas in every war, especially in every war of invasion, and most particularly if it be a civil war between portions of the same country, the object of it ought to be clearly defined and the terms distinctly stated upon which hostilities will cease; and the advancing armies of the Government should carry the Constitution in one hand, while they hold the sword in the other, so that the invaded party may have its choice between the two: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to make known by public proclamation or otherwise, to all the country, that whenever any State now in insurrection shall submit herself to the authority of the Federal Government, as defined in the Constitution, all hostilities against her shall cease, and such State shall be protected from all external interference with the local laws and institutions, and her people shall be guaranteed in the full enjoyment of all those rights which the Federal Constitution gave them.

Mr. STEVENS moved that they be laid upon the table, which was agreed to—yeas 79, nays 56, as follows:

February 29—Mr. Long, of Ohio, offered this preamble and resolution :

Whereas history teaches that there never has been a civil war that was not settled in the end by compromise, and inasmuch as no possible harm can result either to the character or dignity of the United States from an honest effort to stop the effusion of fraternal blood, and restore the Union by the return of the States in rebellion to their allegiance under the Constitution; and whereas the President, with a full knowledge of the lessons taught by history in relation to all civil wars, in his inaugural address said, "suppose you go to war, you cannot fight always; and when, after much loss on both sides, and no gain on either, you cease fighting, the identical old questions as to terms of intercourse are again upon you;" and whereas we now have an armistice, decreed by the Almighty, and executed for the past two months by the snows and ice of winter, thereby affording time and opportunity for reflection upon the past three years of horrible, relentless, and destructive civil war with all its calamities, and a prospective view of increased horrors in the approaching conflicts; and whereas a preamble and resolutions were, on the 7th of February, instant, introduced in the House of Representatives of the Confederate Congress at Richmond denying the statement of the President of the United States "that no propositions for peace had been made to the United States by the Confederate States," and affirming that such propositions were prevented from being made by the President of the United States, in that he had refused to hear, or even to receive, two commissioners appointed to treat expressly for peace: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, most earnestly, but respectfully, requested to appoint Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire; Millard Fillmore, of New York; Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, and such other persons as the President may see proper to select, as commissioners on behalf of the United States, who shall be empowered to meet a commission of like number when appointed for the same object on behalf of the Confederate States, at such time and place as may be agreed upon, for the purpose of ascertaining, before the renewal of hostilities shall have again commenced, whether the war shall not now cease, and the Union be restored by the return of all the States to the allegiance and their rights under the Constitution.

May 30—Mr. LAZEAR asked consent to offer this resolution :

Whereas the fratricidal war which has for the last three years filled every neighborhood of our once united and happy country with mourning, and has drenched a hundred battlefields with the blood of our fellow-citizens, and laid waste many of the fairest portions of the land, and yet has failed to restore the authority of the Federal Government in the seceded States; and whereas we believe a misapprehension exists in the minds of a large portion of the people of the South as to the feelings which actuate a large portion of the people of the free States, and which misapprehension we are called upon by every consideration of humanity and a sense of justice to correct and if possible remove, whether we regard in making this effort what we owe to ourselves, to our fellow-countrymen of the South, or to the world: Therefore,

Resolved, That no truly loyal citizen of the United States desires the application of any rule or law in determining the rights and privileges and the measure of responsibility of the people of any of the States but such as shall have been determined by the Supreme Court to be in accordance with and sanctioned by the Constitution and well-established usages of the country.

2. That the President, in his capacity of Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, be, and he is hereby, required to adopt such measures as he may think best, with a view to a suspension of hostilities between the armies of the North and the South for a period not exceeding — days; and that he be also authorized to adopt or agree upon some plan by which the decision of the great body of the people North and South may be secured upon the question of calling a convention composed of delegates from all the States, to which shall be referred the settlement of all questions now dividing the southern States from the rest of the Union, with a view to the restoration of the several States to the places they were intended to occupy in the Union, and the privileges intended to be granted to them by the framers of our national Constitution, who were in our opinion the most enlightened statesmen and purest patriots that ever lived, and than whom we cannot hope to find wiser or better counsellors in the present exigency in our national affairs.

Objection was made.

June 30—Pending the consideration of the Enrollment Bill, the following amendment was offered by Mr. LE BLOND, of Ohio :

Provided, That no levy of troops shall be made under the provisions of this act, except by volunteering, till such time as the President of the United States shall have made a request for an armistice; and shall have made such efforts as are consistent with honor to restore harmony among the States, by the appointment of commissioners empowered to negotiate for peace upon the terms of a restoration of the Union under the Constitution, and until such offer shall have been rejected by the so-called Confederate government.

THE LATE PEACE NEGOTIATION AT NIAGARA FALLS.

The following correspondence explains itself:

[Private and confidential.]

CLIFTON HOUSE, NIAGARA FALLS,
CANADA WEST, July 12, 1864.

DEAR SIR: I am authorized to say that the Hon. Clement C. Clay, of Alabama, Prof. James P. Holcombe, of Virginia, and George N. Sanders, of Dixie, are ready and willing to go at once to Washington, upon complete and unqualified protection being given either by the President or Secretary of War. Let the permission include the three names and one other. Very respectfully,

GEORGE N. SANDERS.

To the Hon. HORACE GREELEY.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., July 17, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: I am informed that you are duly accredited from Richmond as the bearer of propositions looking to the establishment of peace; that you desire to visit Washington in the fulfillment of your mission, and that you further desire that Mr. George N. Sanders shall accompany you. If my information be thus far substantially correct, I am authorized by the President of the United States to tender you his safe conduct on the journey proposed, and to accompany you at the earliest time that will be agreeable to you.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, yours,

HORACE GREELEY.

MESSRS. CLEMENT C. CLAY, JACOB THOMPSON, JAMES P. HOLCOMBE, Clifton House, C. W.

CLIFTON HOUSE, NIAGARA FALLS,
July 18, 1864.

SIR: We have the honor to acknowledge your favor of the 17th instant, which would have been answered on yesterday but for the absence of Mr. Clay.

The safe conduct of the President of the United States has been tendered us, we regret to state, under some misapprehension of facts. We have not been accredited to him from Richmond as the bearers of propositions looking to the establishment of peace.

We are, however, in the confidential employment of our Government, and are entirely familiar with its wishes and opinions on that subject; and we feel authorized to declare that, if the circumstances disclosed in this correspondence were communicated to Richmond we would be at once invested with the authority to which your letter refers, or other gentlemen clothed with full powers would be immediately sent to Washington with the view of hastening a consummation so much to be desired, and terminating at the earliest possible moment the calamities of the war.

We respectfully solicit through your intervention a safe conduct to Washington, and thence by any route which may be designated through your lines to Richmond. We would be gratified if Mr. George N. Sanders was embraced in this privilege.

Permit us in conclusion to acknowledge our obligations to you for the interest you have manifested in the furtherance of our wishes, and to express the hope that, in any event, you will afford us the opportunity of tendering them in person before you leave the Falls.

We remain, very respectfully, &c.,

C. C. CLAY, JR.,
J. P. HOLCOMBE.

P. S. It is proper to add that Mr. Thompson is not here, and has not been staying with us since our sojourn in Canada.

INTERNATIONAL HOTEL,
NIAGARA, N. Y., July 18, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of this date by the hand of Mr. W. C. Jewett. The state of facts therein presented being materially different from that which was understood to exist by the President when he entrusted me with the safe conduct required, it seems to me on every account advisable that I should communicate with him by telegraph and solicit fresh instructions, which I shall at once proceed to do. I hope to be able to transmit the result this afternoon; and, at all events, I shall do so at the earliest moment.

Yours, truly,
HORACE GREELEY.
MESSRS. CLEMENT C. CLAY and JAMES P. HOLCOMBE,

We are, very respectfully, &c.

C. C. CLAY, Jr.
JAMES P. HOLCOMBE.

INTERNATIONAL HOTEL,

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., July 19, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: At a late hour last evening (too late for communication with you) I received a dispatch informing me that further instructions left Washington last evening, which must reach me, if there be no interruption, at noon to-morrow. Should you decide to await their arrival, I feel confident that they will enable me to answer definitely your note of yesterday morning. Regretting a delay which I am sure you will regard as unavoidable on my part,

I remain, yours, truly,

CLIFTON HOUSE, NIAGARA FALLS, C. W.,
July 19, 1864.

SIR: Colonel Jewett has just handed us your note of this date, in which you state that further instructions from Washington will reach you by noon to-morrow, if there be no interruption. One, or possibly both of us, will be obliged to leave the Falls to-day, but will return in time to receive the communication which you promise to-morrow.

We remain, truly yours, &c.,

JAMES P. HOLCOMBE,
C. C. CLAY, Jr.

The Hon. HORACE GREELEY,
Now at the International Hotel.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, July 18, 1864.

To whom it may concern:

Any proposition which embraces the restoration of peace, the integrity of the whole Union, and the abandonment of slavery, and which comes by and with an authority that can control the armies now at war against the United States, will be received and considered by the Executive Government of the United States, and will be met by liberal terms on other substantial and collateral points, and the bearer or bearers thereof shall have safe conduct both ways.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

INTERNATIONAL HOTEL, Wednesday.

Major Hay would respectfully inquire whether Professor Holcombe and the gentlemen associated with him desire to send to Washington by Major Hay any messages in reference to the communication delivered to him on yesterday, and in that case when he may expect to be favored with such messages.

Mr. Holcombe presents his compliments to Major Hay, and greatly regrets if his return to Washington has been delayed by any expectation of an answer to the communication which Mr. Holcombe received from him on yesterday, to be delivered to the President of the United States. That communication was accepted as the response to a letter of Messrs. Clay and Holcombe to the Hon. H. Greeley, and to that gentleman an answer has been transmitted.

CLIFTON HOUSE, NIAGARA FALLS, July 21.

[Copy of original letter held by me to deliver to the Hon. Horace Greeley, and which duplicate I now furnish the Associated Press.]
WM. CORNELL JEWETT.]

NIAGARA FALLS, CLIFTON HOUSE, July 21, 1864.

To the Hon. HORACE GREELEY.

SIR: The paper handed to Mr. Holcombe, on yesterday, in your presence, by Major Hay, A. A. G., as an answer to the application in our note of the 18th instant, is couched in the following terms:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, July 18, 1864.

"To whom it may concern:

"Any proposition which embraces the restoration of peace, the integrity of the whole Union, and the abandonment of slavery, which comes by and with an authority that can control the armies now at war against the United States, will be received and considered by the Executive Government of the United States, and will be met by liberal terms, on other substantial and collateral points, and the bearer or bearers thereof shall have safe conduct both ways.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN."

The application to which we refer was elicited by your letter of the 17th instant, in which you inform Mr. Jacob Thompson and ourselves that you were authorized by the President of the United States to tender us his safe conduct, on the hypothesis that we were "duly accredited from Richmond as bearers of propositions looking to the establishment of peace," and desire a visit to Washington in the fulfillment of this mission. This assertion, to which we then gave, and still do, entire credence, was accepted by us as the evidence of an unexpected but most gratifying change in the policy of the President—a change which we felt authorized to hope might terminate in the conclusion of a peace mutually just, honorable, and advantageous to the North and to the South, exacting no condition but that we should be "duly accredited from Richmond as bearers of propositions looking to the establishment of peace."

Thus proffering a basis for conference as comprehensive as we could desire, it seemed to us that the President opened a door which had previously been closed against the Confederate States for a full interchange of sentiment, free discussion of conflicting opinions, and untrammelled effort to remove all causes of controversy by liberal negotiations. We indeed could not claim the benefit of a safe-conduct which had been extended to us in a character we had no right to assume and had never affected to possess; but the uniform declarations of our Executive and Congress, and their thrice-repeated and as often repulsed attempts to open negotiations, furnish a sufficient pledge to us that this conciliatory manifestation on the part of the President of the United States would be met by them in a temper of equal magnanimity. We had, therefore, no hesitation in declaring that if this correspondence was communicated to the President of the Confederate States, he would promptly embrace the opportunity presented for seeking a peaceful solution of this unhappy strife.

We feel confident that you must share our profound regret that the spirit which dictated the first step toward peace had not continued to animate the councils of your President. Had the representatives of the two Governments met to consider this question, the most momentous ever submitted to human statesmanship, in a temper of becoming moderation and equity, follow, as their deliberations would have been, by the prayers and benedictions of every patriot and Christian on the habitable globe, who is there so bold as to pronounce that the frightful waste of individual happiness and public prosperity which is daily saddening the universal heart might not have been terminated, or if the desolation and carnage of war must still be endured through weary years of blood and suffering, that there might not at least have been infused into its conduct something more of the spirit which softens and partially redeems its brutalities?

Instead of the safe conduct which we solicited, and which your first letter gave us every reason to suppose would be extended for the purpose of initiating a negotiation in which neither Government would compromise its rights or its dignity, a document has been presented which provokes as much indignation as surprise. It bears no feature of resemblance to that which was originally offered, and is unlike any paper which ever before emanated from the constitutional executive of a free people. Addressed "to whom it may concern," it precludes negotiation, and prescribes in advance the terms and conditions of peace. It returns to the original policy of "no bargaining, no negotiations, no truce with rebels except to bury their dead, until every man shall have laid down his arms, submitted to the Government, and sued for mercy."

Whatever may be the explanation of this sudden and entire change in the views of the President, of this rude withdrawal of a courteous overture for negotiation at the moment it was likely to be accepted, of this emphatic recall of words of peace just uttered, and fresh blasts of war to the bitter end, we leave for the speculation of those who have the means or inclination to penetrate the mysteries of his Cabinet or fathom the caprice of his imperial will. It is enough for us to say that we have no use whatever for the paper which has been placed in our hands.

We could not transmit it to the President of the Confederate States without offering him an indignity, dishonoring ourselves, and incurring the well-merited scorn of our countrymen. While an ardent desire for peace pervades the people of the Confederate States, we rejoice to believe that there are few, if any, among them who would purchase it at the expense of liberty, honor, and self-respect. If it can be secured only by their submission to terms of conquest, the generation is yet unborn which will witness its restitution.

If there be any military autocrat in the North who is entitled to proffer the conditions of this manifesto, there is none in the South authorized to entertain them. Those who control our armies are the servants of the people—not their masters; and they have no more inclination than they have the right to subvert the social institutions of the sovereign States, to overthrow their established constitutions, and to barter away their priceless heritage of self-government.

This correspondence will not, however, we trust, prove wholly barren of good result. If there is any citizen of the Confederate States who has clung to a hope that peace was possible with this administration of the Federal Government it will strip from his eyes the last film of such delusion; or if there be any whose hearts have grown faint under the suffering and agony of this bloody struggle, it will inspire them with fresh energy to endure and brave whatever may yet be requisite to preserve to themselves and their children all that gives dignity and value to life or hope and consolation to death. And if there be any patriots or Christians in your land who shrink appalled from the illimitable vista of private misery and public calamity which stretches before them, we pray that in their bosoms a resolution may be quickened to recall the abused authority and vindicate the outraged civilization of the country. For the solicitude you have manifested to inaugurate a movement which contemplates results the most noble and humane, we return our sincere thanks, and are, most respectfully and truly, your obedient servants,

C. C. CLAY, Jr.
JAMES P. HOLCOMBE.

CLIFTON HOUSE, NIAGARA FALLS,
WEDNESDAY, July 20, 1864.

COL. W. C. JEWETT, Cataract House, Niagara Falls:

SIR: We are in receipt of your note, admonishing us of the departure of the Hon. Horace Greeley from the Falls; that he regrets the sad termination of the initiatory steps taken for peace, in consequence of the change made by the President in his instructions to convey commissioners to Washington for negotiations unconditionally, and that Mr. Greeley will be pleased to receive any answer we may have to make through you.

We avail ourselves of this offer to enclose a letter to Mr. Greeley, which you will oblige us by delivering. We cannot take leave of you without expressing our thanks for your courtesy and kind offices as the intermediary through whom our correspondence with Mr. Greeley has been conducted, and assuring you that we are, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

C. C. CLAY, Jr.
JAMES P. HOLCOMBE.

MR. GREELEY TO MR. JEWETT.

NIAGARA FALLS, (N. Y.) July 20, 1864.

DEAR SIR: In leaving the Falls, I feel bound to state that I have had no intercourse with the Confederate gentlemen at the Clifton House but such as I was fully authorized to hold by the President of the United States, and that I have done nothing in the premises but in fulfillment of his injunctions. The notes, therefore, which you have kindly interchanged between those gentlemen and myself can in no case subject you to the imputation of unauthorized dealing with public enemies.

Yours,
W. C. JEWETT, Esq.

MR. JEWETT TO MR. CLAY AND OTHERS.

NIAGARA FALLS, July 20, 1864.

HON. C. C. CLAY, HON. JACOB THOMPSON, HON. GEO. N. SANDERS, HON. BEVERLY TECKER, and the other Hon. Representatives of the Southern Confederacy.

GENTLEMEN: I am directed by Mr. Greeley to acknowledge the receipt of the following telegram from Mr. Clay:

"ST. CATHERINE'S, July 20, 1864.

"To GEO. N. SANDERS:
"Will be with you at five o'clock. Detain Greeley until I see him."
C. C. CLAY."

And to state that, in view of his mission being ended, through the rejection of the terms of negotiation in the letter of the President of the United States, delivered to you by Major Hay, he does not feel himself authorized to take any further steps in the matter. He regrets the sad termination of the steps taken for peace, from the change made by the President in his instructions given him to convey commissioners to Washington for negotiations unconditionally. He will be pleased to receive any answer you may have to make in writing through me or any mode you may desire.

I enclose you a copy of a note from Mr. Greeley addressed to me justifying the intercourse I have had with you during this short negotiation for peace.

In conclusion, I tender to you my heartfelt thanks for the kind and generous manner in which you have received me personally, and for the noble and magnanimous sentiments you have advanced in a desire to end the bloody conflict between the two sections. I can only regret that Government should not have seen the policy, duty, and justice of meeting your generous offer to meet in conference unconditionally—terms of a peace to depend upon circumstances transpiring during negotiations. My effort shall be as ever unceasing for peace that shall secure the section you represent that justice that shall meet with the approval of the civilized world, of the coming International Congress proposed by the wise and noble Napoleon.

Very truly,
WM. CORNELL JEWETT.

MAJOR HAY TO MR. HOLCOMBE.

INTERNATIONAL HOTEL, July 21, 1864.

Major Hay has just received Mr. Holcombe's note of this date, and thanking him for his prompt response, will start at once for Washington. Both Mr. Greeley and Major Hay understood Mr. Holcombe to say, yesterday, that he would send to Major Hay any communication he might wish to transmit to-day, and on that supposition Mr. Greeley set out for New York yesterday, and Major Hay remained. It is a matter of no special importance. Major Hay only wishes to explain his note of to-day.

The telegraphic stories concerning peace conferences at Niagara Falls have a slender foundation in fact, but most of the details are very wide of the truth. The Editor of this paper has taken part in and been privy to no further or other negotiations than were fully authorized, and more than authorized; but these related solely to bringing the antagonists face to face in amicable rather than belligerent attitude, with a view to the initiation of an earnest effort for peace, to be prosecuted at Washington. The movement has had no immediate success.

Of course all reports that the writer has been engaged in proposing, or receiving, or discussing hypothetical terms or basis of peace, whether with accredited agents of the Richmond authorities or others, are utterly mistaken. He has never had the slightest authorization to do anything of the sort; and he is quite aware of these provisions of law which relate to volunteer negotiators with public enemies. Those provisions he heartily approves, and is nowise inclined to violate.

More than this he does not at yet feel at liberty to state, though he soon may be. All that he can now add is his general inference that the pacification of our country is neither so difficult nor so distant as seems to be generally supposed.

Rebel Views of "Peace." 1862.

In September, 1862, these proceedings are published as having taken place in the Rebel Congress:

In the House of Representatives Mr. FOOTE, of Tennessee, offered the following joint resolution proposing to send a commissioner to Washington, empowered to propose terms of just and honorable peace:

Be it enacted by the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That the signal success with which Divine Providence has so continually blessed our arms for several months past would fully justify the Confederate Government in dispatching a commissioner or commissioners to the Government at Washington city, empowered to propose the terms of a just and honorable peace.

Mr. HOLT, of Georgia, asked the consent of the House to offer the following substitute for the resolution:

The people of the Confederate States are, and have been from the beginning, anxious that the war with the United States should be conducted with the sense established by the rule of civilized and Christian nations, and have, on their part, so conducted it, and the said people ardently desire that said war should cease and peace be restored, and have so announced from the beginning: Therefore,

Resolved, That, whenever the United States Government shall manifest a like anxiety and a like desire, it shall be the duty of the President of the Confederate States to appoint — commissioners to treat and negotiate with the said United States Government upon said subjects, or either of them.

On motion of Mr. KENAN, of Georgia, the resolution and substitute were laid upon the table—yeas 59, nays 26.

In January, Mr. CROCKETT, of Kentucky, introduced into the House a resolution with reference to the conditions on which peace should be negotiated; which was debated.

Mr. FOOTE, of Tennessee,* also introduced

* The Atlanta (Georgia) Intelligencer of the 20th of January has the following:

"The resolution introduced by Mr. Foote in Congress bearing upon a reconstruction of our Government with the Northwestern States, we desire now solemnly to protest against, and we trust that they will be tabled by the Con-these, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

The people of the Confederate States of America having, in the progress of the pending war, most clearly demonstrated their ability to maintain by arms the claim to separate independence, which they have heretofore asserted before the world, and being inflexibly resolved never to relinquish the struggle in which they are engaged until the great object for which they are contending shall have been finally accomplished; in view of the fact that a great political reaction in opposition to the bloody and unnatural war now in course of prosecution, has displayed itself in several of the most populous and influential States of what was once honorably known as "The United States of America;" and, in view of the additional fact that, even among the avowed opponents of despotism, and the recognized friends of peace in the North, a grave and deplorable misapprehension has of late arisen in regard to the true condition of public sentiment in the South touching the question of reconstructing that political Union once existing under the protection of what is known as the Federal Constitution. Now, in order that no further misunderstanding of the kind referred to may hereafter prevail, and in order that the unchangeable determination of our Government and people, in reference to the terms upon which alone they would bring the sanguinary struggle to a close, may be made known, the Congress of the Confederate States of America do resolve as follows:

1. There is no plan of reconstructing what was formerly known as the Federal Union to which the people of the Confederate States will ever consent. Wrongs too grievous and multiplied have been committed upon us and upon our most cherished rights by a united North, since this unprovoked and most wicked war commenced; a majority of the people of the northern States have too evidently shown themselves to be utterly incapable of self-government and unmindful of all the fundamental principles upon which alone republican institutions can be maintained. They have too long submitted patiently to the iron rule of the basest and most degraded despotism that the world has yet known; for too long a period of time they have openly and unblushingly sympathized with the lawless and ferocious miscreants who have been sent into the bosom of the unoffending South to spill the precious blood of our most valued citizens; to pollute and desecrate all that we hold in especial veneration; to rob us of our property; to expel us from our homes and wantonly to devastate our country, to allow even of the possibility of our ever again consenting to hold the least political connection with those who have so cruelly outraged our sensibilities and so profoundly dishonored themselves, and in association with whom we feel that we could not expect that freedom which we love, that self-respect which we are determined ever to cultivate, and the esteem and sympathy of civilized and Christian nations.

2. While the Confederate States of America are not at all responsible for the existing war, and have been at all times ready to participate in such arrangements as would be best suited to bring it to a close, in a manner consistent with their own safety and honor, they could not yield their consent to an armistice of a single day or hour, so long as the incendiary proclamation of the atrocious monster, now bearing rule in Washington city, shall remain unrevoked; nor could the government of said Confederate States agree to negotiate at all in regard to a suspension of hostilities, except upon the basis of a formal and unconditional recognition of their independence.

3. Whenever the friends of peace in the North shall grow strong enough to constrain Abraham Lincoln and his flagitious Cabinet to withdraw said proclamation, and propose an armistice upon the basis aforesaid, the Government of the Confederate States will be ready to accede to said proposition of armistice with a view to the settlement of all existing difficulties.

4. Should peace be at any time brought about, the Confederate States of America would freely consent to the formation of a just and mutually advantageous commercial federate Congress, whenever they are taken up to be considered. We are fighting this war for Southern independence and for a Government of Southern States, recognizing African slavery as an institution ordained of God, beneficial to mankind, a necessity in our social and political relations as States, and in our intercourse with all other nations or States. Hence the admission of any free State into our Union is not only repugnant to us, but it will be only a continuance of that evil which has brought on the war, and which to get rid of we are now fighting. If the Northwestern States should shake off the North and East, and set up for themselves a new Government, and desire to be at peace with the South, no barrier will be placed in their way by our Government, and we shall be willing to treat with them as an independent Government—in peace, as friends; in war, as foes."

treaty with all the States now constituting the United States, except New England, with whose people, and in whose ignoble love of gold and brutifying fanaticism this disgraceful war has mainly originated; in consideration of which fact the people of the Confederate States of America are firmly and deliberately resolved to have no intercourse whatever hereafter, either direct or indirect, political, commercial, or social, under any circumstances which could be possibly imagined to exist, with said States of New England, or the people therein resident.

5. The Government of the Confederate States, in consideration of the change in public sentiment which has occurred in several of the Northern States, wherein political elections have been recently held—sympathizing most kindly with those by whose manly exertions that change has been brought about—would be willing to conclude a just and honorable peace with any one or more of said States who, renouncing all political connection with New England, may be found willing to stipulate for desisting at once from the further prosecution of the war against the South, and in such case the Government of the Confederate States would be willing to enter into a league, offensive and defensive, with the States thus desisting, of a permanent and enduring character.

6. The Government of the Confederate States is now willing, as it has heretofore repeatedly avowed itself to be, whenever the States bordering upon the Mississippi river, or any of them, shall have declared their inclination to withdraw from the further prosecution of the war upon the South, (which, could it be successful, would only have the effect of destroying their own best market,) to guaranty to them in the most effectual and satisfactory manner the peaceful and uninterrupted navigation of the said Mississippi river and its tributaries, and to open to them at once the markets of the South, greatly enhanced in value to them as they would be by the permanent exclusion of all articles of New England growth or manufacture.

7. The course of practical neutrality in regard to the pending war heretofore pursued by the States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains has afforded the highest gratification to the people of the Confederate States of America; and it is hoped that the day is not far distant when said States and Territories, consulting their own obvious safety and future welfare, will withdraw from all political connection with a Government which has heretofore been a source of continual oppression to them; and when said States and Territories, asserting their separate independence, shall appropriate to themselves the manifold advantages sure to result from such a movement, among which may be reckoned: 1st. Relief from grievous and exhausting tariff regulations, now being rigidly enforced. 2d. Relief from all the discredit resulting inevitably from the prosecution of the present unjust and unauthorized war. 3d. Relief from the pressure of a despotism the most heartless and atrocious ever yet established. 4th. Relief from the crushing weight of taxation unavoidably growing out of the war. 5th. The exclusive use and enjoyment of all the rich mineral lands stretching along the slope of the Pacific. 6th. Free trade with all the nations of the earth, and a future maritime growth and power that has no parallel; and lastly, a monopoly of the trade of the Pacific ocean.

8. Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested, if he shall approve these resolutions, to cause them to be promulgated and transmitted to the States of the North by such means as he shall deem most judicious; and that he accompany them, if he think it advisable, with such an address or proclamation, expository of the matters embodied therein, as he shall judge most suitable and proper.

Jan. 21.—Mr. Foote remarked in relation to proposed retaliation by Mr. Clopton:

He (Mr. Foote) did not certainly intend to call into question the motives or acts of the President in reference to this matter; but the gentleman from Virginia must be aware that the judiciaries of most of the States were most familiar with their own laws on the subject under consideration, and knew what would be most satisfactory to their own people better than the Confederate Government could possibly know. But one point he desired especially to notice. It could not be apparent to every one how these measures of retaliation would result—the amount of bloodshed and terrible atrocities to which it would lead. Therefore he desired that a messenger or messengers should be sent to the Northern Government, to propose terms of honorable peace—to let them know what was to be expected by a continuance of the war under present auspices. This would give heart to that great Peace party which is now springing up at the North and daily increasing in strength, especially in the Northwestern States, where the people are already clamorous for peace. And if the Lincoln Government still persisted in their atrocious course, our action would show the world that upon that Government rested all the future responsibility. It would show that if they persisted in this demoniacal and hellish warfare, we are not to blame. He was sure, however, that these political uprisings in the States of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, were of no little moment, and the results would presently appear.

In September, certain "peace resolutions" were introduced into the Senate of Virginia, which proposed in substance that three commissioners should be appointed by each of the Confederate States, to repair to each of the States remaining in the old Union, and make known to the Governors of each of them that the Confederate States demand that they will, by the ballot-box, consent that the Confederate States be allowed thenceforth to be separated from them in peace.

These resolutions were discussed at some length, and then indefinitely postponed by a unanimous vote. When they were first offered and read—

Mr. ARMSTRONG moved that the rules be suspended for the purpose of acting on the resolutions forthwith.

Mr. COLLIER appealed to the Senate to allow the resolutions to lay on the table, in order that Senators might have full time to reflect on their importance.

Mr. SEDDON was unwilling to allow the silent sanction of the Senate to endorse for an hour these resolutions. He was in favor of disposing of them without delay.

The rules were then suspended.

Mr. NASH moved the indefinite postponement of the resolutions. He regretted painfully to see such resolutions offered. He objected to them to calo. He was as much opposed to sending commissioners to Gov. Morgan, or any other northern Governor, as to Mr. Lincoln. In their views and public policy they were all alike.

Mr. COLLIER thought the action of the Senate was hasty and inconsiderate. The scheme he proposed never had been attempted. There was no clause in the Constitution that provided for a peaceful dissolution of the Union. A sort of dread filled the public mind in regard to propositions of peace, because they might do harm. If there was any expression in the preamble or resolutions which inculcates the idea that we are to desist from the struggle till the independence of this Confederacy was achieved he would like to know it. He was willing to fight on, to fight on till we should obtain our independence; but while fighting with one hand he would hold out the olive-branch of peace with the other. He hoped, if the resolutions were to be buried, they would be allowed the decent respect shown to all corpses, of remaining twenty-four hours before interment.

The roll was called, and the vote stood—ayes 33, noes 1, (Mr. Collier.) So the preamble and resolutions were indefinitely postponed.

In the Legislature of Georgia, the same subject was considered, on which the Savannah Republican remarked:

We hope the Georgia Legislature will let this question alone, and turn their attention to war. The peace talk is designed to help the Northern Democrats, but it is a great mistake. It helps Lincoln, as we shall see to our sorrow.

In the Legislature of North Carolina,* some

* March 4, 1864, Wm. W. Holden issued this card:

To the People of North Carolina: In compliance with the wishes of many friends, I announce myself a candidate for the office of Governor of North Carolina, at the election to be held on the first Tuesday in August next.

My principles and views, as a conservative, "after the strictest sect," are well known to the people of the State. These principles and views are what they have been. They will not be changed.

I am not disposed, at a time like this, to invite the people from their employments, and add to the excitement which prevails in the public mind by haranguing them for their votes. We need all our energies to meet the common enemy, and to provide means of subsistence for our troops in the field and the people at home. Let the people go calmly and firmly to the polls and vote for the man of their choice. I will cheerfully abide their decision, whatever it may be.

If elected I will do everything in my power to promote the interests, the honor, and the glory of North Carolina, and to secure an honorable peace.

resolutions were submitted, which are thus described by a Richmond paper :

They assert the right of the people to meet and consult for the good of the country; denounce mob violence and military aggression upon the freedom of the press; pledge the State to a firm maintenance of the decisions of its legal tribunals, and applaud Gov. Vance for his manly defence of the State judiciary. They further compliment the army for its gallantry and heroism, and urge a faithful discharge of duty in vigorously prosecuting the war for national independence. They further declare that formal negotiations for peace, on the basis of separation from the United States, should be instituted by the treaty-making power, and urge our Representatives in Congress to exert themselves to bring about such negotiations. They further recommend proposals from the Confederate authorities to the Federal Congress looking to the holding of a peace convention for the adjustment of difficulties, whose action shall be subject to the ratification of the people.

TERMS OF PEACE INDICATED BY THE RICHMOND ENQUIRER.

[From the Richmond Enquirer, Oct. 16.]

Notwithstanding the cheering rumors of an early recognition by France, notwithstanding the fact that the Cabinet at Washington has been considering "proposals for peace"—proposals of its own, for it has none of ours to consider—notwithstanding the White Flag that was seen in the heavens by a respectable woman, and the march of aerial troops northwards, witnessed by a man of good character, in the clouds—in spite of all this, there is not the slightest prospect of speedy peace visible to us. There will be no peace until the military power of the Yankee nation is entirely broken, and its people so thoroughly sickened of the war that we can exact our own terms.

Save on our own terms, we can accept no peace whatever, and must fight till doomsday rather than yield an iota of them; and our terms are:

Recognition by the enemy of the independence of the Confederate States.

Withdrawal of Yankee forces from every foot of Confederate ground, including Kentucky and Missouri.

Withdrawal of Yankee soldiers from Maryland until that State shall decide, by a free vote, whether she shall remain in the old Union or ask admission into the Confederacy.

Consent, on the part of the Federal Government to give up to the Confederacy its proportion of the navy as it stood at the time of secession, or to pay for the same.

Yielding up of all pretension, on the part of the Federal Government, to that portion of the old Territories which lies west of the Confederate States.

An equitable settlement—on the basis of our absolute independence and equal rights—of all accounts of the public debts and public lands, and of the advantages accruing from foreign treaties.

These provisions, we apprehend, comprise the minimum of what we must require before we lay down our arms. That is to say, the North must yield all; we nothing. The whole pretension of that country to prevent by force the separation of the States must be abandoned, which will be an equivalent to an avowal that our enemies were wrong from the first; and, of course, as they waged a causeless and wicked war upon us, they ought, in strict justice, to be required, according to usages in such cases, to reimburse us the whole of our expenses and losses in the course of that war.

Whether this last proviso is to be insisted upon or not, certain we are that we cannot have any peace at all until we shall be in a position, not only to demand and exact, but also to enforce and collect, the treasure for our own reimbursement out of the wealthy cities in the enemy's country. In other words, unless we can destroy or scatter their armies and break up their Government, we can have no peace; and if we can do that, then we can, and ought not only to extort from them our own full terms, and ample acknowledgment of their wrong, but also a handsome indemnity for the trouble and expense caused to us by their crime.

Now, we are not yet in a position to dictate those terms to our enemies, who Rosecrans's army still in the heart of our country, and Meade still on Virginia soil; but though it is too soon to propose such conditions to them, yet it is important that we should keep them plainly before our own eyes as the only admissible basis of any conceivable peace. This well fixed in the Confederate mind, there will be no more fearful looking for of news from Europe, as if that blessed peace were to come to us over the sea, and not to be conquered on our own ground; no more gaping for hints of recognition, "filling the belly with the east wind;" no more distraction or diversion from the single momentous business of bracing up every nerve and sinew of the country for battle.

It is especially now, at a moment when great and perhaps decisive battles are impending at two or three points, that we think it most essential to insist upon the grand entire magnificence of the stake and of the cause. Once more we say, it is all or nothing. This Confederacy or the Yankee nation, one or the other, goes down, down to perdition; that is to say, one or the other must forfeit its national existence, and lie at the mercy of its mortal enemy. We all know by this time the fate in store for us if we succumb. The other party has no smaller stake. As surely as we completely ruin their armies—and without that is no peace nor truce at all—so surely shall we make them pay our war debt, though we wring it out of their hearts. And they know it well; and therefore they cannot make peace except through utter exhaustion and absolute inability to strike another blow.

The stake they have to forfeit, then, if they lose this dreadful game, is as vital as ours. So is the stake to be won if they win anything. It is no less than entire possession of our whole country, with us in it, and everything that is ours, from the Ohio to the Rio Grande, to have and to hold to them and their heirs forever. But, on the other hand, what we mean to win is utter separation from them for all time. We do not want to govern their country; but after levying upon it what seemeth good to us, by way of indemnity, we leave it to commence its political life again from the beginning, hoping that the lesson may have made them sadder and wiser Yankees. We shut them out forever, with all their unclean and scoundrelly ways, intending to lead our lives here in our own Confederate way within our own well-guarded bounds; and without, as St. John says, "without are dogs."

And let no Confederate of feeble knees and tremulous backbone say to us, this complete triumph is impossible; say that we must be content with some kind of compromise, and give and take. On the contrary, we must gain all or lose all; and that the Confederates will indeed win the giant game, we take to be as certain as any future event in this uncertain world. Meade's army and Rosecrans's once scattered, Lincoln can get no more armies. The draft turns out manifestly fruitless. Both the German and the Irish elements are now for peace! The Yankees have to bear the brunt of the war themselves; but, in the mean time, their inevitable bankruptcy is advancing like an armed man; "hungry ruin has them in the wind." It cannot be long before the Cabinet at Washington will have indeed to consider seriously "proposals of peace," under auspices and circumstances very different from the present.

For the present the war rolls and thunders on—and may God defend the right!

[From the Richmond Examiner, February 8.]

The following extraordinary resolutions were yesterday introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. Wright, of Georgia. The House went into secret session before taking any action upon them:

Whereas the President of the United States, in a late public communication, did declare that no propositions for peace had yet been made to that Government by the Confederate States, when, in truth, such propositions were prevented from being made by the President of the United States, in that he refused to hear, or to receive, two commissioners appointed to treat expressly of the preservation of amicable relations between the two Governments.

Nevertheless that the Confederate States may stand justified in the sight of the conservative men of the North of all parties, and that the world may know which of the two Governments it is that urges on a war unparalleled for the fierceness of the conflict, and intensifying into a sectional hatred unsurpassed in the annals of mankind: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Confederate States invite the United States, through their Government at Washington, to meet them by Representatives equal to their Representatives and Senators in their respective Congress, at —, on the — day of — next, to consider,

First. Whether they cannot agree upon the recognition of the Confederate States of America.

Second. In the event of such recognition, whether they cannot agree upon the formation of a new government, founded upon the equality and sovereignty of the States; but if this cannot be done, to consider—

Third. Whether they cannot agree upon treaties, offensive, defensive, and commercial.

Resolved, In the event of the passage of these resolutions, the President be requested to communicate the same to the Government at Washington in such manner as he shall deem most in accordance with the usages of nations; and in the event of their acceptance by that Government, he do issue his proclamation of election of delegates, under such regulations as he may deem expedient.

In the House of Representatives, May 23, Mr. J. T. LEACH, of North Carolina, submitted the following preamble and resolutions, which were read by the clerk, creating quite a sensation on the floor, among the privileged seats, and in the galleries:

Whereas, The unconstitutional enactment of laws by the Congress of the United States, upon subjects of vital importance to the harmony and independence of the States, the happiness and prosperity of the people, the preservation and perpetuation of the Union, against the demands of justice, the appeals and admonitions of her best and wisest statesmen, made it our painful duty to fall back upon the rights for which the colonies maintained the war of the Revolution, and which our forefathers asserted and maintained to be clear and inalienable:

Resolved, by the Congress of the Confederate States, That the delegates from each State, acting in sovereign and independent character, for the purpose of adding moral to our physical force, and placing ourselves properly before the civilized world, do most earnestly appeal to the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint commissioners whose duty it shall be to propose an armistice of ninety days to the proper authorities of the Federal Government, preliminary to negotiation upon State sovereignty and independence; and the said commissioners shall report in writing to the President the answer received from the Federal Government upon the subject.

Resolved, That should the peace-making power of the Federal Government accede to the proposition for an armistice of ninety days, the President be requested to convene the Congress of the Confederate States for the purpose of appointing commissioners, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and that he be also requested to notify the executive of the several States of the fact, and ask their co-operation by appointing commissioners, either by the Legislature or by convention, to co-operate with the commissioners appointed by the President, and to negotiate with the commissioners appointed by the Federal Government upon such terms of peace as will be consistent with the honor, dignity, and independence of the States, and compatible with the safety of our social and political rights.

Resolved, That in maintaining the rights guaranteed to us by the blood and treasure of our revolutionary fathers, and dear at all times to freemen, we desire to be let alone. We take no man's property; we fight not for conquest, but for our rights, the independence of the States, our equality, our civil and religious liberties.

Resolved, That such terms of peace as agreed to by the commissioners ought to be endorsed by the President and Senate, and submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection.

Mr. FOOTE, of Tennessee, moved the reference of the preamble and resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. McMULLEN inquired whether the subject of the resolutions was not a proper one for the secret session.

Mr. LEACH said he desired it to be discussed in open session.

Mr. CONRAD rose to a point of order. A rule was adopted at the last session, which is still force, requiring that all such resolutions be received and discussed in secret session.

The SPEAKER said that such a rule had been adopted, but it had special reference to the last session.

Mr. LEACH insisted that the importance of the question involved in the resolutions should commend them to the gravest considerations of the body. They were not his views only, but the views of his constituents, and a good portion of the people of North Carolina.

Mr. A. H. GARIAND, of Arkansas, hoped the gentleman would not proceed until the Chair had settled the point of order that had been raised.

Mr. FOOTE renewed his motion to refer the resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. McMULLEN moved to lay the resolutions upon the table.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, rose to a point of order. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Leach] had the floor, and he had not yielded it. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMullen] was usurping the floor.

Mr. FOOTE didn't want to cut off any remarks the gentleman from North Carolina might have to make in support of his resolutions.

Mr. LEACH said the presentment of the resolutions was a duty he owed to himself and his constituents. If the House didn't like the resolutions, it can dispose of them in any manner that it sees proper. All he asked was a full and impartial hearing; that accorded him and his resolutions, he would be satisfied.

Mr. McMULLEN withdrew his motion, and Mr. HEISKELL, of Tennessee, renewed his—the call for the yeas and noes upon laying the resolutions upon the table.

The yeas and noes were taken and the resolutions tabled. After a short interval, Mr. CONRAD, of Louisiana, rose to a personal explanation. He had read over the peace resolutions submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Leach.] and he found that they look to separate State action in the prosecution of peace. Taking that view of them, he could not give them his countenance or support. He asked leave to change his vote on the motion to lay them upon the table. He had voted "aye;" he would now vote "no."

Mr. J. T. LEACH said he held in his hand the address of the last Congress to the people of the Confederate States. The principles there enunciated were embodied almost wholly in these resolutions.

Mr. SWAN, of Tennessee, asked and obtained leave to change his vote on the motion to lay the resolutions on the table.

Mr. READ, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were disposed of, so that all the members might exercise their discretion in voting.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, was for treating the resolutions of the gentleman from North Carolina with becoming respect. They did not represent his own views more than the views of his congressional district. He thinks they are proper and right, and so think his constituents.

The debate soon began to be somewhat stormy and personal, and, after much wrangling, the resolutions were tabled by 62 yeas to 22 nays.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN JEFF. DAVIS AND GOV. VANCE, OF NORTH CAROLINA.

[From the Petersburg Express, May 24.]

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
RALEIGH, December 30, 1863.

His Excellency President Davis:

MY DEAR SIR: After a careful consideration of all the sources of discontent in North Carolina, I have concluded that it will be impossible to remove it, except by making some effort at negotiation with the enemy.

The recent action of the Federal House of Representatives, though meaning very little, has greatly excited the public hope that the northern mind is looking toward peace. I am promised by all men who advocate this course that if fair terms are rejected it will tend greatly to strengthen and intensify the war feeling, and will rally all classes to a more cordial support of the Government.

And although our position is well known as demanding only to be let alone, yet it seems to me that for the sake of humanity, without having any weak or improper motives attributed to us, we might, with propriety, constantly tender negotiations. In doing so we would keep conspicuously before the world a disclaimer of our responsibility for the great slaughter of our race, and convince the humblest of our citizens—who sometimes forget the actual situation—that the Government is tender of their lives and happiness, and would not prolong their sufferings unnecessarily one moment.

Though statesmen might regard this as useless, the people will not, and I think our cause will be strengthened thereby. I have not suggested the method of these negotiations or their terms. The effort to obtain peace is the principal matter.

Allow me to beg your earnest consideration of this engagement.

Very respectfully yours,

Z. B. VANCE.

DAVIS'S REPLY.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
RICHMOND, January 8, 1864.

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter of the 30th ult., containing suggestions of the measures to be adopted for the purpose of removing "the sources of discontent" in North Carolina. The contents of the letter are substantially the same as those of the letter addressed by you to Senator Dortch, extracts of which were by him read to me.

I remarked to Mr. Dortch that you were probably not aware of the obstacles to the course you indicated, and, without expressing an opinion on the merits of the proposed policy, desired him in answering your letter to write for suggestions as to the method of opening negotiations, and as to the terms which you thought should be offered to the enemy.

I felt persuaded you would appreciate the difficulties as soon as your attention was called to the necessity of considering the subject in detail. As you have made no suggestions touching the manner of overcoming the obstacles, I infer that you were not apprised by Mr. Dortch of my remarks to him.

Apart from insuperable objections to the line of policy you propose (and to which I will presently advert) I cannot see how the more material obstacles are to be surmounted. We have made three distinct efforts to communicate with the authorities at Washington, and have been invariably unsuccessful. Commissioners were sent before hostilities were begun, and the Washington Government refused to receive them or hear what they had to say.

A second time I sent a military officer, with a communication addressed by myself to President Lincoln. The letter was received by General Scott, who did not permit the officer to see Mr. Lincoln; but promised that an answer would be sent. No answer has ever been received. The third time, a few months ago, a gentleman was sent, whose position, character, and reputation were such as to insure his reception, if the enemy were not determined to receive no proposals whatever from the Government. Vice President Stephens made a patriotic tender of his services in the hope of being able to promote the cause of humanity, and although little belief was entertained of his success, I cheerfully yielded to his suggestion, that the experiment should be tried.

The enemy refused to let him pass through their lines, or to hold any conference with them. He was stopped before he ever reached Fortress Monroe on his way to Washington.* To attempt again in the face of these repeated rejections of all conference with us, to send commissioners or agents to propose peace, is to invite insult and contumely, and to subject ourselves to indignity without the slightest chance of being listened to.

No true citizen, no man who has our cause at heart, can desire this; and the good people of North Carolina would be the last to approve of such an attempt, if aware of all the facts. So far from removing sources of discontent, such a course would receive, as it would merit, the condemnation of those true patriots who have given their blood and their treasure to maintain the freedom, equality, and independence which descended to them from the immortal heroes of King's Mountain and other battle-fields of the Revolution. If, then, these proposals cannot be made through envoys, because the enemy would not receive them, how is it possible to communicate our desire for peace otherwise than by the public announcements contained in almost every message I ever sent to Congress?

I cannot recall at this time one instance in which I have failed to announce that our only desire was peace, and the only terms which formed a sine qua non, were precisely those that you suggested, namely "a demand only to be let alone." But suppose it were practicable to obtain a conference through commissioners with the Government of President Lincoln, is it at this moment that we are to consider it desirable or even at all admissible?

Have we not just been apprised by that despot that we can only expect his gracious pardon by emancipating all our slaves, swearing allegiance and obedience to him and his proclamation, and becoming, in point of fact, the slaves of our own negroes? Can there be in North Carolina one citizen so fallen beneath the dignity of his ancestors as to accept, or to enter conference on the basis of these terms?

That there are a few traitors in the State who would be willing to betray their fellow-citizens to such a degraded condition, in hope of being rewarded for treachery by an escape from the common doom, may be true. But I do not believe that the vilest wretch would accept such terms for himself. I cannot conceive how the people of your State, than which none has sent nobler or more gallant soldiers to the field of battle, (one of whom it is your honor to be,) can have been deceived by anything to which you refer in "the recent action of the Federal House of Representatives." I have seen no action of that House that does not indicate, by a very decided majority, the purpose of the enemy to refuse all terms of the South, except absolute, unconditional subjugation or extermination. But if it were otherwise, how are we to treat with the House of Representatives?

It is with Lincoln alone that we ever could confer, and his own partisans at the North avow unequivocally that his purpose in his message and proclamation was to shut out all hope that he could ever treat with us on any terms. If we will break up our Government, dissolve the Confederacy, disband our armies, emancipate our slaves, take an oath of allegiance binding ourselves to obedience to him and of disloyalty to our own States, he proposes to pardon us and not to plunder us of anything more than the property already stolen from us, and such slaves as still remain. In order to render his proposals so insulting as to secure their rejection, he joins to them a promise to support with his army one-tenth of the people of any State who will attempt to set up a government over the other nine-tenths, thus seeking to sow discord and suspicion among the people of the several States, and excite them to civil war in furtherance of his ends.

I know well it would be impossible to get your people, if they possessed full knowledge of these facts, to consent that proposals should now be made by us to those who control the Government at Washington. Your own well-known devotion to the great cause of liberty and independence, to which we have all committed whatever we have of earthly possessions, would induce you to take the lead in repelling the bare thought of abject submission to the enemy.

Yet peace on other terms is now impossible. To obtain the sole terms to which you or I could listen, this struggle must continue until the enemy is beaten out of his vain confidence of our subjugation. Then, and not till then, will it be possible to treat for peace. Till then, all tender of terms to the enemy will be received as proof that we are ready for submission, and will encourage him in the atrocious warfare which he is waging.

I fear much from the tenor of the news I receive from North Carolina, that an attempt will be made by some bad men to inaugurate movements which must be considered as equivalent to aid and comfort to the enemy, and which all patriots should combine to put down at once.

You may count on my aid in every effort to spare your State the scenes of civil warfare, which will devastate its homes if the designs of these traitors be suffered to make headway. I know that you will place yourself in your legitimate position in the lead of those who will not suffer the name of the Old North State to be blackened by such a stain.

Will you pardon me for suggesting that my only source of disquietude on the subject arises from the fear that you will delay too long the action which now appears inevitable, and that by an overearnest desire to reclaim by conciliation men whom you believe to be sound at heart, but whose loyalty is more than suspected elsewhere, you will permit them to gather such strength as to require more violent measures than are now needed?

With your influence and position, the promoters of the unfounded discontent now prevalent in your State would be put down without the use of physical force if you would abandon a policy of conciliation and set them at defiance. In this course, frankly and firmly pursued, you could rally around you all that is best and noblest in your State, and your triumph would be bloodless.

If the contrary policy be adopted, I much fear you will be driven to the use of force to repress treason. In either event, however, be assured that you will have my cordial concurrence and assistance in maintaining with you the honor, dignity, and fair fame of your State, and in your efforts to crush treason, whether incipient, as I believe it now to be, or more matured, as I believe, if not firmly met, it will in our future inevitably become.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,
JEFFERSON DAVIS.

James R. Gilmore—otherwise known as "Edmund Kirke"—who recently visited Richmond with Col. Jacques, writes an explanatory note respecting his visit to the Boston Transcript of July 22, 1864, in which he says of their "mission":

It will result in nothing. Jefferson Davis said to me last Sunday, (and with all his faults I believe him to be a man of truth): "This war must go on till the last of this generation falls in his tracks, and his children seize his musket and fight our battle, unless you acknowledge our right to self-government. We are not fighting for slavery; we are fighting for independence, and that or extermination we will have."

CONFEDERATE STATES STEAMER TORPEDO,
IN JAMES RIVER, July 4, 1863.

SIR: As military commissioner, I am the bearer of a communication in writing from Jefferson Davis, Commander-in-Chief of the land and naval forces of the Confederate States, to Abraham Lincoln, Commander-in-Chief of the land and naval forces of the United States. The Hon. Robert Ould, Confederate States agent of exchange, accompanies me as secretary, for the purpose of delivering the communication in person and conferring upon the subject to which it relates. I desire to proceed to Washington in the steamer Torpedo, commanded by Lieut. Hunter Davidson, of the Confederate States Navy, no person being on board but the Hon. Mr. Ould, myself, and the boat's officers and crew.

Yours, most respectfully,

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

To S. H. LEE, Admiral.

Acting Rear Admiral S. H. LEE, Hampton Roads:

The request of Alex. H. Stephens is inadmissible. The customary agents and channels are adequate for all needful military communications and conference between the United States forces and the insurgents.

MILITARY ORDERS RESPECTING ELECTIONS.

Maryland.

EXTRACT FROM AN ACT OF ASSEMBLY OF 1860.

No commissioned or non-commissioned officer, having command of any soldier or soldiers quartered or posted in any district of any county in this State, shall muster or embody any of the said troops, or march any recruiting party within the view of any place of election, during the time of holding said election, under the penalty of one hundred dollars. This section not to apply to the city of Baltimore.

ELECTION OF 1861.

1861, Oct. 29—General Marcy, Chief of McClellan's Staff, issued this order :

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
WASHINGTON, October 29, 1861.

GENERAL : There is an apprehension among Union citizens in many parts of Maryland of an attempt at interference with their rights of suffrage by disunion citizens on the occasion of the election to take place on the 6th of November next.

In order to prevent this, the major general commanding directs that you send detachments of a sufficient number of men to the different points in your vicinity where the elections are to be held to protect the Union voters, and to see that no disunionists are allowed to intimidate them, or in any way to interfere with their rights.

He also desires you to arrest and hold in confinement till after the election all disunionists who are known to have returned from Virginia recently and who show themselves at the polls, and to guard effectually against any invasion of the peace and order of the election. For the purpose of carrying out these instructions you are authorized to suspend the habeas corpus. General Stone has received similar instructions to these. You will please confer with him as to the particular points that each shall take the control of.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. B. MARCY,
Chief of Staff.

Major General N. P. BANKS,
Commanding Division, Muddy Branch, Md.

Nov. 1—Gen. John A. Dix issued this order :

HEADQUARTERS, BALTIMORE, November 1, 1861.

To the United States Marshal of Maryland, and the Provost Marshal of the city of Baltimore.

Information has come to my knowledge that certain individuals who formerly resided in this State, and who are known to have been recently in Virginia bearing arms against the authority and the forces of the United States, have returned to their former homes with the intention of taking part in the election of the 6th of November instant, thus carrying out at the polls the treason they have committed in the field. There is reason also to believe that other individuals lately residents in Maryland, who have been engaged in similar acts of hostility to the United States, or in actively aiding and abetting those in arms against the United States, are about to participate in the election for the same treacherous purpose, with the hope of carrying over the State by disloyal votes to the cause of rebellion and treason. I, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me to arrest all persons in rebellion against the United States, require you to take into custody all such persons in any of the election districts or precincts in which they may appear at the polls to effect their criminal attempt to convert the elective franchise into an engine for the subversion of the Government, and for the encouragement and support of its enemies.

In furtherance of this object, I request the judges of election of the several precincts of the State, in case any such person shall present himself and offer his vote, to commit him until he can be taken into custody by the authority of the United States ; and I call on all good and loyal citizens to support the judges of election, the United States marshal, and his deputies, and the provost marshal of Baltimore and police, in their efforts to secure a free and fair expression of the voice of the people of Maryland, and at the same time to prevent the ballot-box from being polluted by treasonable votes.

JOHN A. DIX,
Major General Commanding.

Same day, he addressed this letter to the inspectors of the election at New Windsor, Carroll county :

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
BALTIMORE, Md., November 1, 1861.

GENTLEMEN : I have received your letter of the 29th ultimo, asking me to issue a proclamation authorizing you to administer to all persons of doubtful loyalty, who offer their votes at the approaching election, an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. If I had the power I would most cheerfully do so, for no one who is false to the Government ought to be allowed to vote. But the constitution and laws of Maryland provide for the exercise of the elective franchise by regulations with which I have no right to interfere. I have this day issued an order, of which I enclose a copy, to the United States marshal and the provost marshal of Baltimore to arrest any persons who have been in arms in Virginia if they appear at the polls and attempt to vote, as we are told some such persons intend, and to take into custody all who aid and abet them in their treasonable designs ; and I have requested the judges of election, in case any such person presents himself at the polls and attempts to vote, to commit him until he can be taken into custody by the authority of the United States.

I consider it of the utmost importance that the election should be a fair one, and that there should be no obstruction to the free and full expression of the voice of the people of the State, believing, as I do, that it will be decidedly in favor of the Union. But it is in the power of the judges of election, under the authority given them, to satisfy themselves as to the qualifications of the voters, to put to those who offer to poll such searching questions in regard to residence and citizenship as to detect traitors, and, without any violation of the constitution or laws of Maryland, to prevent the pollution of the ballot-boxes by their votes.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,

Major General Commanding.

DANIEL ENGEL and WILLIAM ECKER, Inspectors of Election,
New Windsor.

MAJOR GENERAL DIX'S ORDER TO PROVOST MARSHAL DODGE BEFORE THE MARYLAND ELECTION OF 1861.*

BALTIMORE, November 5, 1861.

To Provost Marshal Dodge :

Use all your power to-morrow to have the polls unobstructed. We have shown that we can control Maryland

* The above, General Dix says, is in all essential particulars accurate, and is given by him from memory. The original of the order has been mislaid.

by force. We now wish to show that we can control it by the power of opinion, and we shall lose the whole moral influence of our victory if the right of suffrage is not free, and maintained.

JOHN A. DIX,
Major General Commanding.

FURLOUGHING OF SOLDIERS TO VOTE IN MARYLAND.

SECRETARY OF WAR TO GEN. McCLELLAN.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, October 28, 1861.

Major Gen. McCLELLAN, Commanding:

SIR: In order to have a full vote in Maryland at the coming election, Wednesday, November 6, so that the legal voters may decide by their ballots all public questions, you are hereby directed to grant three days' furlough to the soldiers of the 1st, 2d, and 3d regiments of Maryland volunteers, all to return to duty on Thursday, Nov. 7.

Very respectfully,

SIMON CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

GEN. McCLELLAN'S ORDER TO GEN. BANKS.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
WASHINGTON, October 29, 1861.

Major Gen. N. P. BANKS, Commanding, &c.:

GENERAL: Pursuant to directions from the Secretary of War, of the 28th inst., of which I inclose you a copy, the Major General commanding directs that such soldiers of the 1st, 2d, and 3d regiments of Maryland volunteers as may be within the limits of your command receive furloughs for such a length of time as will enable them to reach the place wherein they may be entitled to vote by the 6th of November. Wherever it may be necessary, in order to facilitate the presence of these men at their places of voting, to furnish them transportation, it may be furnished. It is desired that the most liberal and prompt circulation may be given to these instructions, in order to secure with certainty the carrying into effect the design proposed.

Sufficient time is to be allowed the soldiers thus furloughed to enable them to return after voting, without exceeding the term fixed for their furlough; but a prompt return is desired.

Whenever it may be necessary, the absent soldier should be replaced for the time by other troops.

The General Commanding desires that the receipt of this communication be acknowledged at once.

I have the honor to be, General, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. WILLIAMS,
Asst. Adj. Gen.

ELECTION OF 1863.

1863, October 27—General Schenck issued this order:

[General Orders No. 53.]

HEADQUARTERS, MIDDLE DEPARTMENT,
EIGHTH ARMY CORPS,
BALTIMORE, MARYLAND, October 27, 1863.

It is known that there are many evil disposed persons, now at large in the State of Maryland, who have been engaged in rebellion against the lawful Government, or have given aid and comfort or encouragement to others so engaged, or who do not recognize their allegiance to the United States, and who may avail themselves of the indulgence of the authority which tolerates their presence to embarrass the approaching election, or, through it, to foist enemies of the United States into power. It is therefore ordered,

1. That all provost marshals and other military officers do arrest all such persons found at, or hanging about, or approaching any poll or place of election on the 4th of November, 1863, and report such arrest to these headquarters.

2. That all provost marshals and other military officers commanding in Maryland shall support the judges of election on the 4th of November, 1863, in requiring an oath of allegiance to the United States, as the test of citizenship of any one whose vote may be challenged on the ground that he is not loyal, or does not admit his allegiance to the United States, which oath shall be in the following form and terms:

I do solemnly swear that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign; that I hereby pledge my allegiance, faith, and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution, or law of any State convention, or State Legislature, to the contrary notwithstanding; that I will at all times yield a hearty and willing obedience to the said Constitution and Government, and will not, either directly or indirectly, do any act in hostility to the same, either by taking up arms against them, or aiding, abetting, or countenancing those in arms against them; that, without permission from the lawful authority, I will have no communication, direct or indirect, with the States in insurrection against the United States, or with either of them, or with any person or persons within said insurrectionary States; and that I will in all things deport myself as a good and loyal citizen of the United States. This I do in good faith, with full determination, pledge, and purpose to keep this, my sworn obligation, and without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever.

3. Provost marshals and other military officers are directed to report to these headquarters any judge of an election who shall refuse his aid in carrying out this order, or who, on challenge of a vote being made on the ground of disloyalty or hostility to the Government, shall refuse to require the oath of allegiance from such voter.

By order of Major General Schenck:

W. H. CHESBROUGH,
Lieutenant Colonel and Assistant Adjutant General.

PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL'S ORDER.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., October 31, 1863.

Direct your provost marshals to give their aid in carrying out General Schenck's orders for preserving the purity of elections at the polls in Maryland.

JAMES B. FRY,
Provost Marshal General.
Major JEFFRIES, Acting Assistant Provost Marshal General, Baltimore, Maryland.

November 2—Governor BRADFORD issued this proclamation:

To the citizens of the State, and more especially the judges of election:

A military order, issued from the headquarters of the "Middle Department," bearing date the 27th ult., printed and circulated, as it is said, through the State, though never yet published here, and designed to operate on the approaching election, has just been brought to my attention, and is of such a character and issued under such circumstances as to demand notice at my hands.

This order reciting, that there are many evil disposed persons now at large in the State of Maryland, who have been engaged in rebellion against the lawful Government, or have given aid and comfort, or encouragement to others so engaged, or who do not recognize their allegiance to the United States, and who may avail themselves of the indulgence of the authority which tolerates their presence, to embarrass the approaching election, or through it to foist enemies of the United States into power," proceeds, among other things, to direct "all provost marshals and other military officers, to arrest all such persons found at or hanging about, or approaching any poll or place of election, on the 4th of November, 1863, and report such arrest to these headquarters."

This extraordinary notice has not only been issued without any notice to, or consultation with the constituted authorities of the State, but at a time and under circumstances when the condition of the State, and the character of the candidates are such as to preclude the idea that the result of that election can in any way endanger either the safety of the Government, or the peace of the community.

It is a well known fact that, with perhaps one single exception, there is not a congressional candidate in the State whose loyalty is even of a questionable character, and in not a county of the State outside of the same congressional district is there, I believe, a candidate for the Legislature or any State office, whose loyalty is not equally undoubted. In the face of this well known condition of things, the several classes of persons above enumerated are not only to be arrested at but "approaching any poll or place of election." And who is to judge whether voters thus on their way to the place of voting have given "aid, comfort, or encouragement" to persons engaged in the rebellion, or that they "do not recognize their allegiance to the United States," and may avail themselves of their presence at the polls "to foist enemies of the United States into power?" As I have already said, in a very large majority of the counties of the State there are not to be found among the candidates any such "enemies of the United States," but the provost marshals—created for a very different purpose—and the other military officials who are thus ordered to arrest approaching voters are necessarily made by the order the sole and exclusive judges of who fall within the proscribed category; an extent of arbitrary discretion, under any circumstances the most odious and more especially offensive and dangerous in view of the known fact that two at least of the five provost marshals of the State are themselves candidates for important offices, and sundry of their deputies for others.

This military order, therefore, is not only without justification when looking to the character of the candidates before the people, and rendered still more obnoxious by the means appointed for its execution, but is equally offensive to the sensibilities of the people themselves and the authorities of the State, looking to the repeated proofs they have furnished of an unalterable devotion to the Government. For more than two years past there has never been a time when, if every traitor and every treasonable sympathizer in the State had voted, they could have controlled, whoever might have been their candidates, a single department of the State or jeopardized the success of the General Government. No State in the Union has been or is now actuated by more heartfelt or unwavering loyalty than Maryland—a loyalty intensified and purified by the ordeal through which it has passed; and yet looking to what has lately transpired elsewhere and to the terms and character of this military order, one would think that in Maryland and nowhere else is the Government endangered by the "many evil disposed persons that are now at large."

Within less than a month the most important elections have taken place in two of the largest States in the Union; in each of them candidates were before the people, charged by the particular friends of the Government, with being hostile to its interests, and whose election was deprecated as fraught with the most dangerous consequences to its success. One of the most prominent of these candidates was considered so dangerously inimical to the triumph of the national cause, that he has been for months past banished from the country, and yet hundreds of thousands of voters were allowed to approach the polls, and to attempt "to foist" such men into power, and no provost marshals or other military officers were order to arrest them on the way, or, so far as we have ever heard, even test their allegiance by an oath.

With these facts before us, it is difficult to believe that the suggestion that the enemies of the United States may be foisted into power at our coming election, was the consideration that prompted this order; but whatever may have been that motive, I feel it to be my duty to solemnly protest against such an intervention with the privileges of the ballot-box, and so offensive a discrimination against the rights of a loyal State.

I avail myself of the occasion to call to the particular attention of the judges of election the fact that they are on the day of election clothed with all the authority of conservators of the peace, and may summon to their aid any of the executive officers of the county, and the whole power of the county itself to preserve order at the polls and secure the constitutional rights to voters.

It is also made their "special duty" to give information to the State's attorney for the county of all infractions of the State laws on the subject of elections, and by these laws it is forbidden to any "commissioned or non-commissioned officers, having command of any soldier or soldiers quartered or posted in any district of any county of the State, to muster or embody any of said troops, or march any recruiting party within the view of any place of election during the time of holding said election."

I need not, I am sure, remind them of the terms of the oath they are required to take before entering upon their duties, and according to which they swear "to permit all persons to vote who shall offer to poll at the election, &c., who in their judgment, shall, according to the directions contained in the Constitution and laws, be entitled to poll at the same election, and not permit any person to poll at the same election who is not in their judgment qualified to vote as aforesaid."

It is the judgment of the judges of election alone, founded upon the provisions of the constitution and the laws of the State, that must determine the right to vote of any person offering himself for that purpose. I trust and believe that they will form that judgment, and discharge their duty, as their conscientious convictions of its requirements, under the solemn obligations they assume shall dictate, undeterred by an order to provost marshals to report them to "headquarters."

Whatever power the State possesses shall be exerted to protect them for anything done in the proper execution of its laws.

Since writing the above, I have seen a copy of the President's letter to the chairman of the Union State Central Committee, bearing the same date with the order, and evidently showing that the order was unknown to him, that it would not have been approved by him if he had known it, and that it is therefore all the more reprehensible.

A. W. BRADFORD.

By the Governor:

WM. B. HILL, Secretary of State.

After the above was in print, at three o'clock this afternoon, I received from the President the following dispatch:

"I revoke the first of the three propositions in General Schenck's General Order No. 53, not that it is wrong in principle, but because the military, being of necessity exclusive judges as to who shall be arrested, the provision is liable to abuse; for the revoked part I substitute the following:

"That all provost marshals and other military officers do prevent all disturbance and violence at or about the polls, whether offered by such persons as above described, or by any other person or persons whomsoever; the other two propositions I allow to stand; my letter at length will reach you to-night."

"A. LINCOLN."

Whilst this modification revokes the authority of the provost marshals and military officers to arrest the classes of persons enumerated in the preamble to the order, "found at or hanging about, or approaching any poll or place of election," it directs them to prevent all violence or disturbance about the polls, &c.

To meet such disturbances, the judges of election, as I have already stated, are clothed with ample powers, and I had received no previous intimation that there was any reason to apprehend a disturbance of any kind at the polls on the day of election. In the absence of any military display, there would certainly seem to be as little cause for such apprehensions as ever before existed. A preparation by the Government, by military means, to provide for such a contingency, will be quite as likely to provoke as to subdue such a disposition. Not only so, but the military thus required to prevent violence or disturbance about the polls must necessarily be empowered to arrest the parties they may charge with such disorder, and they are still left in effect "exclusive judges as to who shall be arrested"—a power they may as readily abuse as any other.

I regret, therefore, that I can perceive no such change in the general principles of the order as to induce me to change the foregoing proclamation.

A. W. BRADFORD.

BALTIMORE, Monday evening, Nov. 2, 1863.

NOV. 2.—THE PRESIDENT wrote this letter to Governor Bradford:

WAR DEPARTMENT

WASHINGTON, November 2, 1862.

SIR: Yours of the 31st ultimo was received yesterday about noon, and since then I have been giving most earnest attention to the subject-matter of it. At my call General Schenck has attended, and he assures me it is almost certain that violence will be used at some of the voting places on election day, unless prevented by his provost guards. He says that in some of those places the Union voters will not attend at all, or run a ticket, unless they have assurance of protection. This makes the Missouri case of my action, in regard to which you express your approval.

The remaining point of your letter is a protest against any person offering to vote being put to any test not found in the laws of Maryland. This brings us to a difference between Missouri and Maryland. With the same reason in both States, Missouri has, by law, provided a test for the voter with reference to the present rebellion, while Maryland has not. For example, General Trimble, captured fighting us at Gettysburg, is, without recanting his treason, a legal voter by the laws of Maryland. Even General Schenck's order admits him to vote, if he recants upon oath. I think that is cheap enough. My order in Missouri, which you approve, and General Schenck's order here, reach precisely the same end. Each assures the right of voting to all loyal men, and whether that man is loyal, each allows that man to fix by his own oath. Your suggestion that nearly all the candidates are loyal I do not think quite meets the case. In this struggle for the nation's life, I cannot so confidently rely on those whose election may have depended upon disloyal votes. Such men, when elected, may prove true, but such votes are given them in expectation that they will prove false. Nor do I think that to keep the peace at the polls, and to prevent the persistently disloyal from voting, constitutes just cause of offence to Maryland. I think she has her own example for it. If I mistake not, it is precisely what General Dix did when your excellency was elected Governor. I revoke the first of the three propositions in General Schenck's General Order No. 53, not that it is wrong in principle, but because the military, being of necessity, exclusive judges as to who shall be arrested, the provision is liable to abuse. For the revoked part I substitute the following:

That all provost marshals and other military officers do prevent all disturbance and violence at or about the polls, whether offered by such persons as above described, or by any other person or persons whatsoever.

The other two propositions of the order I allow to stand. General Schenck is fully determined, and has my strict order besides, that all loyal men may vote, and vote for whom they please.

Your obedient servant,
A. LINCOLN,
President of the United States.
His Excellency A. W. BRADFORD,
Governor of Maryland.

GENERAL SCHENCK'S MODIFICATION OF THE ORDER.

[General Orders No. 55.]

HEADQUARTERS, MIDDLE DEPARTMENT,
EIGHTH ARMY CORPS,
BALTIMORE, MARYLAND, November 2, 1863.

Paragraph I, of General Orders No. 53, from these headquarters, is modified so as to read as follows:

I. That all provost marshals and other military officers do prevent all disturbance and violence at or about the polls, whether offered by such persons as above described, or by any other person, or persons, whomsoever.

By command of Major General Schenck:

WILLIAM H. CHESEBROUGH,
Lieutenant Colonel and Assistant Adjutant General.

November 3—General Schenck issued this address, in reply to the proclamation of Governor Bradford:

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, 8TH ARMY CORPS,
BALTIMORE, MD., November 3, 1863.

A very extraordinary proclamation was issued last evening by his Excellency A. W. Bradford, Governor of Maryland, in relation to General Order No. 53, from these headquarters. I will not presume, with my knowledge of Governor Bradford, that that proclamation was designed to produce collision between the military power and the citizens who may be assembled at the polls to vote at the election to-morrow; but I cannot doubt that its obvious tendency is to invite and suggest such disturbance. When that proclamation came to my knowledge, late last night, I felt it my duty to take measures for restricting, as far as possible, its circulation in those parts of the State to be most affected by it, until there could go out with it the letter of the President of the United States on the subject, written yesterday to Governor Bradford, a copy of which I have now obtained.

I will make, for myself, but one or two comments on the proclamation.

The intimation of the Governor that my order might have been prompted by some other consideration than patriotic purpose or official duty, is unworthy of reply, and unworthy of him. He knows, and the people of Maryland and of this military department know, how single and earnest and constant has been my aim to avoid all side influences, and to keep in view, and act steadily upon, the idea of maintaining the just authority of the national Government against disloyalty in all its forms, and for the general good only.

It was in this spirit that I issued the general order in question. Its principal purpose is to prevent traitorous persons from controlling, in any degree, by their votes, or taking part in the coming election. The order is not aimed at candidates, either individually or as a class, as the Governor would presume. Neither is it aimed at, nor can it by any proper interpretation in any way interfere with the rights of loyal voters. It is only framed and intended to exclude from a voice in the election of those who are to administer the affairs either of the national Government or of this loyal State such individuals as are hostile to that Government of which Maryland is a part. Will any good citizen pretend that the exclusion of such persons is not a wise and wholesome protection, due to those who adhere to and sustain the Constitution and lawful authority? And it is clearly not a hardship, to be complained of by the individual challenged for such disqualification, when he is permitted to purge himself by his own oath of allegiance to the Government, in the management of which he claims a share.

Governor Bradford himself cannot appreciate more highly than I do, the sterling loyalty of the great majority of the people of Maryland, but he must know, as I do, that there still remains at large, from forbearance of the Government authorities, a very considerable number who are more or less actively engaged in aiding and encouraging rebels in arms. Even in his proclamation he admits the existence of such prevailing disloyalty in the counties of at least one of the congressional districts.

But my general order was only put forth after the receipt, through all the last month, of a great number of letters, petitions, and appeals in person, from respectable and loyal citizens, throughout the southern part of the State particularly, on both sides of the bay, imploring the issue of such an order. I have only failed in complying with this request by making its provisions less stringent than justice and fairness to loyal citizens seemed to them to demand.

I will add only, to show with what anxiety I have sought, on this occasion, to secure peace and good order at the polls, that officers intrusted with this duty have, in every instance, been furnished with written or printed instructions, of which the following is one clause:

"The officers and men are to be cautioned not to commit or permit any unlawful violence. They must not enter into political discussions, and are to remember, that while protecting the polls from rebel sympathizers, they are conservators of the peace, and are there to support the judges of election." Even Governor Bradford could scarcely object to this. I now repeat to the provost guards that instruction, and enjoin upon them, that while they enforce the observance of the general order firmly and faithfully, as directed, they do it in every respect discreetly and temperately.

I append copies of the President's letter, and of the general order, as modified.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,
Major General Commanding.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL TEVIS'S ORDER AT CHESTERTOWN.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD MARYLAND CAVALRY,
CHESTERTOWN, November 3, 1863.

Whereas the President of the United States, in reply to a letter addressed to him by Hon. Thomas Swann, of Baltimore city, has stated that all loyal qualified voters should have a right to vote, it therefore becomes every truly loyal citizen to avail himself of the present opportunity offered to place himself honorably upon the record or poll-book at the approaching election, by giving a full and ardent support to the whole Government ticket, upon the platform adopted by the Union League convention. None other is recognized by the Federal authorities as loyal or worthy of the support of any one who desires the peace and restoration of this Union.

CHARLES CARROLL TEVIS,
Lieutenant Colonel Commanding.

This order was at once suppressed by General Schenck, and Colonel Tevis ordered under arrest. November 6, he made a statement of his action, and requested to be released from arrest and restored to his command, which was granted November 9, as stated in the subjoined order:

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, 8TH ARMY CORPS,
BALTIMORE, MARYLAND, November 9, 1863.

The within explanation and report having been submitted with permission by Colonel Tevis, under arrest and restored to duty—

The general commanding remarks that Colonel Tevis appears to have acted himself in good faith and from a sense of duty, but to have been misled by the bad course and instructions of Captain Frazier, provost marshal of the first congressional district of Maryland, who framed the order issued by him, and perhaps also by the mistaken advice of other over-zealous persons. But Colonel Tevis should have understood that the whole scope and purpose of the General Orders 53 and 55, and of accompanying instructions, was to prevent disloyal persons from voting and to suppress disturbances at the polls. The only test of loyalty prescribed was the oath of allegiance embodied in General Order No. 53. No directions were given to interfere with candidates, as such, nor with the voters because of their supporting any particular ticket, nor was any such interference contemplated or intended to be sanctioned by the general commanding. The idea of a "Government ticket" was only with Colonel Tevis or the provost marshal, Frazier, and other indiscreet or bad advisers, and was not put forth from these headquarters. Colonel Tevis's printed order was therefore wholly unauthorized and wrong.

The general commanding directs that a copy of this endorsement be furnished to Colonel Tevis, and also that a copy of the same be sent, duly certified, to Major H. L. Jeffries, assistant provost marshal general for the States of Maryland and Delaware.

By command of Major General Schenck:

W. H. CHESEBROUGH,
Lieut. Col. and Assistant Adjutant General.
ELECTION OF 1864.

Pending the constitutional convention election in Maryland, April 6, 1864, Major General Lewis Wallace and Gov. Bradford had a correspondence as to the oath prescribed by law to be administered to the delegates chosen, and the power possessed by the judges of election to investigate and decide upon a charge of disloyalty as affecting the right to vote. The Governor recited the law, and the duties of the judges, and the penalties for non-performance, and expressed the opinion that the laws, if faithfully executed, as he hoped they would be, would be found "entirely sufficient to exclude disloyal voters from the polls."

Delaware.

An act to secure the freedom of elections in this State.

Whereas the Constitution of this State declares that "all elections shall be free and equal," and whereas the freedom of elections and the free enjoyment of the right of suffrage according to the Constitution and laws of the State are essential to the enjoyment of public liberty; and whereas, evil disposed persons did cause armed soldiers to be brought into this State and to be present at different voting places in the State on the day of the last general election, and a free election was thereby prevented; and whereas, it is proper that a repetition of so grave an offence against the peace and dignity of the State shall be prevented: Therefore—

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, &c., That if any person, being a citizen or inhabitant of this State, shall send or cause to be sent, bring or cause to be brought, into this State, or shall aid, abet, procure, advise, counsel, or in any manner assist in sending or bringing into this State any armed soldier or soldiers, to be present at any voting place in this State, or within five miles thereof, on the day of any general, special, or other election hereafter to be held in this State, or shall aid, abet, procure, advise, counsel, or in any manner assist the presence or attendance of any armed soldier or soldiers at any such voting place, or within five miles thereof, on any such election day, every person so offending shall be guilty of felony, and upon conviction thereof by indictment, shall forfeit and pay to the State a fine not less than one thousand dollars and not more than ten thousand dollars, and shall be imprisoned for a term not less than one nor more than five years, and shall forever thereafter be incapable of exercising the right of suffrage in this State.

SEC. 2. That if any person, being a citizen or inhabitant of this State, shall aid, abet, procure, advise, counsel, or in any manner assist or be guilty of military interference in any manner with the freedom of any election in this State, every person so offending shall be guilty of felony, and upon conviction thereof by indictment shall forfeit and pay to the State a fine of not less than one thousand dollars nor more than ten thousand dollars, and shall be imprisoned for a term not less than one nor more than five years, and shall forever thereafter be incapable of exercising the right of suffrage in this State.

SEC. 3. That if any inspector, presiding officer, or judge of any election in this State, or any other person, shall administer or cause to be administered to any legal voter in this State, any oath or affirmation not authorized by the Constitution and laws of this State for that purpose, as a pre-requisite or condition of voting at any election in this State, except when such oath or affirmation shall be administered in order to satisfy such inspector, presiding officer, or judge, that such vote is a legal vote according to the Constitution and laws of this State, such inspector, presiding officer, judge, or other person so offending, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof by indictment shall, for every such offence forfeit and pay to the State a fine of not less than five hundred dollars and not more than one thousand dollars, and shall be imprisoned for a term of ten days.

Passed at Dover, March 25, 1863.

GENERAL SCHENCK'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, 8TH ARMY CORPS,
BALTIMORE, MD., November 13, 1863.

[General Orders No. 59.]

It is known that there are many evil disposed persons now at large in the State of Delaware, who have been engaged in rebellion against the lawful Government, or have given aid or comfort or encouragement to others so engaged, or who do not recognize their allegiance to the United States, and who may avail themselves of the indulgence of the authority which tolerates their presence to attempt to take part in or embarrass the approaching special election in that State. It is therefore ordered:

I. That all provost marshals and other military officers do prevent all disturbance and violence at or about the polls, whether offered by such persons as above described, or by any other person or persons whomsoever.

II. That all provost marshals and other military officers commanding in Delaware, shall support the judges of election on the 19th of November, 1863, in requiring an oath of allegiance to the United States, as a test of citizenship of any one whose vote may be challenged on the ground that he is not loyal or does not admit his allegiance to the United States, which oath shall be in the following form and terms:

I do solemnly swear that I will support, protect, and de-send the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign; that I hereby pledge my allegiance, faith, and loyalty to the same any ordinance, resolution, or law of any State convention or State legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; that I will at all times yield a hearty and willing obedience to the said Constitution and Government, and will not, directly or indirectly, do any act in hostility to the same, either by taking up arms against them, or aiding, abetting, or countenancing those in arms against them; that, without permission from the lawful authority, I will have no communication, direct or indirect, with the States in insurrection against the United States, or with either of them, or with any person or persons within said insurrectionary States; and that I will in all things report myself as a good and loyal citizen of the United States. This I do in good faith, with full determination, pledge, and purpose to keep this, my sworn obligation, and without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever.

III. Provost marshals and other military officers are directed to report to these headquarters any judge of election who shall refuse his aid in carrying out this order, or who, on challenge of a vote being made on the ground of disloyalty or hostility to the Government, shall refuse to require the oath of allegiance from such voter.

By command of Major General Schenck:

W. H. CHESEBROUGH,
Lieut. Col. and Asst. Adj. Gen.

GOVERNOR CANNON'S PROCLAMATION ON THE FOREGOING ORDER.

STATE OF DELAWARE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Dover, November 13, 1863.

All civil officers and good citizens of this State are enjoined to obey the above military order, issued by the commanding general of the Middle department, and to give all needful aid for the proper enforcement of the same.

WILLIAM CANNON,
Governor of Delaware.

GENERAL TYLER'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF DELAWARE,
MIDDLE DEPARTMENT,
WILMINGTON, DELAWARE, Nov. 15, 1863.

The following instructions have been received from the General Commanding, and will be strictly and carefully observed by all detachments of officers and soldiers within the "District of Delaware," while carrying out the provisions of Department General Orders No. 59, during the election to be held on the 19th instant:

Every officer or non-commissioned officer in command of a detachment will be held strictly accountable for the good conduct and obedience of the men in his charge.

Officers and soldiers must be strictly sober, and, while preventing disturbance by others, must avoid all disturbance themselves, and are required not to hang around the polls, or engage in political discussions.

It will be borne in mind that the whole object of the order of the Commanding General is to preserve peace at the places of voting, to sustain the judges or inspectors of election, to protect loyal voters, and to prevent from voting disloyal and traitorously disposed persons, who refuse to take the oath of allegiance.

In enforcing Paragraph I, of the General Order, to prevent violence and disturbance at the polls, care will be taken that disloyal citizens of other States do not, as it is apprehended they will attempt to do, intrude themselves at the places of voting, and endeavor to intimidate the lawful and loyal voters of Delaware.

DANIEL TYLER,
Brigadier General Commanding.

Kentucky.

1863, March 11—The Legislature passed this bill by a two-thirds vote over the veto of Governor Magoffin:

An act to amend chapter 15 of the Revised Statutes, entitled "Citizens, expatriation, and aliens."

SEC. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That any citizen of this State who shall enter into the service of the so-called Confederate States, in either a civil or military capacity, or enter into the service of the so-called provisional government of Kentucky in either a civil or military capacity, or having heretofore entered such service of either the Confederate States or provisional government, shall continue in such service after this act takes effect, or shall take up and continue in arms against the military forces of the United States or the State of Kentucky, or shall give voluntary aid and assistance to those in arms against said forces, shall be deemed to have expatriated himself, and shall no longer be a citizen of Kentucky, nor shall he again be a citizen, except by permission of the Legislature by a general or special statute.

Sec. 2. That whenever a person attempts or is called on to exercise any of the constitutional or legal rights and privileges belonging only to citizens of Kentucky, he may be required to negative on oath the expatriation provided in the first section of this act, and upon his failure or refusal to do so, shall not be permitted to exercise any such right or privilege.

Sec. 3. This act to be of force in thirty days from and after its passage.

1863, July 10—Governor J. F. Robinson issued this proclamation:

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
Executive Department.

For the information and guidance of all officers at the approaching election, I have caused to be herewith published an act of the Legislature of Kentucky entitled "An act to amend chapter 15 of the Revised Statutes, entitled 'Citizens, expatriation, and aliens.'" The strict observance and enforcement of this and all other laws of this State regulating elections are earnestly enjoined and required as being alike due to a faithful discharge of duty, to the purity of the elective franchise, and to the sovereign will of the people of Kentucky expressed through their Legislature.

Given under my hand, as Governor of Kentucky, at Frankfort, this 10th day of July, 1863, and in the seventy-second year of the Commonwealth.

J. F. ROBINSON.

By the Governor:

D. C. WICKLIFFE, Secretary of State.

July 31—General Burnside issued this order:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 31, 1863.

[General Orders No. 120.]

Whereas the State of Kentucky is invaded by a rebel force with the avowed intention of overawing the judges of elections, of intimidating the loyal voters, keeping them from the polls, and forcing the election of disloyal candidates at the election on the 3d of August; and whereas the military power of the Government is the only force that can defeat this attempt, the State of Kentucky is hereby declared under martial law, and all military officers are commanded to aid the constituted authorities of the State in support of the laws and of the purity of suffrage as defined in the late proclamation of his Excellency Governor Robinson.

As it is not the intention of the commanding general to interfere with the proper expression of public opinion, all discretion in the conduct of the election will be, as usual, in the hands of the legally appointed judges at the polls, who will be held strictly responsible that no disloyal person be allowed to vote, and to this end the military power is ordered to give them its utmost support.

The civil authority, civil courts, and business, will not be suspended by this order. It is for the purpose only of protecting, if necessary, the rights of loyal citizens and the freedom of election.

By command of Major General Burnside:

LEWIS RICHMOND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

LIEUT. COLONEL THOS. JOHNSON'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
SMITHLAND, KY., July 16, 1863.

The county court judges of the counties of Trigg, Caldwell, Lyon, Crittenden, and Livingston, are hereby directed, in appointing judges and clerks for conducting the State elections in August next, to observe strictly the laws of Kentucky, which require that such judges and clerks shall be unconditional Union men.

Judges and clerks so appointed are hereby directed not to place the name of any person on the poll-books to be voted for at the said election who is not a Union man, or who may be opposed to furnishing men and money for a rigorous prosecution of the war against the rebellion against the United States Government. The judges and clerks are further directed to permit no person to vote at said election without taking the oath required by the laws of Kentucky, unless said person so presenting himself to vote is personally known to the judges to be a Union man.

Any person violating this order will be regarded as an enemy to the Government of the United States, and will be arrested and punished accordingly.

By order of

THOMAS JOHNSON,
Lieutenant Colonel Commanding.

The oath prescribed by Lieutenant Colonel Johnson, to be taken by the voters, is in substance similar to the oath attached to the proclamation of General Shackleford.

MAJOR GENERAL HURLBUT'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTEENTH ARMY CORPS,
MEMPHIS, TENN., July, 1863.

I. In so much of the State of Kentucky as is within the district of Columbus, it is ordered—

1. That no person be permitted to be a candidate for office who is not avowedly and unconditionally for the Union and the suppression of the rebellion.

2. That no person shall exercise the privilege of an elector and vote at the said elections who is not avowedly and unconditionally for the Union and the suppression of the rebellion.

3. The military authorities in said district of Columbus will see to it that this order be carried out. Judges of election will be governed by the principles herein set forth, and will demand evidence upon oaths in such cases as may be in doubt, and allow no person to exercise the franchise of voting who does not take the oath required.

By order of Major General S. A. Hurlbut:
HENRY DINMORE,
Assistant Adjutant General.

BRIGADIER GENERAL ASBOTH'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBUS,
SIXTH DIVISION, SIXTEENTH ARMY CORPS,
COLUMBUS, KENTUCKY, July 15, 1863.

The above orders of the general commanding corps are communicated to the civil and military authorities for their information. Military officers making arrests for violation of these orders will be governed by the circular from office of Commissary General of Prisoners, dated Washington, May 11, 1863.

By order of Brigadier General Asboth:

T. H. HARRIS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

BRIGADIER GENERAL ASBOTH'S ORDER.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBUS,
HEADQUARTERS SIXTH DIVISION, SIXTEENTH ARMY CORPS,
COLUMBUS, KY., July 29, 1863.

That no further doubt may exist as to the intent and meaning of Special Orders No. 159, dated Headquarters Sixteenth Army Corps, July 14, 1863, it is ordered that no person shall be permitted to be voted for, or be a candidate for office, who has been or is now under arrest or bonds, by proper authority, for uttering disloyal language or sentiments.

County judges within this district are hereby ordered to appoint, as judges and clerks of the ensuing August election, only such persons as are avowedly and unconditionally for the Union and the suppression of the rebellion, and are further ordered to revoke and recall any appointment of judges and clerks already made who are not such loyal persons.

Judges and clerks of elections are hereby ordered not to place the name of any person upon the poll-books, to be voted for at said election, who is not avowedly and unconditionally for the Union and the suppression of the rebellion, or who may be opposed to furnishing men and money for the suppression of the rebellion.

The following oath is prescribed and will be administered by judges of elections to voters and to such candidates as reside within the district:

"I do solemnly swear that I have never entered the service of the so-called Confederate States; that I have not been engaged in the service of the so-called 'provisional government of Kentucky,' either in a civil or military capacity; that I have never, either directly or indirectly, aided the rebellion against the Government of the United States or the State of Kentucky; that I am unconditionally for the Union and the suppression of the rebellion, and am willing to furnish men and money for the vigorous prosecution of the war against the rebellious league known as the 'Confederate States;' so help me God."

Any voter, judge, or clerk of elections, or other person, who may evade, neglect, or refuse compliance with the provisions of this order will be arrested and sent before a military commission as soon as the facts are substantiated.

By order of Brigadier General Asboth:

T. H. HARRIS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

BRIGADIER GENERAL SHACKLEFORD'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
SECOND DIVISION, TWENTY-THIRD ARMY CORPS,
RUSSELLVILLE, KY., July 30, 1863.

In order that the proclamation of the Governor and the laws of the State of Kentucky may be observed and enforced, post commandants and officers of this command will see that the following regulations are strictly complied with at the approaching State election:

None but loyal citizens will act as officers of the election. No one will be allowed to offer himself as a candidate for office, or be voted for at said election, who is not in all things loyal to the State and Federal Government, and in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

The judges of election will allow no one to vote at said election unless he is known to them to be an undoubtedly loyal citizen, or unless he shall first take the oath required by the laws of the State of Kentucky.

No disloyal man will offer himself as a candidate, or attempt to vote, except for reasonable purposes; and all such efforts will be summarily suppressed by the military authorities.

All necessary protection will be supplied and guaranteed at the polls to Union men by all the military force within this command.

By order of Brigadier General J. M. Shackelford, commanding:
J. E. HUFFMAN,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Colonel John W. Foster, of the sixty-fifth Indiana regiment, commanding post at Henderson, Kentucky, issued an order similar to the above order of General Shackelford.

COLONEL MUNDY'S ORDER.

All loyal citizens, who have not forfeited their citizenship, can safely and quietly cast their votes for the candidates of their choice; but all who have forfeited their right of citizenship, under the provisions of the act of Assembly, who shall present themselves at the polls and fraudulently attempt to vote, will be immediately arrested by the guard detailed for that purpose at such precinct, and confined in the military prison.

1862, June 12—The convention of Missouri adopted this ordinance:

SEC. 1. No person shall vote at any election to be hereafter held in this State, under or in pursuance of the constitution and laws thereof, whether State, county, township, or municipal, who shall not, in addition to possessing the qualifications already prescribed for electors, previously take an oath in form as follows, namely: "I, —, do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State of Missouri against all enemies and opposers whether domestic or foreign; that I will bear true faith, loyalty, and allegiance to the United States, and will not, directly or indirectly, give aid and comfort, or countenance, to the enemies or opposers thereof, or of the provisional government of the State of Missouri, any ordinance, law, or resolution of any State convention or Legislature, or of any order or organization, secret or otherwise, to the contrary notwithstanding; and that I do this with a full and honest determination, pledge, and purpose, faithfully to keep and perform the same, without any mental reservation or evasion whatever. And I do further solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not, since the 17th day of December, A. D. 1861, wilfully taken up arms or levied war against the United States, or against the provisional government of the State of Missouri: So help me God."

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION OF 1862.

[General Orders No. 45.]

HEADQUARTERS STATE OF MISSOURI,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
ST. LOUIS, October 23, 1862.

I. A general election is to take place throughout the State the first Tuesday in November next.

This is the first attempt of the people to choose their officers since the war of the rebellion commenced. It will be an occasion when angry passions, excited by this war, might produce strife, and prevent the full expression of the popular will in the selection of officers.

The convention has provided by ordinance that every voter shall, before voting, take a prescribed oath, and that no vote shall be counted in favor of any candidate for a State or county office, unless he shall have taken an oath prescribed for candidates. The ordinance of the convention fixes heavy penalties upon those who take the oath falsely. These are the safeguards which the convention has judged necessary to keep unfaithful and disloyal persons from exercising power in the State. They are sufficient. No person must be allowed to interfere with the freedom of those qualified to vote under this ordinance.

The enrolled militia being citizens of the State, and very nearly all entitled by age to vote, will doubtless be generally at places of voting. They are a body organized for the purpose of preventing violations of the law of the State, and they all know that it is essential to the maintenance of our Government that all qualified voters shall be allowed, without molestation of any kind, to cast their votes as they please.

II. It is required of all officers and men of the enrolled militia that they keep perfect order at the polls on the day of election, and that they see that no person is either kept from the polls by intimidation or in any way interfered with in voting at the polls for whatever candidate he may choose.

III. If any officer or private shall either interfere with the rights of voters, or countenance such interference by others, it will be treated as a high military offence, and punished with the utmost rigor.

IV. Whenever there is any reason to apprehend any interference with the election on the part of bands of guerrillas, the commanding officer of the nearest regiment will detail a sufficient force to prevent any such interference, and station it where there is apprehended danger.

V. In case of disturbance arising which cannot be arrested by the civil authorities, any commissioned officer present is hereby ordered, at the request of any judge, sheriff, or justice of the peace, to use the necessary military force to suppress it.

VI. Commanding officers of the enrolled Missouri militia are hereby directed to see that the foregoing orders are strictly obeyed.

By order of the commander-in-chief:

WILLIAM D. WOOD,
Acting Adjutant General Missouri.

BRIGADIER GENERAL HALL'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS SEVENTH MILITARY DISTRICT,
ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI, November 1, 1862.

[General Orders, No. 33.]

The attention of all officers and soldiers of the militia of this district is called to General Order No. 45, dated "Headquarters State of Missouri, Adjutant General's office, St. Louis, October 23, 1862," with reference to the election on Tuesday next. The militia should bear in mind that they are not the judges of the qualifications of voters. That duty is devolved by law on the judge of the election. If those officers either admit improper persons to vote, or exclude proper persons from voting, the statutes of this State provide an ample remedy. The militia will carefully abstain from all acts calculated to interfere with the freedom of election. All officers who interfere with the rights of voters will be reported to the commander-in-chief, to be dealt with as he may decide. All soldiers guilty of the same offence will be punished as a court-martial shall determine.

By order of Brigadier General Willard P. Hall:

ELWOOD KIRBY,
Assistant Adjutant General.

MAJOR GENERAL SCHOFIELD'S ORDERS OF 1863.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI, September 28, 1863.

[General Orders No. 101.]

The right of the people to peaceably assemble for all lawful purposes, and the right to freely express their will at the polls according to law, are essential to civil liberty.

No interference with these rights, either by violence, threats, intimidation, or otherwise, will be tolerated.

Any commissioned officer who shall incite or encourage any interference with any lawful assemblage of the people, or who shall fail to do his utmost to prevent such interference, shall be dismissed the service; and any officer, soldier, or civilian, who shall, by violence, threats, or otherwise, actually interfere with any such lawful assemblage of the people, shall be punished by imprisonment or otherwise, at the discretion of a court-martial or military commission.

Any officer, soldier, or civilian, who shall attempt to intimidate any qualified voter in the exercise of his right to vote, or who shall attempt to prevent any qualified voter from going to the polls or voting, shall be punished by imprisonment or otherwise, at the discretion of a court-martial or military commission.

Special attention is called to the fifth article of war, which will be applied to commissioned officers of Missouri militia not in active service, as well as to officers and soldiers in active service.

By command of Major General Schofield:

C. W. MARSH,
Assistant Adjutant General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
ST. LOUIS, October 20, 1863.

[General Orders No. 120.]

Judges of elections of the various precincts in Missouri are notified that they will be held responsible that at the election on the 3d of November next, those persons, and only those, be permitted to vote who are entitled to do so by the laws of the State; and especially that the ordinance of the State convention, adopted June 10, 1862, and published herewith, be enforced in every case.

It is the duty of judges of election at each precinct in the State to see that every person qualified by the constitution and laws of the State shall be permitted to exercise the elective franchise without let or hindrance; and it is equally their duty to see that those who are not qualified under the constitution and laws, or who refuse to qualify according to the terms of the annexed ordinance, shall not be allowed to vote; and any action on their part excluding qualified voters from the polls, or admitting those who are not qualified as stated, will be punished as a military offence.

Any person who has borne arms against the Government of the United States, or voluntarily given aid and comfort to its enemies during the present rebellion, and who shall presume to act as judge or clerk at said election, and any county judge who shall knowingly appoint any such person as above described to act as judge at said election, will be deemed guilty of violation of military orders, and upon conviction thereof, will be punished accordingly.

In those parts of the State where there is danger of interference by guerrilla bands, or by combinations of persons intended to overawe or intimidate legal voters, district commanders will so dispose their troops as will most certainly prevent such interference.

Where no such protection may be deemed necessary, all troops will absent themselves from the polls entirely; and in all cases when ordered by the district commanders to be present, their action will be strictly confined to the suppression of violence and removing the interference above named, to the end that the laws may be enforced and the purity of the ballot-box maintained. Under the pretext of guarding against violence at the polls, no officer or soldier will be permitted to interfere with the peaceful and legal expression of public sentiment, and no officer will be excused for a willful failure to remove any interference intended to prevent such expression.

District commanders will designate, on the day previous to the election, those counties in their respective districts in which such protection may be deemed necessary, and cause their troops to be disposed accordingly.

Any willful violation of this order will be promptly punished as a military offence.

Missouri troops will vote at the company polls, opened for that purpose at the headquarters of their posts, camps, or detachments, in accordance with the ordinance of the State convention, passed June 12, 1862, and at no other place.

Special attention is directed to General Orders No. 101 from these headquarters, dated September 28, 1863, and its observance strictly enjoined upon all in Missouri.

By command of Major General Schofield:

O. D. GREENE,

Assistant Adjutant General.

Orders Respecting Impressments of Property.

MAJOR GENERAL HARTSUFF'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-THIRD ARMY CORPS,
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY, July 24, 1863.

For the information and guidance of officers in impressing property, it is hereby directed that, whenever its impressment may become necessary for the troops of the twenty-third army corps, it will be taken exclusively from rebels and rebel sympathizers; and so long as the property needed is to be found belonging or pertaining to either of the above-named classes, no man of undoubted loyalty will be molested.

Among rebel sympathizers will be classed those persons in Kentucky, nominally Union men, but opposed to the Government and to the prosecution of the war, whose acts and words alike hinder the speedy and proper termination of the rebellion.

Property will only be taken by the proper staff officers, who will in every case give receipts for it. Appropriate blank receipts will be furnished by the chief commissary and chief quartermaster at these headquarters.

By command of Major General Hartsuff:

GEORGE B. DRAKE, A. A. G.

BRIGADIER GENERAL BOYLE'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY,
LOUISVILLE, July 25, 1863.

By authority of the general commanding the department, the following general order is made:

1. It is ordered that no forage or other property belonging to loyal citizens in the State of Kentucky be seized or impressed except in cases of absolute necessity, and then only on the written authority from the headquarters of the twenty-third army corps or from these headquarters.

2. Whenever it becomes necessary to seize or impress private property for military purposes, the property of sympathizers with the rebellion and of those opposed to furnishing any more men or any more money to maintain the Federal Government and suppress the rebellion will be first seized and impressed.

3. The negroes of loyal citizens will not be impressed on the public works and military roads unless absolutely necessary. The negroes of citizens who are for no more men and no more money to suppress the rebellion, and the supporters, aiders, and abettors of such, will be first impressed, and officers detailed for this purpose are required strictly to observe this order in the execution of their duties.

4. All horses of the enemy captured or subject to capture will be taken possession of by quartermasters and reported to Captain Jenkins, chief quartermaster, Louisville, who is ordered to allow loyal citizens to retain horses to supply the places of those stolen by the enemy; but disloyal persons mentioned in paragraphs two and three, who encourage raids by the enemy, will not in any case be allowed to retain captured horses or horses justly subject to capture.

5. For all property seized or impressed proper and regular vouchers will be given, with indorsement as to the loyalty or disloyalty of the owners of the property.

By order of Brigadier General Boyle:

Action of Congress.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

TO PREVENT OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY FROM INTERFERING IN ELECTIONS.

IN SENATE.

1864, January 5—Mr. POWELL brought in a bill to prevent officers of the army and navy, and other persons engaged in the military service, from interfering in elections in the States; which was ordered to be printed.

June 22—The bill was amended so as to read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for any military officer of the United States, or any person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, to order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men within one mile of the place where any general or special election is held in any State of the United States of America, unless it shall be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls. And that it shall not be lawful for any officer of the army or navy of the United States to prescribe or fix, or attempt to prescribe or fix, by proclamation, order, or otherwise, the qualifications of voters in any State of the United States of America, or in any manner to interfere with the freedom of any election in any State, or with the exercise of the free right of suffrage in any State of the United States. of suffrage in any election district to which he may belong, if otherwise qualified, according to the laws of the State in which he shall offer to vote.

SEC. 2. That any officer or person in the military or naval service of the United States who shall order or advise, or who shall directly or indirectly, by force, threat, menace, intimidation, or otherwise, prevent or attempt to prevent any qualified voter of any State of the United States of America from freely exercising the right of suffrage at any general or special election in any State of the United States, or who shall in like manner compel, or attempt to compel, any officer of an election in any such State to receive a vote from a person not legally qualified to vote, or who shall impose or attempt to impose any rules or regulations for conducting such election different from those prescribed by law, or interfere in any manner with any officer of said election in the discharge of his duties, shall for every such offense be liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine cases of misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall pay a fine not exceeding $5,000, and suffer imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, at the discretion of the court trying the same, and any person convicted as aforesaid shall, moreover, be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the Government of the United States.

The preamble to the bill, which was in these words—

Whereas the so-called Confederate States are a public enemy, waging an unjust war, whose injustice is so glaring that they have no right to claim the mitigation of the extreme rights of war which are accorded by modern usage to an enemy who has a right to consider the war a just one; and whereas none of the States which, by a regularly recorded majority of its citizens, have joined the so-called Southern Confederacy, can be considered and treated as entitled to be represented in Congress, or to take any part in the political government of the Union: Therefore—

The bill authorizes the President to appoint in each of the States declared in rebellion, a Provisional Governor, with the pay and emoluments of a brigadier; to be charged with the civil administration until a State government therein shall be recognized. As soon as the military resistance to the United States shall have been suppressed, and the people sufficiently returned to their obedience to the Constitution and laws, the Governor shall direct the marshal of the United States to enroll all the white male citizens of the United States, resident in the State in their respective counties, and whenever a majority of them take the oath of allegiance, the loyal people of the State shall be entitled to elect delegates to a convention to act upon the re-establishment of a State government—the proclamation to contain details prescribed. Qualified voters in the army may vote in their camps. No person who has held or exercised any civil, military, State, or Confederate office, under the rebel occupation, and who has voluntarily borne arms against the United States, shall vote or be eligible as a delegate. The convention is required to insert in the constitution provisions—

1st. No person who has held or exercised any civil or military office, (except offices merely ministerial and military offices below a colonel,) State or Confederate, under the usurping power, shall vote for, or be a member of the legislature or governor.

2d. Involuntary servitude is forever prohibited, and the freedom of all persons is guaranteed in said State.

3d. No debt, State or Confederate, created by or under the sanction of the usurping power, shall be recognized or paid by the State.

Upon the adoption of the constitution by the convention, and its ratification by the electors of the State, the Provisional Governor shall so certify to the President, who, after obtaining the assent of Congress, shall, by proclamation, recognize the government as established, and none other, as the constitutional government of the State; and from the date of such recognition, and not before, senators and representatives and electors for President and Vice President may be elected in such State. Until reorganization the Provisional Governor shall enforce the laws of the Union and of the State before the rebellion.

The remaining sections are as follows:

SEC. 12. That all persons held to involuntary servitude or labor in the States aforesaid are hereby emancipated and discharged therefrom, and they and their posterity shall be forever free. And if any such persons or their posterity shall be restrained of liberty, under pretence of any claim to such service or labor, the courts of the United States shall, on habeas corpus, discharge them.

SEC. 13. That if any person declared free by this act, or any law of the United States, or any proclamation of the President, be restrained of liberty, with intent to be held in or reduced to involuntary servitude or labor, the person convicted before a court of competent jurisdiction of such act shall be punished by fine of not less than $1,500, and be imprisoned not less than five, nor more than twenty years.

SEC. 14. That every person who shall hereafter hold or exercise any office, civil, or military, except offices merely ministerial and military offices below the grade of colonel, in the rebel service, State or confederate, is hereby declared not to be a citizen of the United States.

IN SENATE.

May 27—Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Territories, reported the bill with two amendments; one fixing the compensation of the provisional Governor at $3,000 a year, and the other striking out the word "white" wherever it occurs.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole,

July 1—Mr. BROWN offered this as a substitute for the bill:

That when the inhabitants of any State have been declared in a state of insurrection against the United States by proclamation of the President, by force and virtue of the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection of duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1861, they shall be, and are hereby declared to be, incapable of casting any vote for electors of President or Vice President of the United States, or of electing Senators or Representatives in Congress, until said insurrection in said State is suppressed or abandoned and said inhabitants have returned to their obedience to the Government of the United States, nor until such return to obedience shall be declared by proclamation of the President issued by virtue of an act of Congress, hereafter to be passed authorizing the same.

Which was agreed to—yeas 17, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. BROWN, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Van Winkle—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Hale, Harlan, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson—16.

Mr. SUMNER proposed the following new section:

TO MAKE THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION A STATUTE.

That the proclamation of emancipation issued by the President of the United States on the first day of January, 1863, so far as the same declares that the slaves in certain designated States and parts of States thenceforward should be free, is hereby adopted and enacted as a statute of the United States, and as a rule and article for the government of the military and naval forces thereof.

gan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Powell, Saulsbury—3.

July 2—The House non concurred in the amendment of the Senate, and asked a Committee of Conference; but the Senate, on motion, receded from its amendments—(thus passing the House bill)—yeas 18, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Foot, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilson—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Doolittle, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle—14.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION RESPECTING IT.

The PRESIDENT failed to approve this bill; and, July 8, 1864, issued this proclamation respecting it:

Whereas, at the late session, Congress passed a bill "to guarantee to certain States, whose governments have been usurped or overthrown, a republican form of government," a copy of which is hereunto annexed;

And whereas the said bill was presented to the President of the United States for his approval less than one hour before the sine die adjournment of said session, and was not signed by him;

And whereas the said bill contains, among other things, a plan for restoring the States in rebellion to their proper practical relation in the Union, which plan expresses the sense of Congress upon that subject, and which plan it is now thought fit to lay before the people for their consideration:

Now, therefore, I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, do proclaim, declare, and make known, that, while I am (as I was in December last, when by proclamation I propounded a plan for restoration) unprepared, by a formal approval of this bill, to be inflexibly committed to any single plan of restoration; and, while I am also unprepared to declare that the free State constitutions and governments already adopted and installed in Arkansas and Louisiana shall be set aside and held for naught, thereby repelling and discouraging the loyal citizens who have set up the same as to further effort, or to declare a constitutional competency in Congress to abolish slavery in States, but am at the same time sincerely hoping and expecting that a constitutional amendment abolishing slavery throughout the nation may be adopted, nevertheless I am fully satisfied with the system for restoration contained in the bill as one very proper plan for the loyal people of any State choosing to adopt it, and that I am, and at all times shall be, prepared to give the Executive aid and assistance to any such people, so soon as the military resistance to the United States shall have been suppressed in any such State, and the people thereof shall have sufficiently returned to their obedience to the Constitution and laws of the United States, in which cases Military Governors will be appointed, with directions to proceed according to the bill.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF REBEL STATES.

June 13—Mr. GARFIELD introduced a joint resolution resolving that no State declared to be in rebellion by proclamation of the President is entitled to appoint electors of President and Vice President, and that no electoral vote from any such State shall be received or counted until both Houses of Congress, by concurrent action, shall have recognized a State government in such State.

It was read a first and second time; was ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time, under the operation of the previous question, when the following proceedings took place:

Mr. McKINNEY. Is it in order to inquire whether Mr. Johnson could be a candidate for the Vice Presidency under that rule?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to make the inquiry.

Mr. BLAINE. Is it too late now to raise a point of order?

The SPEAKER. It is entirely too late. The joint resolution has received its third reading, and the main question has been ordered on its passage.

Mr. BLAINE. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has; but the House has ordered the main question to be now put.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Which was agreed to—yeas 104, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Bailey, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Boutwell, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Coffey, Cor, Cravens, Dawes, Denison, Dixon, Briggs, Eden, Elgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Farnsworth, Fenton, Finch, Frank, Ganson, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Rollins, Ross, Scofield, Sloan, Smith, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Thayer, Thomas, Wadsworth, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Windom, Fernando Wood—104.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Brandegee, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Eckley, Garfield, Higby, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Lazarus Longyear, McClurg, Merrill, Daniel Morris, Norton, Shannon Smithers, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Williams, Woodbridge—33.

June 20—Mr. ASHLEY asked leave to offer this joint resolution, but it was objected to:

Resolved, &c., That when the inhabitants of any State have been declared in a state of insurrection against the United States by proclamation of the President, by force and virtue of the act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1861, they shall be and are hereby declared to be incapable of casting any vote for electors of President or Vice President of the United States, or of electing Senators or Representatives in Congress, until said insurrection in said State is suppressed or abandoned, and said inhabitants have returned to their obedience to the Constitution and Government of the United States, nor until such return to obedience shall be declared by proclamation of the President, issued by virtue of an act of Congress authorizing the same.

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY.

June 22—Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Elections, in the application of certain persons to be received as Representatives from Arkansas, made a report, which closes with this joint resolution:

Resolved, &c., That there be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, a commission consisting of three persons, residents of States not involved in the present rebellion, whose duty it shall be during the recess of the present Congress to visit those States declared by the proclamation of the President to have been in rebellion, and which have already taken or may before the next session of the present Congress take measures to establish or reorganize State governments, and after careful examination and hearing testimony report to the President for the information of Congress at as early day in the next session as possible all such evidence as they may be able to obtain upon the question, whether the loyal people in any such States have succeeded in re-establishing a State government, to what extent &c.; State government represents and has the support of the loyal people in such State, and what is the ability of such people therein to maintain the same against domestic violence.

Resolved further, That until Congress shall be satisfied upon evidence submitted to them that the rebellion has so far been suppressed in any such State that there has been established therein a State government, republican in form, and prohibiting the existence of slavery in the same, and so firmly established as to be able to maintain itself against domestic violence, representation from any such State ought not to be admitted into either branch of Congress.

Mr. JAMES S. BROWN, from the Minority Committee, presented these resolutions:

Whereas by article six of the Constitution of the United States it and the laws made in pursuance thereof are declared to be the supreme law of the land, and every act of secession by any State is in direct violation of such supreme laws: Therefore,

Resolved, That the acts of secession by the Legislatures of the several States whose people are now in rebellion are mere nullities, having no force or effect to change the relation either of States themselves or of the people thereof toward the General Government; and that by such acts the people neither freed themselves from the penalties attaching by law to treason nor lost any rights as citizens of the States and United States, except such as may follow upon conviction of crime; that the duty of the people of such States to send true and loyal men to Congress, and the right so to do as consequent upon the duty, still remain by force of the Constitution, requiring no act of the President or Congress to confirm them; that no State can under the Constitution assent to the presence of armed rebels from other States within its borders, and that any act of the authorities of a State giving such assent is a nullity; that the entrance of such armed rebels of one State upon Territories of another is an invasion from which by article four of the Constitution the United States are bound to protect the invaded State; that this obligation of protection on the part of the United States is due to each citizen individually as a consequence of his duty of allegiance, and continues so long as there is a single loyal citizen in a State oppressed by such invasion; that so long as the Constitution and laws of the United States cannot be enforced in any congressional district on account of the presence of armed rebels there can be no free election, and a person claiming a seat through an election under such circumstances should be rejected.

Be it further resolved, That the Constitution, in article two, determines the qualifications of electors for Representatives, and that any order of the President or act of Congress changing such qualifications would be a usurpation and a nullity.

Be it further resolved, That whenever by pestilence, foreign invasion, or domestic conspiracy, the officers of a State required by its laws to conduct an election have been destroyed or carried off, the State does not thereby cease to exist, nor do its people forfeit their rights as citizens of the States or of the United States, but, from the very necessity of the case, and by virtue of the power impliedly reserved to the people, they may, in a practicable and reasonable manner, supply the deficiency, and hold an election, conducting it, however, as far as possible, in conformity with the existing laws and Constitution of the State; and the duty of Congress in passing upon such an election claimed to be held under such circumstances is limited to ascertaining whether it was a fair expression of a majority of the people, and in the mode of conducting it departed from the general laws of the State only so far as was necessary to supply the deficiency of officers required to conduct the election.

Be it further resolved, That the right of the claimants from Arkansas should be determined by the principles here enunciated; and if they shall satisfy the House that the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State held peaceful sway over their respective districts, that in their elections they departed in nothing from the Constitution and existing laws of that State, save in supplying requisite officers, and that they received a vote of a majority in their respective districts, then they are entitled to seats, but not otherwise.

A motion to table the whole subject was lost—yeas 43, nays 63.

A motion to postpone until next session, was lost—yeas 50, nays 78.

June 29—The report was further debated, when, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, the whole subject was laid on the table—yeas 80, nays 47, as follows:—

YEAS—Messrs. *William J. Allen, Allison, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Beaman, Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, Cole, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. FREE STATE GOVERNMENT IN ARKANSAS.

June 10—Mr. LANE of Kansas, introduced this joint resolution:

For the recognition of the free State government of the State of Arkansas.

Whereas the President of the United States, by proclamation of the 1st of January, A. D. 1863, did, among other things, proclaim and declare that the "people" of Arkansas "are this day in rebellion" against the United States; and whereas the loyal people of the State of Arkansas have, since that time, by a free and untrammelled vote, organized and have in operation a State government upon a free basis and republican in form; and whereas, pending the organization of said government, the President of the United States did, by proclamation of the 8th day of December, A. D. 1863, invite, among others, the people of Arkansas to organize a loyal State government upon a free basis; and whereas the President of the United States approved said organization in the State of Arkansas and officially recognized the same: Therefore,

Be it resolved, &c., That so much of the proclamation or proclamations of the President of the United States, and so much of all laws of Congress, as declares the people or State of Arkansas in rebellion, be, and is hereby, declared inoperative and void.

Sec. 2. That the present organized government in the State of Arkansas be, and it is hereby, recognized, upon the condition that slavery and involuntary servitude shall never exist in said State, except as a punishment for crime.

June 11—Mr. LANE of Kansas, offered this additional resolution:

Sec. 3. That this joint resolution shall be in force from and after the acceptance of its provisions by the people of the said State and proclamation of the same by the President of the United States.

He also offered this resolution, which was adopted:

That the President of the United States be requested to furnish to the Senate copies of all correspondence, orders, and documents on file in the Departments in relation to the organization by the loyal people of Arkansas of the free State government of that State.

June 13—The Senate considered the joint resolution; refused—yeas 5, (Messrs. Chandler, Howard, Richardson, Sumner, Wade,) nays 32, to lay the subject on the table, and then referred it to the Committee on the Judiciary, and with it the resolution of Mr. SUMNER, offered May 27, as follows:

That a State pretending to secede from the Union and battling against the national Government to maintain this pretension must be regarded as a rebel State, subject to military occupation, and without title to representation on this floor until it has been readmitted by a vote of both Houses of Congress; and the Senate will decline to entertain any application from any such rebel State until after such vote of both Houses of Congress.

ADMISSION OF SENATORS FROM ARKANSAS.

IN SENATE.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

1864, June 27—Mr. TRUMBULL made this report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the credentials of William M. Fishback and Elisha Baxter, claiming seats from the State of Arkansas, report:

That the credentials are presented in due form, purporting to be under the seal of the State of Arkansas, and to be signed by Isaac Murphy, Governor thereof; and if the right to seats were to be determined by an inspection of the credentials, Messrs. Fishback and Baxter would be entitled to be sworn as members of this body. It is, however, admitted by the persons claiming seats, and known to the country, that in the spring of 1861, the State of Arkansas, through its constituted authorities, undertook to secede from the Union, set up a government in hostility to the United States, and maintain the same by force of arms. Congress, in view of the condition of affairs in Arkansas and some other States similarly situated passed an act, July 13, 1861, authorizing the President, in case of an insurrection in any State against the laws of the United States, and when the insurgents claimed to act under authority of the State, and such claim was not repudiated, nor the insurrection suppressed by the persons exercising the functions of government in such State, to declare the inhabitants of such State or part thereof where such insurrection existed, to be in a state of insurrection against the United States; and that, thereupon, all commercial intercourse by and between the same and the citizens of the United States, except under license and upon certain conditions, should cease and be unlawful so long as such condition of hostility should continue.

In pursuance of this act, the President, August 16, 1861, issued his proclamation declaring the inhabitants of the State of Arkansas, except the inhabitants of such parts thereof as should maintain a loyal adhesion to the Union and the Constitution, or might be from time to time occupied and controlled by forces of the United States engaged in the dispersion of said insurgents, to be in a state of insurrection against the United States, and that all commercial intercourse between them and citizens of other States was and would be unlawful, except when carried on under special license, until such insurrection should cease. At the date of this proclamation no part of the State of Arkansas was occupied and controlled by the forces of the United States, nor did the inhabitants of any part of the State, at that time, publicly maintain a loyal adhesion to the Union and the Constitution. Hence, upon the issuing of said proclamation, a state of hostility or civil war existed between the inhabitants of the State of Arkansas and the United States, and there was not at that time any organized authority in Arkansas, loyal to the Constitution, competent to choose or appoint Senators of the United States. It is claimed, however, that since that period the State, or the greater portion of it, has been occupied and controlled by the forces of the United States, engaged in the dispersion of the insurgents, and that the inhabitants of said State, loyal to the Union and the Constitution, have reorganized their State government, and have the right, through the Legislature they have instituted, to choose two Senators for said State.

The Constitution declares that "the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years," and makes each House "the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members." In the investigation of the claimants' right to seats, the first question to be determined is, was the body by whom they were elected clothed with authority to elect Senators; in other words, was it, in a constitutional sense, "the Legislature of Arkansas?"

A question similar to this arose some years since between Robbins and Potter, each claiming to have been elected Senator by the Legislature of Rhode Island, though by different bodies. In that case the Senate was called upon to decide, and did decide, which of the two bodies, each claiming to be legitimate, was the Legislature contemplated by the Constitution. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Luther vs. Borden, growing out of the political difficulties in Rhode Island in 1841 and 1842, held that "when the Senators and Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union, the authority of the government under which they are appointed, as well as its republican character, is recognized by the proper constitutional authority. And its decision is binding on every other department of the Government."

The claimants laid before the committee a statement of the circumstances attending the assembling of the body by which they were elected, in which, after detailing the condition of the State while under rebel control, and prior to September, 1863, they say: "Upon the advent of the Union army the rebels in the State, guerrillas and all, for the most part left with their armies, leaving about two-thirds of the State comparatively free from guerrilla depredation."

"The Union men came flocking from the mountains, where they had lain for two years, to the Federal standard, and nearly every man whom the medical examiners would receive joined the Federal army."

"Those who were rejected, (and their number was enormous, their constitutions having been broken by exposure and their hardships,) and those whom circumstances prevented from joining the army, found themselves, so far as law was concerned, in a state of chaos. Many of them, living remote from military posts, had not even the protection of military law."

"Immediately they began to agitate the question of a reorganization of their State government. They first moved in primary meetings, and on the 30th of October, 1863, they held a mass meeting in the city of Fort Smith, in which some twenty counties are said to have been represented, and at which they called upon all counties in the State to elect delegates (after having elected commissioners of election) to a State convention, to be held in the city of Little Rock on the 5th day of January, 1864, for the purpose of so amending the constitution as to abolish slavery. Simultaneously with this meeting, meetings were held in a number of other counties. In every single one (in ignorance of the action of others in many instances) they declared for a convention and the abolition of slavery."

"Commissioners of election were first elected, and they held the election for the delegates."

"All this was prior to the President's amnesty proclamation."

"When the convention met, forty-five delegates were present, representing about one-half of the State. (Several of the delegates failed to attend.) They repudiated the rebel debt, State and Confederate, abolished slavery, and submitted the constitution to the people for their ratification. They also provided for taking the vote for State and county officers, and members of the legislature at the same time with the vote for the ratification of the constitution."

"The result of those elections was 12,177 for the constitution and 226 against it, an election of State and county officers, an election of delegates to the lower house of Congress, and a representation in the State legislature from forty-six of the fifty-four counties of the State."

The number of persons in Arkansas who voted for President in 1860 was 54,053, less than one-fourth of whom as appears from the statement of the claimants, took part in the reorganization of the State government. This, however, would not be fatal to the reorganization, if all who were loyal to the Union had an opportunity to participate, and the State was free from military control. Such, however, is understood not to have been the case. The President had not then, nor has he up to this time, recalled his proclamation, which declared the inhabitants of Arkansas in a state of insurrection against the United States, nor was there any evidence before the committee that said insurrection had ceased or been suppressed. At the time when the body which chose the claimants was elected, when it assembled, and at this time, the State of Arkansas is occupied by hostile armies, which exercise supreme authority within the districts subject to their control. While a portion of Arkansas is at this very time, as the committee are informed, in the actual possession and subject to the control of the enemies of the United States, other parts of the State are only held in subordination to the laws of the Union by the strong arm of military power. While this state of things continues, and the right to exercise armed authority over a large part of the State is claimed and exerted by the military power, it cannot be said that a civil government, set up and continued only by the suzerainty of the military, is that republican form of government which the Constitution requires the United States to guarantee to every State in the Union.

When the rebellion in Arkansas shall have been so far suppressed that the loyal inhabitants thereof shall be free to re-establish their State government upon a republican foundation, or to recognize the one already set up, and by the aid and not in subordination to the military to maintain the same, they will then, and not before, in the opinion of your committee, be entitled to a representation in Congress, and to participate in the administration of the Federal Government. Believing that such a state of things did not at the time the claimants were elected, and does not now, exist in the State of Arkansas, the committee recommend for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That William M. Fishback and Elisha Baxter are not entitled to seats as Senators from the State of Arkansas.

1864, June 29—The resolution of the Committee on the Judiciary was adopted—yeas 27, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Harris, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Powell, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Doolittle, Hicks, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Pomeroy—6.

Process of Reconstruction.

In ARKANSAS, a new State government is organized with Isaac Murphy, Governor, who was reported to have received nearly 16,000 votes at a called election. The other State officers are Lieutenant Governor, C. C. Bliss; Secretary of State, R. J. T. White; Auditor, J. B. Berry; Treasurer, E. D. Ayers; Attorney General, C. T. Jordan; Judges of the Supreme Court, T. D. W. Yowley, C. A. Harper, E. Baker.

The legislature also elected Senators, but neither Senators nor Representatives obtained their seats.

In LOUISIANA, a free State government has also been organized—Michael Hahn, Governor. The clause in the constitution abolishing slavery was adopted in convention—yeas 72, nays 13. The legislature is prohibited from passing any law recognizing the right of property in slaves. At the election for Governor, 10,725 votes were polled; one parish, (Terrebonne,) 630 votes, not in the official count. J. Madison Wells is Lieutenant Governor; Stanislaus Wrotnowski, Secretary of State; J. G. Belden, Treasurer; B. L. Lynch, Attorney General; A. P. Dostie, Auditor; John McNair, School Superintendent.

In VIRGINIA, the constitutional convention, recently in session in Alexandria, abolished slavery—yeas 13, nays 1, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Beach, Boush, Downey, Dix, Edwards, Gover, Henshaw, Hawxhurst, Penn, Thomas, Tannis, Wood, Watkins—13.

NAYS—Mr. Moore.

IN LOUISIANA.

1863, June 19—The President wrote this letter:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, June 19, 1863.

GENTLEMEN: Since receiving your letter, reliable information has reached me that a respectable portion of the Louisiana people desire to amend their State constitution, and contemplate holding a convention for that object. This fact alone, it seems to me, is a sufficient reason why the General Government should not give the committee the authority you seek, to act under the existing State constitution. I may add, that while I do not perceive how such a committee could facilitate our military operations in Louisiana, I really apprehend it might be so used as to embarrass them.

As to an election to be held in November, there is abundant time without any order or proclamation from me just now. The people of Louisiana shall not lack an opportunity for a fair election for both Federal and State officers by want of anything within my power to give them.

Your obedient servant, A. LINCOLN.

IN ARKANSAS.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, January 20, 1864.

Major General STEELE: Sundry citizens of the State of Arkansas petition me that an election may be held in that State, at which to elect a Governor; that it be assumed at that election, and thenceforward, that the constitution and laws of the State, as before the rebellion, are in full force, except that the constitution is so modified as to declare that there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except in the punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted; that the General Assembly may make such provisions for the freed people as shall recognize and declare their permanent freedom, and provide for their education, and which may yet be construed as a temporary arrangement, suitable to their present condition as a laboring, landless, and homeless class; that said election shall be held on the 28th March, 1864, at all the usual places of the State, for all such voters as may attend for that purpose; that the voters attending at each place at eight o'clock in the morning of said day may choose judges and clerks of election for that purpose; that all persons qualified by said constitution and laws, and taking the oath presented in the President's proclamation of December 8, 1863, either before or at the election, and none others, may be voters; that each set of judges and clerks may make returns directly to you on or before the — day of — next; that in all other respects said election may be conducted according to said modified constitution and laws; that, on receipt of said returns, when 5,406 votes shall have been cast, you can receive said votes and ascertain all who shall thereby appear to have been elected; that, on the — day of — next, all persons so appearing to have been elected, who shall appear before you at Little Rock and take the oath, to be by you severally administered, to support the Constitution of the United States and the modified constitution of the State of Arkansas, shall be declared by you qualified and empowered to immediately enter upon the duties of the offices to which they shall have been respectively elected.

You will please order an election to take place on the 28th of March, 1864, and returns to be made in fifteen days thereafter.

A. LINCOLN.

WASHINGTON, February 18, 1864.

TO WILLIAM M. FISHBACK:

When I formed a plan for an election in Arkansas, I did it in ignorance that your convention was at the same work. Since I learned the latter fact, I have been constantly trying to yield my plan to them. I have sent two letters to General Steele, and three or four dispatches to you and others, saying that he (General Steele) must be master, but that it will probably be best for him to keep the convention on its own plan. Some single mind must be master, else there will be no agreement on anything, and General Steele, commanding the military and being on the ground, is the best man to be that master. Even now citizens are telegraphing me to postpone the election to a later day than either affixed by the convention or me. This discord must be silenced.

A. LINCOLN.

RELATIONS OF THE REBELLIOUS STATES TO THE GOVERNMENT.

IN SENATE.

Second Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

1862, Feb. 11.—Mr. SUMNER offered the following resolutions:

Resolutions declaratory of the relations between the United States and the territory once occupied by certain States, and now usurped by pretended governments, without constitutional or legal right.

Whereas certain States, rightfully belonging to the Union of the United States, have through their respective governments wickedly undertaken to abjure all those duties by which their connection with the Union was maintained; to renounce all allegiance to the Constitution; to levy war upon the national Government; and, for the consummation of this treason, have unconstitutionally and unlawfully confederated together, with the declared purpose of putting an end by force to the supremacy of the Constitution within their respective limits; and whereas this condition of insurrection, organized by pretended governments, openly exists in South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Virginia, except in Eastern Tennessee and Western Virginia, and has been declared by the President of the United States, in a proclamation duly made in conformity with an act of Congress, to exist throughout this territory, with the exceptions already named; and whereas the extensive territory thus usurped by these pretended governments and organized into a hostile confederation, belongs to the United States, as an inseparable part thereof, under the sanctions of the Constitution, to be held in trust for the inhabitants in the present and future generations, and is so completely interlinked with the Union that it is forever dependent thereupon; and whereas the Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land, cannot be displaced in its rightful operation within this territory, but must ever continue the supreme law thereof, notwithstanding the doings of any pretended governments acting singly or in confederation, in order to put an end to its supremacy: Therefore—

1. Resolved, That any vote of secession or other act by which any State may undertake to put an end to the supremacy of the Constitution within its territory is inoperative and void against the Constitution, and when sustained by force it becomes a practical abdication by the State of all rights under the Constitution, while the treason which it involves still further works an instant forfeiture of all those functions and powers essential to the continued existence of the State as a body politic, so that from that time forward the territory falls under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress as other territory, and the State being, according to the language of the law, felon-de-se, ceases to exist.

2. That any combination of men assuming to act in the place of such State, attempting to insure or coerce the inhabitants thereof into a confederation hostile to the Union is rebellious, treasonable, and destitute of all moral authority; and that such combination is a usurpation inequitable of any constitutional existence and utterly lawless, so that everything dependent upon it is without constitutional or legal support.

3. That the termination of a State under the Constitution necessarily causes the termination of those peculiar local institutions which, having no origin in the Constitution or in those natural rights which exist independent of the Constitution, are upheld by the sole and exclusive authority of the State.

4. That slavery, being a peculiar local institution, derived from local laws, without any origin in the Constitution or in natural rights, is upheld by the sole and exclusive authority of the State, and must therefore cease to exist legally or constitutionally when the State on which it depends no longer exists; for the incident cannot survive the principal.

5. That in the exercise of its exclusive jurisdiction over the territory once occupied by the States, it is the duty of Congress to see that the supremacy of the Constitution is maintained in its essential principles, so that everywhere in this extensive territory slavery shall cease to exist practically, as it has already ceased to exist constitutionally or legally.

6. That any recognition of slavery in such territory, or any surrender of slaves under the pretended laws of the extinct States by any officer of the United States, civil or military, is a recognition of the pretended governments, to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of Congress under the Constitution, and is in the nature of aid and comfort to the rebellion that has been organized.

7. That any such recognition of slavery or surrender of pretended slaves, besides being a recognition of the pretended governments, giving them aid and comfort, is a denial of the rights of persons who, by the extinction of the States have become free, so that under the Constitution, they cannot again be enslaved.

8. That allegiance from the inhabitant and protection from the Government are corresponding obligations, dependent upon each other, so that while the allegiance of every inhabitant of this territory, without distinction of color or class, is due to the United States, and cannot in any way be defeated by the action of any pretended Government, or by any pretence of property or claim to service, the corresponding obligation of protection is at the same time due by the United States to every such inhabitant, without distinction of color or class; and it follows that inhabitants held as slaves, whose paramount allegiance is due to the United States, may justly look to the national Government for protection.

9. That the duty directly cast upon Congress by the extinction of the States is reinforced by the positive prohibition of the Constitution that "no State shall enter into any confederation," or "without the consent of Congress keep troops or ships-of-war in time of peace, or enter into any agreement or compact with another State," or "grant letters of marque and reprisal," or "coin money," or "emit bills of credit," or "without the consent of Congress lay any duties on imports or exports," all of which have been done by these pretended governments, and also by the positive injunction of the Constitution, addressed to the nation, that "the United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government;" and that in pursuance of this duty cast upon Congress, and further enjoined by the Constitution, Congress will assume complete jurisdiction of such vacated territory where such unconstitutional and illegal things have been attempted, and will proceed to establish therein republican forms of government under the Constitution; and in the execution of this trust will provide carefully for the protection of all the inhabitants thereof, for the security of families, the organization of labor, the encouragement of industry, and the welfare of society, and will in every way discharge the duties of a just, merciful, and paternal Government.

Feb. 13.—Mr. GARRETT DAVIS offered these resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Constitution of the United States is the fundamental law of the Government, and the powers established and granted, and as parted out and vested by it, the limitations and restrictions which it imposes upon the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and the States, and the rights, privileges, and liberties which it assures to the people of the United States, and the States respectively, are fixed, permanent, and immutable through all the phases of peace and war, until changed by the power and in the mode prescribed by the Constitution itself; and they cannot be abrogated, restricted, enlarged, or differently apportioned, or vested, by any other power, or in any other mode.

2. That between the Government and the citizen the obligation of protection and obedience form mutual rights and obligations; and to enable every citizen to perform his obligations of obedience and loyalty to the Government it should give him reasonable protection and security in such performance; and when the Government fails in that respect, for it to hold the citizen to be criminal is not performing his duties of loyalty and obedience would be unjust, inhuman, and an outrage upon this age of Christian civilization.

3. That if any powers of the Constitution or Government of the United States, or of the States, or any rights, privileges, immunities, and liberties of the people of the United States, or the States, are, or may hereafter be, suspended by the existence of this war, or by any promulgation of martial law, or by the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, immediately upon the termination of the war such powers, rights, privileges, immunities, and liberties would be resumed, and would have force and effect as though they had not been suspended.

4. That the duty of Congress to guarantee to every State a republican form of government, to protect each of them against invasion, and, on the application of the legislature or executive thereof, against domestic violence, and to enforce the authority, Constitution, and laws of the United States in all the States, are constitutional obligations which which abide all times and circumstances.

5. That no State can, by any vote of secession, or by rebellion against the authority, Constitution, and laws of the United States, or by any other act, abdicate her rights or obligations under that Constitution or those laws, or absolve her people from their obedience to them, or the United States from their obligation to guarantee to such State a republican form of government, and to protect her people by causing the due enforcement within her territories of the authority, Constitution, and laws of the United States.

6. That there cannot be any forfeiture or confiscation of the rights of person or property of any citizen of the United States who is loyal and obedient to the authority, Constitution and the laws thereof, or of any person whatsoever, unless for acts which the law has previously declared to be criminal, and for the punishment of which it has provided such forfeiture or confiscation.

7. That it is the duty of the United States to subdue and punish the existing rebellion by force of arms and civil trials in the shortest practicable time, and with the least cost to the people, but so decisively and thoroughly as to impress upon the present and future generations as a great truth that rebellion, except for grievous oppression of government, will bring upon the rebels incomparably more of evil than obedience to the Constitution and the laws.

8. That the United States Government should march their armies into all the insurgent States, and promptly put down the military power which they have arrayed against it, and give protection and security to the loyal men thereof, to enable them to reconstruct their legitimate State governments, and bring them and the people back to the Union and to obedience and duty under the Constitution and the laws of the United States, bearing the sword in one hand and the olive branch in the other, and whilst inflicting on the guilty leaders condign and exemplary punishment, granting amnesty and oblivion to the comparatively innocent masses; and if the people of any State cannot, or will not, reconstruct their State government and return to loyalty and duty, Congress should provide a government for such State as a territory of the United States, securing to the people thereof their appropriate constitutional rights.

1862, June 11.—Mr. DIXON offered this resolution:

Resolved, That all acts or ordinances of secession, alleged to have been adopted by any legislature or convention of the people of any State, are, as to the Federal Union, absolutely null and void; and that while such acts may and do subject the individual actors therein to forfeitures and penalties, they do not, in any degree, affect the relations of the State wherein they purport to have been adopted to the Government of the United States, but are as to such Government acts of rebellion, insurrection, and hostility, on the part of the individuals engaged therein, or giving assent thereto; and that such States are, notwithstanding such acts or ordinances, members of the Federal Union, and as such are subject to all the obligations and duties imposed upon them by the Constitution of the United States; and the loyal citizens of such States are entitled to all the rights and privileges thereby guaranteed or conferred.

IN HOUSE.

1862, May 26.—Mr. WICKLIFFE presented these resolutions:

Resolved, That the Constitution, and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made under the authority of the United States, are the supreme law of the land in time of war or rebellion, as well as in time of peace, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

2. The right to disregard and violate the Constitution, or any part thereof, by either of the departments of the Government, does not exist any more in time of war or rebellion than in time of peace.

3. That the powers vested in Congress by the Constitution of the United States are not enlarged by a state of war, but are ample and full to enable the Government to suppress a rebellion, or to prosecute a war, without the exercise of powers not granted therein.

4. A disregard of the provisions of the Constitution, under the plea of necessity, by Congress, is dangerous to free government, and ultimately will make it a despotism if controlled by an unprincipled majority, dangerous to private rights and destructive of public liberty.

5. That no State has the right, by any act, ordinance, or law, to absolve itself or any citizens from their obligations and duties imposed by the Constitution of the United States.

6. A rebellion and open resistance to the Constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, cannot abrogate the same; but during such rebellion and resistance the rights and powers of the Constitution do extend to the citizen in every portion of the United States, and the right and power of the Government, though obstructed, are not destroyed. And when that obstruction shall be overcome, the State governments and the citizens thereof are restored to all the rights and privileges secured by the Constitution.

7. That open and forcible resistance, by arms, by the citizens of any portion of the United States is treason, to be punished as such by the power of the Government under the provisions and limitations of the Constitution.

8. That a citizen not engaged in actual war, but who resides within the territory of a de facto Government, which is in rebellion and at war with the United States, is not guilty of treason by obeying the orders of such de facto Government, or by contributing to its support.

9. That neither the Executive nor military has the right to seize the property of a non-combatant in any of the seceded States, and confiscate the same, even under the authority of an act of Congress. "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law," is the language of the Constitution. Therefore, all wholesale bills confiscating estates, or property of any kind, whether lands, slaves, or chattels, are in violation of the laws of Christian warfare, and forbidden by the Constitution of the United States.

Third Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

1863, January 8—Mr. CLEMENTS offered this resolution, which went over:

Resolved, That the acts of secession claiming to have been passed by a part of the people of a part of the States of this Government were null and void, and of no effect; and that the State Constitutions and laws of the States so claiming to have seceded are the same as they were previous to said acts; they have not committed State suicide, for their Constitutions and laws still exist in the loyal people.

IN SENATE.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

1864, Jan. 5—Mr. GARRETT DAVIS offered these resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Government of the United States was established by the people of States which before had been separate, sovereign, and independent; and they formed their common national Government by a written Constitution, and delegated to it so much of their sovereign political power as they adjudged to be necessary and proper to enable it to manage all their affairs with foreign nations and among the several States; and, both by its leading principle and express provision, they reserved "to the States, respectively, or to the people," "all powers not delegated to the United States, nor prohibited by it to the States."

2. That our system consists of a limited national Government for the whole United States, of supreme authority as to all the powers with which the Constitution has invested it, and State governments for each State, formed by the people thereof, and holding the entire residuum of political sovereignty within their respective States—each government, within its sphere, being alike supreme; and as the governors, and all other civil and military officers of the States, as other individuals, may commit treason against the United States, "by levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort," so the President of the United States, and the civil and military officers thereof, may commit treason against any State whose government is in the performance of its duties under the Federal Constitution, by levying war against it, or in adhering to its enemies, giving them aid and comfort, as resisting with an armed force the execution of its laws, or adhering to such armed force, giving it aid and comfort.

3. That in all the States, and parts of States, where the laws of the United States and the States can be executed, the military authorities should not be brought into conflict with the civil power, but should be strictly held to be, as they rightfully are, in subordination to it.

4. That all elections to civil offices, Federal or State, should be in strict accordance with the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the States, respectively, and be understood by officers appointed by the proper authorities for that purpose; and where from the presence or apprehension of force, violence, or other cause, any election cannot be so conducted, it ought not to be held at all; and every election at which any military force may interfere by imposing additional oaths or qualifications for the electors, or regulations for conducting the said election, or by changing or modifying the oaths and qualifications of the electors, or regulations to govern it, provided as by law, or to constrain, control, or direct the officers of such election in conducting it, should be held to be void and of no effect.

5. That the experience of the world proves that there can be neither security nor liberty in any country without wise and just laws, firmly sustained and uniformly executed; and that this is the life, the spirit, the soul of the nation; and all neglect and departures from law, and particularly from constitutional law, by agents appointed to administer it, although sometimes attended with seeming advantage, are sure to produce always, sooner or later, much greater and more enduring mischief: wherefore, disregard of law by such agents is never tolerated by a wise and free people.

6. That the powers of the Government of the United States are derived wholly from, and limited by the Constitution, and by it are divided into legislative, executive, and judicial; and each class of those powers is vested in a separate department; that the President is the chief of the executive department, and has no legislative or judicial power whatever, and only such executive powers as are enumerated in the second and third sections of the second article of the Constitution, and such other powers as may be, from time to time, conferred upon him by Congress in virtue of this provision: "Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof."

7. That the President cannot be divested of any powers with which he is directly invested by the Constitution, nor controlled or interfered with in their execution, but all powers conferred on him by law of Congress he holds in subordination to that department, which may supervise, modify, and correct his execution of them, or resume them, by repealing the laws intrusting their execution to him.

8. That the power of the President to recognize the existence of a state of case amounting to "an invasion, or imminent danger of an invasion, of the United States," or "insurrection in any State against the government thereof," or "obstruction to the execution of the laws of the United States by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings," and to call forth the military power to meet such conditions, is conferred on him by the laws of Congress; and the repeal of those laws would withdraw from the President all that power.

9. That Congress is invested with the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States," "to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water," "to raise and support armies," "to provide and maintain a navy," "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions," "to provide for arming, organizing, and disciplining the militia, and governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States," "to guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and to protect each of them against invasion;" and thus the entire war power and quasi war power, external and internal, of the Government, is vested by the Constitution in Congress, and no part of it whatever in the President.

10. That whenever there is an insurrection in the United States, Congress is vested with the power to suppress it, and with no other power whatever over the insurrection; and when it is suppressed, either by the arms of the United States or by the submission of the insurgents to the Constitution, laws, and authorities thereof, thereupon the power of Congress over the whole subject is exhausted, and the insurgents are immediately reinitiated to all the rights, privileges, liberties, and duties of citizens, subject to such forfeiture thereof as may have been declared by law, after it shall have been adjudged by the civil courts in the mode prescribed by the Constitution: and Congress, much less the President, has no power to impose upon them any other terms or conditions.

11. That the whole power and duty of the President, in the existing insurrection, is to grant pardons to those engaged in it, and, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, to direct their operations for its suppression: and as such, his powers are strictly military, and are not different or greater than would be those of the senior general in the service, if the Constitution had designated him to be the Commander-in-Chief: the power to devise a policy or measures for its suppression is legislative, to which the President is incompetent, whether as the first executive officer of the Government, or Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy.

12. That the law of military necessity is not established, but only tolerated, in the United States. It does not, nor cannot, in peace or war abrogate or suspend the Constitution in whole or in part. It cannot authorize arbitrary arrests and imprisonment, or in any way interfere with the person of the citizen, but only with his property. It does not appertain to the President, or to the Commander-in-Chief, unless he be in the actual command of a military force, and then only under particular circumstances. It results from a present and urgent need of an army or military corps, which is so pressing that it cannot await other modes, but must be supplied anywhere within its reach by its own power and action. It is not an expediency, but a necessity of a military body, and creates a law and confers a power, for the occasion only, on its commander, of whatever grade he may be, to supply that necessity by taking property with summary military force, without depriving the owner of his right to be compensated for it by the United States. Each case of military necessity makes its own law, adapted to its own peculiar circumstances, and expiring with that particular necessity. There is not, and cannot be, any uniform, permanent, or even continuing law of military necessity. The idea that a law always accidental, evanescent, and, in truth, so inconsiderable, should have the magic force to enable Abraham Lincoln to bound over the Constitution and all its limitations and restrictions, and clutch the vast powers which he claims under it, is a gigantic absurdity.

13. That at the beginning of the war, under the panic of the defeat of Bull Run, the party in power professed to carry it on for the Constitution, and to put down the rebellion, and vindicate the laws and authority of the United States in the insurgent States, and when that was effected it was to cease. But more than a year ago another, and a paramount and unconstitutional one, the total subversion of slavery was inaugurated by them: and at length, to carry on the war in this augmented and perverted form, the annual expenditure, on the part of the United States, has swollen to one hundred thousand lives, a much larger amount of personal disability, and a thousand millions of money, and yet the wisest cannot see the end of the war: vexily, the people north, and people south, ought to revolt against their war-leaders, and take this great matter into their own hands; and elect members to a national convention of all the States, to terminate a war that is enriching hundreds of thousands of officers, plunderers, and spoilsmen in the loyal States, and threatens the masses of both sections with irretrievable bankruptcy and indefinite slaughter; and to restore their Union and common government upon the great principles of liberty and compromise, devised by Washington and his associates.

14. That the present Executive Government of the United States has subverted, for the time, in large portions of the loyal States, the freedom of speech, the freedom of the press, and free suffrage, the Constitutions and laws of the United States, the civil courts and trial by jury; it has ordered, ad libitum, arbitrary arrests by military officers, not only without warrant, but without any charge or imputation of crime or offence; and has hurried the persons so arrested from home and vicinage to distant prisons, and kept them incarcerated there for an indefinite time; some of whom it discharged without trial, and in utter ignorance of the cause of their arrest and imprisonment; and others it caused to be brought before courts, created by itself, and to be tried and punished without law, in violation of the constitutional guarantee to the citizen of his right to keep and bear arms, and of his rights of property; it has forcibly deprived as well the loyal as the disloyal of both; it has usurped the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and to proclaim martial law, and establish military tribunals in States and parts of States where there was no obstruction to the due administration of the laws of the United States and the States by the civil courts and authorities; and ordered many citizens, who were not connected with the army or navy, to be dragged before its drum-head courts, and to be tried by them for new and strange offences, declared by itself, and by undefined and indefinable law, being but the arbitrary will of the court; it has ordained at pleasure a military despotism in the loyal States, by means of courts-martial, provost marshals, and military forces, governed neither by law, principles, nor rules, from whose tyranny and oppressions no man can claim immunity; all of which must be repudiated and swept away by the sovereign people.

15. That a free press, free speech, and free elections are the great and peaceful forces by which the mal-administration of our Government, whether in the legislative or executive departments, is prevented, reformed, and reversed, and its authors brought to public condemnation and punishment; and these bulwarks of constitutional Government and popular liberty are formidable to malversators, usurpers, and tyrants only, and they must be held by the people at all hazards.

16. That as the Constitution and laws afford no means to exclude from the office of President a man appointed to it by military power, or who is declared to be chosen to it by reason of the suppression of the freedom of election, or by the exclusion of legal voters from the polls, or by any other means, the people of the United States would be incompetent to defend, and unworthy to have received the rich heritage of freedom bequeathed to them by their fathers, if they permit that great office so to be filled, or in any other mode than by their own free suffrages.

17. That the scheme of the President to bring back the insurgent States is open to many and insuperable objections. The pardon and amnesty offered by him is upon the condition that those who accept it shall renounce their right to their slave property, and swear to support his unconstitutional proclamation, and unconstitutional acts of Congress, which attempted to take it from them. He must have intended to put this condition in a form so obnoxious as to secure its rejection by most of those to whom it was offered. He affects the position that ten of the insurgent States have forfeited or dissolved their State governments, and requires that they be reconstructed on a condition prescribed by himself, and this against the true principle which he and the legislative department of the Government had previously recognized: that all the acts of the insurgent States and people, tending to their secession, separation, and independence, were void, and when the inundation with which their insurrection covered over the authority of the Constitution and laws of the United States in them passed away, it would leave the constitutions, laws, property, and institutions of those States in every respect the same that they were previously, excepting only the changes that were produced by the mere shock of arms, the principle status ante bellum being applicable. He ignores the constitutions of Tennessee and Arkansas, and others that have not been altered in any particular, but are the same that they were before their revolt; and he requires those States to repudiate their constitutions that governed them many years peacefully in the Union, and to form new ones. He has no right to take cognizance, in any way, of the governments and constitutions of those States or of any other States; to the extent that such a power is vested in the Government of the United States, it is congressional, not presidential. He has no authority whatever to impose any conditions on the insurgents, and they are subject to none but what are prescribed by the Constitution and laws of the United States, to be determined by their courts. What right has the President to proclaim that one-tenth of as many of the voters of those States as voted at the last presidential election may pull down and revolutionize their State governments, and erect new ones for the other nine-tenths, which he will recognize and uphold with the armies and navies of the United States? His project is to continue the war upon slavery by his further usurpations of power, and to get together and buy up a desperate faction of mendicants and adventurers in the rebel States, give them possession of the polls by interposing the bayonet, as in Maryland, Delaware, and portions of Missouri, and Kentucky, and to keep off loyal pro-slavery voters, and thus to form bastard constitutions to abolitionize those States.

18. That the impending destiny of our country can no longer be blinkd. The people of the loyal States are resolved into two great parties, the destructives and the conservatives. The first consists of Abraham Lincoln, his office-holders, contractors, and other followers; the second of all men who are for ejecting Lincoln and his party from office and power. The professed objects of the first are, to preserve the Union and to abolish slavery in all the States; they have about ceased to make a pretence of supporting the Constitution and the laws. Their real objects are to perpetuate their party power, and to hold possession of the Government to continue the aggrandizement of their leaders, great and small, by almost countless offices and employments, by myriads of plundering contracts, and by putting up to sale the largest amount of spoils that were ever offered to market by any Government on earth. Their object is not to eradicate slavery, but only to abolish its form and the mastery; to subjugate wholly the rebel States, and utterly to revolutionize their political and social organization; to destroy or banish, and strip of their property, all the pro-slavery people, secessionists and anti-secessionists, loyal and disloyal, combatants and non-combatants, old men, women, and children, the decrepit, and the non compos mentis, all whom they cannot abolishize, and to distribute the lands of the subjugated people among their followers, as was done by the Roman conquerors of their own countrymen; to proclaim a mock freedom to the slaves, but by military power to take possession of the freedmen, and work them for their own profit; to do all this, and also to enslave the white man, by trampling under foot the Constitution and laws of the United States and the States, by the power of a subsidized army, and, lest it should falter, by hundreds of thousands of negro janizaries, organized for that purpose by the Secretary of War and the Adjutant General. The first and paramount object of the conservatives is to preserve their own liberties by saving the Union, the Constitution, and the laws from utter and final overthrow by the destructives, not themselves to be enslaved under the pretext of giving a fictitious freedom to the negro, and to restore and perpetuate the Union, and to bring back the people in revolt by renewed and sufficient guarantees of all their constitutional rights. There is no choice left to any man but to be a destructive or a conservative.

January 7—Mr. CARLILE offered these resolutions:

Resolved, That the Government of the United States, in the language of Mr. Webster, is "the result of compact between the States," each State for itself adopting for its government the Constitution of the United States.

2. That the people of each State adopted for their government the Constitution of the United States, in the same way as they adopted their State constitution.

3. That the Constitution of the United States was not binding, nor had it force or effect in any State until it was ratified and adopted by the people thereof, as is evidenced by the fact that the people of North Carolina were not bound by it, nor was North Carolina a member of the Union created by it, for some time after the Government had been organized under it, and after it had been ratified by eleven other States.

4. That the Government created by the Constitution of the United States is "neither wholly national nor wholly federal." Were it wholly national, the supreme and ultimate authority would reside in the majority of the people of the Union, and this authority would be competent at all times, like that of a majority of every national society, to alter or abolish its established government. Were it wholly federal, on the other hand, the concurrence of each State in the Union would be essential to every alteration that would be binding on all." The mode provided by the Constitution for its amendment "is not founded on either of these principles." "In requiring more than a majority, and particularly in computing the proportion by States, not by citizens, it departs from the national and advances towards the federal character. In rendering the concurrence of less than the whole number of States sufficient, it loses again the federal and partakes of the national character." The Government created by the Constitution of the United States, therefore, is neither a national nor a federal government, "but a composition of both." "In its foundation it is federal, not national; in the sources from which the ordinary powers of the Government are drawn, it is partly federal and partly national; in the operation of these powers it is national, not federal; in the extent of them it is federal, not national."

5. That it is essential to the preservation of the Government created by the Constitution that the military should be subordinate to the civil power, and that such was the intention of the founders of the Government is evidenced by the fact that the President was made Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy.

6. That Congress alone can declare what are crimes against the United States, and can alone legislate for the punishment thereof. That it is not competent for the President, in any character, or for any military commander, to restrict the right of suffrage in any State, or to impose conditions precedent to the exercise thereof; nor can the will or judgment of the President enlarge his powers beyond what are conferred by the Constitution.

7. That all the powers of the General Government are derived from the Constitution; that the Constitution of the United States confers power, and the Constitutions of the several States limit power; that the General Government can only exercise such powers as are conferred by the Constitution of the United States; that but for the State Constitutions each State, within its own jurisdiction, could exercise all governmental power.

8. That Governments are instituted for the protection of minorities, the chief objects being to secure to the citizen his right to personal liberty, and to protect him in the possession and enjoyment of his private property.

9. That there is no such power as "the war power" known to the Government of the United States, outside of the powers conferred by and enumerated in the Constitution of the United States.

10. That the Government of the United States enforces obedience to the Constitution and laws, as do the State Governments, by acting directly upon the citizens; that it cannot create a State Government or a State Constitution, or alter one; that it has no right to interfere, directly or indirectly, to alter, abolish, or procure a change in the Constitution of any State, but is bound to protect existing Constitutions in each and every State from any attempt to substitute for them a Government not republican in form, and cannot act against States or political communities as such, but is confined in its action to the punishment of persons, there being no right of eminent domain in the Government of the United States, the soil of each State belonging to it and the people thereof.

11. That any attempt on the part of the Government of the United States, or any department thereof, to destroy the State Governments, and substitute for them Territorial or any other form of Government, would be an exercise of arbitrary and usurped power, destructive to the liberties of the people, violative of the Constitution, and an overthrow of the Government created by it.

12. That it is the duty of the servants of the people to whom the administration of the Government is intrusted, and to whom its powers have been confided, to put down rebellion against its authority whenever organized, to the end that the law-abiding citizen may be protected in the enjoyment of the blessings the Government was designed to confer; that, if necessary to this end, the whole military and naval power of the Government can and should be used, not against the States as such, nor in a war against populations and homes, but against the citizens and persons so resisting the authority of the Government and defying its power.

13. That the whole military power of the Government should be directed against the armies of the Confederates, and that, until they are broken and dispersed, there can be no peace upon the basis of a re-union of the States.

Feb. 8—Mr. SUMNER offered these resolutions:

Resolved, That, in order to determine the duties of the national Government at the present moment, it is of the first importance that we should see and understand the real character of the contest which has been forced upon the United States, for a failure truly to appreciate this contest must end disastrously in a failure of those proper efforts which are essential to the re-establishment of unity and concord; that, recognizing the contest in its real character, as it must be recorded by history, it will be apparent beyond controversy, that this is not an ordinary rebellion, or an ordinary war, but, that it is absolutely without precedent, differing clearly from every other rebellion and every other war, inasmuch as it is an audacious attempt, for the first time in history, to found a wicked power on the corner-stone of slavery; and that such an attempt having this single object—whether regarded as rebellion or as war—is so completely penetrated and absorbed, so entirely filled and possessed by slavery, that it can be justly regarded as nothing else than the huge impersonation of this crime, at once rebel and belligerent, or in other words, as slavery in arms.

2. That, recognizing the unquestionable identity of the rebellion and of slavery, so that each is to the other as another self, it becomes plain that the rebellion cannot be crushed without crushing slavery, as slavery cannot be crushed without crushing the rebellion; that every forbearance to the one is a forbearance to the other, and every blow at the one is a blow at the other; that all who tolerate slavery tolerate the rebellion, and all who strike at slavery strike at the rebellion; and that, therefore, it is our supremest duty, in which all other present duties are contained, to take care that the barbarism of slavery, in which alone the rebellion has its origin and life, is so utterly trampled out that it can never spring up again anywhere in the rebel and belligerent region; for leaving this duty undone nothing is done, and all our blood and treasure have been lavished in vain.

3. That in dealing with the rebel war the National Government is invested with two classes of rights—one the rights of sovereignty, inherent and indefeasible everywhere within the limits of the United States, and the other the rights of war, or belligerent rights, which have been superinduced by the nature and extent of the contest; that, by virtue of the rights of sovereignty, the rebel and belligerent region is now subject to the National Government as its only rightful Government, bound under the Constitution to all the duties of sovereignty, and by special mandate bound also "to guarantee to every State a republican form of government, and to protect it against invasion;" that, by virtue of the rights of war, this same region is subject to all the conditions and incidents of war, according to the established usages of Christian nations, out of which is derived the familiar maxim of public duty, "Indemnity for the past and security for the future."

4. That, in seeking the restoration of the States to their proper places as members of the Republic, so that every State shall enjoy again its constitutional functions, and every star on our national flag shall represent a State, in reality as well as in name, care must be taken that the rebellion is not allowed, through any negligence or mistaken concession, to retain the least foothold for future activity, or the least germ of future life; that, whether proceeding by the exercise of sovereign rights or of belligerent rights, the same precautions must be exacted against future peril; that, therefore, any system of "reconstruction" must be rejected, which does not provide by irreversible guarantees against the continued existence or possible revival of slavery, and that such guarantees can be primarily obtained only through the agency of the national Government, which to this end must assert a temporary supremacy, military or civil, throughout the rebel and belligerent region, of sufficient duration, to stamp upon this region the character of freedom.

5. That, in the exercise of this essential supremacy of the national Government, a solemn duty is cast upon Congress to see that no rebel State is prematurely restored to its constitutional functions until, within its borders, all proper safeguards are established, so that loyal citizens, including the new-made freedmen, cannot at any time be molested by evil-disposed persons, and especially that no man there may be made a slave; that this solemn duty belongs to Congress under the Constitution, whether in the exercise of rights of sovereignty or rights of war, and that in its performance that system of "reconstruction" will be found the best, however it may be named, which promises most surely to accomplish the desired end, so that slavery, which is the synonym of the rebellion, shall absolutely cease throughout the whole rebel and belligerent region, and the land which it has maddened, impoverished, and degraded, shall become safe, fertile, and glorious, from assured emancipation.

6. That, in the process of "reconstruction," it is not enough to secure the death of slavery throughout the rebel and belligerent region only; that experience testifies against slavery wherever it exists, not only as a crime against humanity, but as a disturber of the public peace and the spoiler of the public liberties, including the liberty of the press, the liberty of speech, and the liberty of travel and transit; that obviously, in the progress of civilization, it has become incompatible with good government, and especially with that "republican form of government" which the United States are bound to guarantee to every State; that from the outbreak of this rebel war, even in States professing loyalty, it has been an open check upon patriotic duty and an open accessory to the rebellion, so as to be a source of unquestionable weakness to the national cause; that the defiant pretensions of the master, claiming the control of his slave, are in direct conflict with the paramount rights of the national Government; and that, therefore, it is the further duty of Congress, in the exercise of its double powers, under the Constitution, as guardian of the national safety, to take all needful steps to secure the extinction of slavery, even in States professing loyalty, so that this crime against humanity, this disturber of the public peace, and this spoiler of the public liberties shall no longer exist anywhere to menace the general harmony; that civilization may be no longer shocked; that the constitutional guaranty of a republican form of government to every State may be fulfilled; that the rebellion may be deprived of the traitorous aid and comfort which slavery has instinctively volunteered; and that the master claiming an unnatural property in human flesh, may no longer defy the national Government.

7. That in addition to the guaranties stipulated by Congress, and as the cap-stone to its work of restoration and reconciliation, the Constitution itself must be so amended as to prohibit slavery everywhere within the limits of the Republic; that such a prohibition, leaving all personal claims, whether of slave or master, to the legislation of Congress and of the States, will be in itself a sacred and inviolable guaranty, representing the collective will of the people of the United States, and placing universal emancipation under the sanction of the Constitution, so that freedom shall be engraved on every foot of the national soil, and be woven into every star of the national flag, while it elevates and inspires our whole national existence, and the Constitution, so often invoked for slavery, but at last in harmony with the Declaration of Independence, will become, according to the holy aspirations of its founders, the sublime guardian of the inalienable right of every human being to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; all of which must be done in the name of the Union, in duty to humanity, and for the sake of permanent peace.

IN HOUSE.

1863, Dec. 14—Mr. HARDING offered this resolution which was laid over under the rule:

Resolved, That the Union has not been dissolved, and that whenever the rebellion in any of the seceded States shall be put down and subdued, either by force of the Federal arms or by the voluntary submission of the people of such State to the authority of the Constitution, then such State will be thereby restored to all its rights and privileges as a State of the Union, under the constitution of such State and the Constitution of the United States, including the right to regulate, order and control its own domestic institutions according to the constitution and laws of such State, free from all congressional or executive control or dictation.

1863, December—Mr. YEAMAN offered these resolutions; which were referred to the Judiciary Committee:

Joint resolutions concerning the restoration of the civil authority of the United States and of certain States within regions once or now under the control of the existing rebellion.

Be it resolved, &c., 1. That a combination of persons, in the name of a State, or an assumed confederation of States, for levying war against the United States, or for withdrawing such States from the Union, does not alter the legal character of the act done, nor excuse those engaged in it, nor does any such combination, levying of war, or attempted withdrawal amount to any destruction, forfeiture, or abdication of the right of those who at any time acknowledge allegiance and render obedience to the United States to administer, amend, or establish a State government.

2. That a formal return or readmission of any State to the Union is not necessary. It is sufficient that the people, or those who are loyal in any State, and qualified by the election laws thereof in force before the rebellion, shall at any time resume the functions of a State government compatible with the Union and with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and doing this is sufficient evidence of loyalty for the purpose of doing it.

3. That all questions touching property-rights and interests arising out of confiscation and emancipation, and the effect of any law, proclamation, military order, or emergency of war, or act of rebellion, upon the title to any property, or upon the status of any persons heretofore held to service or labor in any State, are left for the judicial determination of the courts of the United States.

4. That the whole power of the nation is pledged for the suppression of the rebellion, the execution of the laws, the defense of loyal citizens in any State, the territorial integrity of the Republic, and the nationality of the Constitution.

5. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to abridge or lessen any valid defense, or as waiving the right of the Government to inflict punishment; the purpose being to declare the nullity of secession as a State ordinance, to define the objects of the war, and to express the sense of Congress as to the proper mode of restoring harmonious relations between the Government and certain of the States and the disaffected people thereof.

Subsequently, December 21, he offered these resolutions, being, in part, a modification of the others, upon which he addressed the House, January 12, 1864:

Resolved, That a conspiracy of persons combined together, and assuming the name of a State, or a confederation of States, for levying war upon the United States, or for withdrawing such States from the Union, does not extinguish the political franchises of the loyal citizens of such States; and such loyal citizens have the right, at any time, to administer, amend, or establish a State government without other condition than that it shall be republican in form.

2. That a formal return or readmission of any State into the Union is not necessary. It is sufficient that the people, or those who are loyal in any State, and qualified by the election laws thereof in force before the rebellion, shall, at any time, resume the functions of a State government compatible with the Union, and with the Constitution and laws of the United States; and doing this is sufficient evidence of loyalty for the purpose of doing it.

3. That all questions touching property-rights and interests, arising out of confiscation and emancipation, and the effect and validity of any law, proclamation, military order, emergency of war, or act of rebellion, upon the title to any property, or upon the status of any persons heretofore held to service or labor in any State under the laws thereof, are left for the judicial determination of the courts of the United States.

The House refusing to second the demand for the previous question on their passage, they were, on motion of Mr. LOVEJOY, referred to the Select Committee on the Rebellious States.

Feb. 16—Mr. BUTTWELL proposed these resolutions:

Resolved, That the Committee on the rebellious States be instructed to consider and report upon the expediency of recommending to this House the adoption of the following

Declaration of Opinions:

In view of the present condition of the country, and especially in view of the recent signal successes of the national arms, promising a speedy overthrow of the rebellion, this House makes the following declaration of opinions concerning the institution of slavery in the States and parts of States engaged in the rebellion, and embraced in the proclamation of emancipation issued by the President on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1863; and also concerning the relations now subsisting between the people of such States and parts of States on the one side and the American Union on the other.

It is therefore declared, (as the opinion of the House of Representatives), That the institution of slavery was the cause of the present rebellion, and that the destruction of slavery in the rebellious States is an efficient means of weakening the power of the rebels; that the President's proclamation, whereby all persons heretofore held as slaves in such States and parts of States have been declared free, has had the effect to increase the power of the Union and to diminish the power of its enemies; that the freedom of such persons was desirable and just in itself, and an efficient means by which the Government was to be maintained and its authority re-established in all the territory and over all the people within the legal jurisdiction of the United States; that it is the duty of the Government and of loyal men everywhere to do what may be practicable for the enforcement of the proclamation, in order to secure in fact as well as by the forms of law the extinction of slavery in such States and parts of States; and finally, that it is the paramount duty of the Government and of all loyal men to labor for the restoration of the American Union on the basis of freedom.

And this House does further declare, That a State can exist or cease to exist only by the will of the people within its limits, and that it cannot be created or destroyed by the external force or opinion of other States, or even by the judgment or action of the nation itself; that a State when created by the will of its people can become a member of the American Union only by its own organized action and the concurrent action of the existing National Government; that when a State has been admitted to the Union, no vote, resolution, ordinance, or proceeding, on its part, however formal in character or vigorously sustained, can deprive the National Government of the legal jurisdiction and sovereignty over the territory and people of such State which existed previous to the act of admission, or which were acquired thereby; that the effect of the so-called acts, resolutions, and ordinances of secession adopted by the eleven States engaged in the present rebellion is, and can only be, to destroy those political organizations as States, while the legal and constitutional jurisdiction and authority of the National Government over the people and territory remain unimpaired; that these several communities can be organized into States only by the will of the loyal people expressed freely and in the absence of all coercion; that States so organized can become States of the American Union only when they shall have applied for admission and their admission shall have been authorized by the existing National Government; that when a people have organized a State upon the basis of allegiance to the Union, and applied for admission, the character of the institutions of such proposed State may constitute a sufficient justification for granting or rejecting such application; and inasmuch as experience has shown that the existence of human slavery is incompatible with a republican form of Government in the several States or in the United States, and inconsistent with the peace, prosperity, and unity of the nation, it is the duty of the people and of all men in authority to resist the admission of slave States wherever organized within the jurisdiction of the National Government.

1864, March 14—Mr. WILLIAMS offered these resolutions, which were laid over under the rule:

Resolved, That the existing relation between the Union and the rebel States constitutes a condition of public war, with all the consequences attaching thereto under the law of nature and of nations.

2. That the appeal of the rebel States from the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals established by the Constitution to the arbitrament of the sword has not, however, withdrawn the case beyond the purview of the Constitution, which, in conferring the war power on the General Government, has made the law of war the rule of conduct in the prosecution and adjustment of the pending controversy.

3. That while the rebel States are, by that law and by the solemn recognition thereof in the proclamation made by the President of the United States on the 16th of August, A. D. 1861, under and in pursuance of the authority conferred on him by the act of Congress of the 13th of July of the same year, interdicting a commercial intercourse between their citizens and those of the loyal States, in the attitude of belligerents, and outside of the Union as States, by construction of law as well as in point of fact, and have thereby either abdicated or forfeited their rights to membership therein, the jurisdiction and powers of the Government over their territory and citizens continue unimpaired, and the latter are still amenable to the law and the judicial tribunals of the United States for their treason and other crimes against the same.

4. That so long as these States continue under the armed occupation of the forces of the United States employed in suppressing the rebellion against its authority, the local laws are necessarily subordinated, and the functions of the civil authorities so far suspended therein as to prevent the exercise of all the rights arising out of their relations to this Government, and to disable them from electing members of either branch of Congress, or electors for the choice of a President of the United States.

5. That the occupation of these States by the armed forces of the United States, either under military commanders or provisional Governors appointed by the Executive, resting for its lawfulness upon the condition of insurrection existing therein, is a purely military one, and ought to determine with the necessity which produced it.

6. That as soon as the rebellion is suppressed in any of the revolted States, by the reconquest and occupation thereof by the armies of the United States, and the same are so tranquilized as to furnish adequate assurance against the recurrence of disturbance therein, it will become the duty of the President to communicate the fact to Congress in order that it may take the proper measures for the reorganization of the civil governments and the re-establishment of the civil functionaries therein, and prescribe such terms as it may deem wise and proper and consistent with the public safety for the readmission of those districts as States of this Union.

7. That it is the exclusive right of the legislative power of the Government to say upon what terms those Territories shall be allowed to return to the Union; and that in the adjustment of the existing controversy in the Government ad interim of the reconquered territory, and in the arrangement of the terms of reorganization and readmission, it will be entirely within their competency to punish the treason of individuals and provide indemnity for the expenses of the war and security against any future outbreak of the like kind by removing its causes and confiscating absolutely the property and estate of the guilty authors and abettors thereof.

Rebel Views of "Reconstruction." 1861.

By JEFFERSON DAVIS, February 16, 1861, at Montgomery:

The time for compromise has now passed, and the South is determined to maintain her position, and make all who oppose her smell southern powder and feel southern steel if coercion is persisted in. He had no doubts as to the result. He said we will maintain our rights and Government at all hazards. We ask nothing, we want nothing; we will have no complications. If the other States join our confederation they can freely come in on our terms. Our separation from the old Union is now complete. No compromise, no reconstruction is now to be entertained.

By WALTER BROOKE, of Mississippi, in "Confederate" Provisional Congress, March 5, 1861, quoting Davis and Stephens:

These men have long since given up all hope of receiving satisfaction from the General Government, and the entire people of Mississippi stand to-day upon the same platform. I am authorized, I think, to speak their sentiments on this floor, from the information I am daily receiving. I do not believe that there is a man in Mississippi who desires a reconstruction of this Government, or who will not fully indorse the sentiments uttered by you, Mr. President, that "the separation is perfect, complete, and perpetual," and likewise the sentiments of our distinguished President of the Confederate States, when he declared that "a reconstruction is neither practicable nor desirable."

T. R. R. COBB, of Georgia, a member of the Provisional Congress, spoke at Atlanta on reconstruction:

I am against it now and forever. What have we worked for? Simply a new Constitution? No! We sought to be relieved of the North because they were fleecing us; giving fishing bounties and otherwise squandering the public treasure, and filling their pockets from our labors. I would not unite with them if they were to bind themselves in amounts more than they were worth, and give me a distress warrant to sell them out. I wish the people of Georgia to say—this shall be a slaveholding confederacy, and nothing else.

JEFF. DAVIS, in his message of November, 1861, says:

If, instead of being a dissolution of a league, it were indeed a rebellion in which we are engaged, we might find ample vindication in the course we have adopted in the scenes which are now being enacted in the United States. Our people now look with contemptuous astonishment on those with whom they have been so recently associated. They shrink with aversion from the bare idea of renewing such a connection.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS OF GEORGIA,

DECEMBER 11, 1861.

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of Georgia, in General Assembly met, That it is the sense of this General Assembly that the separation of those States now forming the Confederate States of America from the United States is, and ought to be, final and irrevocable; and that Georgia will, under no circumstances, entertain any proposition from any quarter which may have for its object a restoration or reconstruction of the late Union, on any terms or conditions whatever.

Resolved, That the war which the United States is waging upon the Confederate States should be met on our part with the utmost vigor and energy, until our independence and nationality are unconditionally acknowledged by the United States.

Resolved, That Georgia pledges herself to her sister States of the Confederacy that she will stand by them throughout the struggle; she will contribute all the means which her resources will supply, so far as the same may be necessary to the support of the common cause, and will not consent to lay down arms until peace is established on the basis of the foregoing resolutions.

WARREN AIKEN,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

L. CARRINGTON, Clerk of the House of Representatives.

JOHN BILLUPS,

President of the Senate.

JAMES M. MORLEY, Secretary of the Senate.

Approved December 11, 1861.

JOSEPH E. BROWN, Governor.

Feb. 3.—The Congress adopted this preamble and resolution unanimously:

Whereas, the United States are waging war against the Confederate States, with the avowed purpose of compelling the latter to re-unite with them under the same constitution and government; and whereas, the waging of war with such an object is in direct opposition to the sound republican maxim, that "all government rests upon the consent of the governed," and can only tend to consolidation in the General Government, and the consequent destruction of the rights of the States; and whereas, this result being attained, the two sections can only exist together in the relation of the oppressor and the oppressed, because of the great preponderance of power in the Northern section coupled with dissimilarity of interests; and whereas, we, the representatives of the people of the Confederate States, in Congress assembled, may be presumed to know the sentiments of said people, having just been elected by them: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this Congress do solemnly declare and publish to the world that it is the unalterable determination of the people of the Confederate States (in humble reliance upon Almighty God) to suffer all the calamities of the most protracted war, but that they will never, on any terms, politically affiliate with a people who are guilty of an invasion of their soil and the butchery of their citizens.

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE, announcing himself a candidate in the Eleventh District of Kentucky for the permanent "Confederate" Congress, at the election held Jan. 22, said:

I am utterly opposed to a reconstruction of the old Government, or any measure which in the remotest degree tends in that direction. For one, I shall never consent that peace shall be made until the very last of all the enemies of our liberty shall be driven, not only from our hallowed soil, but from every foot of territory which, by its geographical position, naturally belongs to the South. God grant that the day may not be far distant when Kentucky will arise, free and disenthralled, and assume her true position as one, the fairest, among the sisters of the South.

ALEXANDER R. BOTELER, of Virginia, about the same time said the same thing:

In regard to the canvass for Congress, I have been studiously silent, as I have a special repugnance to whatever may seem like thrusting myself on the public; but you can say for me that I have consented to become a candidate, which I suppose will be sufficient. In doing so, however, it is but proper that I should say that, having done all that I could, consistent with self-respect, to preserve the Union upon its original basis of constitutional equality, I am equally resolute in my determination to resist all attempts, should any be made, for its restoration; being unalterably opposed to reconstruction, at any time or on any terms. This much is due to the people that I should make known before the election, so that they may be aware of the course I shall pursue, if elected.

In the winter of 1862, GEORGE N. SANDERS, in his letter to "Governor Seymour, Dean Richmond, John Van Buren, Charles O'Connor, Washington Hunt, Fernando Wood, and James Brooks, representative men of the triumphant revolutionary party of New York," under date of December 24, said:

Not only do you owe it to yourselves to repudiate every dollar of this unconstitutional debt, but you owe it equally to your posterity to pay the half, if not all the debt the people of the South have had to incur to maintain the rights of citizens and of States, in the establishment of free trade.

Let heart and brain into the revolution; accelerate and direct the movement; get rid of the Baboon, (or What is it!) Abraham Lincoln, pacifically if you can, but by the blood of his followers if necessary. Withdraw your support, material and moral, from the invading armies, and the South will make quick work with the Abolitionists that remain on her soil. Suffer no degenerate son of the South, upon however plausible pretext, to idly embarrass your action by throwing into your way rotten planks of reconstruction. Unity is no longer possible. The very word Union, once so dear, has been made the cover for so many atrocious acts that the mere mention of it is odious in the ears of Southern people. The State Legislature will be called upon to obliterate the hated name from counties and towns.

In the fall of 1862, after the Democratic successes in the election, the Richmond papers took occasion to assure the North that there could be no peace except by recognizing the independence of the Southern Confederacy.

The Examiner said of the North:

They do not yet understand that we are resolute to be rid of them forever, and determined rather to die than to live with them in the same political community again.

The Dispatch anticipating Democratic ascendancy in the Union Congress, said:

It is probable, therefore, that they might propose a reconstruction of the Union, with certain pledges, guaranties, &c. To this the South will never consent. They will never exist in the same political association, be its name what it may, be its terms what they will, and be the guaranties whatever the good will of the Democrats may make them. They want nothing more to do with the Yankees, and they are determined to have nothing more to do with them. Let them pay off their own debt with their own resources, we have as much as we can do to pay off ours. We cannot consent to return to the state of vassalage from which we have emerged. We cannot consent to sit in a Congress in which nothing is debated but the nigger from the beginning of the longest session to the end of it. We can never again affiliate with people who made a martyr of the cold-blooded assassin, John Brown, and thought he was doing a glorious deed when he was dying his hands in the blood of our people. We of the Confederate States have made up our minds to endure the worst extremity to which war can reduce a people. We are prepared for it. The Government that should propose to reunite us with the Yankees could not exist a day. It would sink so deep beneath the deluge of popular indignation that even history would not be able to fish up the wreck.

Again, October 18, the Dispatch said:

Nor, after the sacrifices which the South has suffered at Northern hands, could she ever consent, of her own free will, to live under the same Government with that people.

The blood of our murdered children would cry from the ground against their fathers if they could ever be guilty of such unnatural and monstrous ingratitude. If the South has given her blood without a murmur in this contest, it is not because she does not value that blood but because she values freedom more than life or any earthly possession. Precious more than aught else save her honor, are the jewels she has laid upon the altar of liberty, and never can she consent to shake hands again under one Government with men who have made so many vacant places in southern households, and whose steel is dripping with the blood of our brethren and children.

Henceforth we are two people.

December 2—The Legislature of North Carolina adopted these, among other, resolutions:

Resolved, That the Confederate States have the means and the will to sustain and perpetuate the Government they have established, and to that end North Carolina is determined to contribute all of her power and resources.

Resolved, That the separation between the Confederate States and the United States is final, and that the people of North Carolina will never consent to reunion at any time or upon any terms.

December 8—Governor Letcher, of Virginia, wrote:

It cannot be that the people of the Confederate States can again entertain a feeling of affection and respect for the Government of the United States. We have, therefore, separated from them; and now let it be understood that the separation is and ought to be final and irrevocable; that Virginia "will under no circumstances entertain any proposition from any quarter which may have for its object a restoration or reconstruction of the late Union, on any terms or conditions whatever."

Jeff. Davis addressed the Mississippi Legislature, December 26, 1862, and is reported in the Jackson Mississippian to have said:

He alluded to it, however, as a matter of regret that the best affections of his heart should have been bestowed upon an object so unworthy—that he should have loved so long a Government which was rotten to its very core. He had predicted from the beginning a fierce war, though it had assumed more gigantic proportions than he had calculated upon. He had predicted war not because our right to secede was not an undoubted one, and defined in the spirit of that declaration which rests the right to govern upon the consent of the governed: but the wickedness of the North would entail war upon the country.

The present war, waged against the rights of a free people, was unjust, and the fruit of the evil passions of the North. In the progress of the war those evil passions have been brought out and developed; and so far from reuniting with such a people—a people whose descendants Cromwell had gathered from the bogs and fens of Ireland and Scotland—a people whose intolerance produced discord and trouble wherever they went—who persecuted Catholics, Episcopalians, and every other sect that did not subscribe to their bigoted and contracted notions—who hung witches, and did a thousand other things calculated to make them forever infamous.

The President was emphatic in his declaration that under no circumstances would he consent to reunion. He drew a glowing picture of the horrors of war, and the ravages of the enemy, and while his tears flowed for those who suffered, yet all these would be endured cheerfully before our manhood and our liberties would be surrendered."

From the speech of Jeff. Davis, delivered in Richmond, as reported in the Richmond Enquirer of January 7:

You have shown yourselves in no respect to be degenerate sons of your fathers. You have fought mighty battles, and your deeds of valor will live among the richest spoils of Time's ample page. It is true, you have a cause which binds you together more firmly than your fathers were. They fought to be free from the usurpation of the British crown, but they fought against a manly foe. You fight the oppressors of the earth. [Applause.]

They have come to disturb your social organizations on the plea that it is a military necessity. For what are they waging war? They say to preserve the Union. Can they preserve the Union by destroying the social existence of a portion of the South? Do they hope to reconstruct the Union by striking at everything which is dear to men? By showing themselves so utterly disgraced that if the question was proposed to you whether you would combine with Hyenas or Yankees, I trust every Virginian would say, give me the Hyenas. [Cries of "Good! good!" and applause.]

Reconstruction! Can they reconstruct the family circles which they have broken—can they reconstruct the fortunes which they have scattered—can they reconstruct the bodies of our dead kindred, which by tens of thousands they have destroyed? When they can do this they can reconstruct the old Union. When they can do this—when they can breathe the breath of life into the pallid faces of our sons and brothers, and restore them once more, living and happy, to our desolate firesides, they may dream of bringing back that Union whose only principle of cohesion was the mutual love and confidence of its people.

We warn the Democrats and conservatives of the North to dismiss from their minds at once the miserable delusion that the South can ever consent to enter again, upon any terms, the old Union. If the North will allow us to write the Constitution ourselves, and give us every guarantee we would ask, we would sooner be under the Government of England or France than under a Union with men who have shown that

They cannot keep good faith, and are the most barbarous and inhuman, as well as treacherous of mankind.

If the reconstructionists want peace, they can easily have it upon the terms on which they could have always had it—letting us alone. We ask neither more nor less. We are not making no war on them. We are not invading their territory, nor giving their homes to the flames, their populations to prison and the sword, their women to a fate worse than death. Let us alone! That is all we ask. Let us alone, and peace will return once more to bless a distracted land! But do not expect us to degrade ourselves and cast dishonor upon the graves of our kindred by ever returning to the embrace of those whose hands are dripping with the tears and blood of our people.

The Richmond Sentinel refers to the address of the Democrats of New Hampshire declaring that if the South will "come back into the Union, the Democracy of the North will do all in their power to gain for them (the Southern States) such guarantees as will secure their safety," and remarks that the proposition is frank and courteous, but inadmissible. It adds:

"They (the Democrats) are powerless to secure for us those guarantees of which they admit the necessity. Less than three years ago the States which now form the Confederacy, sought, in the spirit of conservatism and forbearance, to avoid disruption, with an opportunity that now appears to us amazing. When we look back at it now it makes us tremble to think that we offered to take the Crittenden compromise. But conciliation on our part was met only by contumely and defiance by the Republican majority. From that time the men who willfully destroyed the Union have been assailing us with all the engines of destruction. They have evinced towards us a malignity which has seldom been paralleled in human history.

"Do the New Hampshire Democrats suppose for one moment that we could so much as think of reunion with such a people? Rather tell one to be welded to a corpse! Rather join hands with a fiend from the pit. Since that time the only greeting of kind words which has come to us from the North, the New Hampshire men have sent. All, or nearly all beside, has been conflagration, sword, demoniac denunciation, and brutal menace of destruction. When those in the United States who are disposed to deal fairly with us shall gain the rule, we may in time begin to bury the many bitter memories which now add energy to our resentment, and may make with them treaties that shall be mutually advantageous. Perhaps, hereafter, good will be revived again. But Union—never let it be mentioned! It is impossible."

FROM ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

The Richmond Dispatch of July 23, gives a sketch of ALEX. H. STEPHENS's speech at Charlotte, N. C., on his way to Richmond, in which after alluding to Lee's invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania, and the loss of Vicksburg, and exhorting the people to give the government a cordial support, he said:

As for reconstruction, such a thing was impossible—such an idea must not be tolerated for an instant. Reconstruction would not end the war, but would produce a more horrible war than that in which we are now engaged. The only terms on which we can obtain permanent peace is final and complete separation from the North. Rather than submit to anything short of that, let us all resolve to die like men worthy of freedom.

FROM ROBERT TOOMBS.

WASHINGTON, GA., August 17, 1863.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 15th instant, asking my authority to contradict the report that "I am in favor of reconstruction" was received this evening. I can conceive of no extremity to which my country could be reduced in which I would for a single moment entertain any proposition for any union with the North on any terms whatever. When all else is lost, I prefer to unite with the thousands of our own countrymen who have found honorable deaths, if not graves, on the battle-field. Use this letter as you please.

Very truly, your friend, &c.
Dr. A. BEES, Americus, Ga.

R. TOOMBS.

WM. SMITH, then recently elected Governor of Virginia, made a speech in Richmond in September, published in the Richmond Examiner, in which he "denounced, in bitter terms, as an utter impossibility, any thought of reconstruction on any conditions."

THE QUESTION ABOUT NORTHERN "TONE AND TEMPER."

[From the Richmond Sentinel, September 29.]

The House of Delegates yesterday, in the most summary manner, disposed of a resolution for inquiring into the tone and temper of the people of the United States on the subject of peace, with a view to responding, if favorable. The House knew what everybody knows—that such resolutions are both idle and mischievous, for they will only be taken by our enemies as evincing more or less readiness on our part for reconstruction. The House, by a unanimous vote, put its foot on the resolution, without a word of discussion or a moment of delay. In this they but fairly represented the manliness and the unanimity of our people.

RECONSTRUCTION.

It is a favorite idea with a great many, that possibly the old order of things could be restored; that our right under that Constitution could be guaranteed to us, and everything move on peacefully as before the war. My friends, there are a great many desirable things; but the question, not what may be wished, but what may be obtained, is the one reasonable men may consider. It is desirable to have a lovely wife and plenty of pretty children: but every man can't have them. I tell you now, candidly, there is no more possibility of reconstructing the old Union and reinstating things as they were four years ago, than exists for you to gather up the scattered bones of your sons who have fallen in this struggle, from one end of the country to the other, re-clothe them with flesh, fill their veins with the blood they have so generously shed, and their lungs with the same breath with which they breathed out their last prayer for their country's triumph and independence. [Immense applause.]

The new rebel Governor of Louisiana, HENRY W. ALLEN, in his inaugural, says:

Peace is not so sweet as to be purchased at the cost of reconstruction. Reconstruction means subjugation, ruin, death. Lose negroes, lose lands, lose everything, lose life itself, but never think of reconstruction. He says: "I speak to-day by authority, I speak as the Governor of Louisiana, and I wish it known at Washington and elsewhere that rather than reconstruct this Government and go back to the Union, on any terms whatever, the people of Louisiana will, in convention assembled, without a dissenting voice, cede the State to any European Power."
* * * * * I speak to-day not only for the loyal citizens of Louisiana, who have stood by her in all trials, but in behalf of the misguided individuals who have been compelled to take the oath of allegiance to the Federal Government. In their hearts they are true to us, and are daily praying for the triumph of our arms. They have felt the iron in their souls, and know full well the curse of reconstruction. I speak by authority, for they write to me daily that they would rather, by 'ten thousand times, be the subjects of the Emperor of France than the slaves of Lincoln."

The Richmond Dispatch, in March, discussed President Lincoln's amnesty proclamation, and adds:

No one, however, knows better than Abraham Lincoln that any terms he might offer the southern people which contemplate their restoration to his bloody and brutal Government, would be rejected with scorn and execration. If, instead of devoting to death our President and military and civil officers, he had proposed, to make Jeff. Davis his successor, Lee Commander-in-Chief of the Yankee armies, and our domestic institutions not only recognized at home but re-adopted in the free States, provided the South would once more enter the Yankee Union, there is not a man, woman, or child in the Confederacy who would not spit upon the proposition. We desire no companionship upon any terms with a nation of robbers and murderers. The miscreants, whose atrocities in this war have caused the whole civilized world to shudder, must keep henceforth their distance. They shall not be our masters, and we would not have them for our slaves.

JOINT RESOLUTION OF THE REBEL LEGISLATURE OF LOUISIANA.

Be it resolved, &c., That the barbarous manner in which our enemies have waged war against us deserves the execration of all men, and has confirmed and strengthened us in the determination to oppose to the last extremity a re-union with them, and that the spirit of our people is unabated in the resolution to resist every attempt at their subjugation.

1864, August 5—Messrs. BENJAMIN F. WADE and HENRY WINTER DAVIS published in the New York Tribune a paper arraigning President LINCOLN for his course on the Reconstruction bill. A few extracts are subjoined:

The President, by preventing this bill from becoming a law, holds the electoral votes of the rebel States at the dictation of his personal ambition. If those votes turn the balance in his favor, is it to be supposed that his competitor, defeated by such means, will acquiesce? If the rebel majority assert their supremacy in those States, and send votes which elect an enemy of the Government, will we not repel his claims? And is not that civil war for the Presidency inaugurated by the votes of rebel States?

Seriously impressed with these dangers, Congress, "the proper constitutional authority," formally declared that there are no State governments in the rebel States, and provided for their erection at a proper time; and both the Senate and the House of Representatives rejected the Senators and Representatives chosen under the authority of what the President calls the free constitution and government of Arkansas. The President's proclamation "holds for naught" this judgment, and discards the authority of the Supreme Court, and strides headlong toward the anarchy his proclamation of the 8th of December inaugurated. If electors for President be allowed to be chosen in either of those States, a sinister light will be cast on the motives which induced the President to "hold for naught" the will of Congress rather than his government in Louisiana and Arkansas. That judgment of Congress which the President defies was the exercise of an authority exclusively vested in Congress by the Constitution to determine what is the established government in a State, and in its own nature and by the highest judicial authority binding on all other departments of the Government. * * A more studied outrage on the legislative authority of the people has never been perpetrated. Congress passed a bill; the President refused to approve it, and then by proclamation puts as much of it in force as he sees fit, and proposes to execute those parts by officers unknown to the laws of the United States and not subject to the confirmation of the Senate! The bill directed the appointment of Provisional Governors by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President, after defeating the law, proposes to appoint without law, and without the advice and consent of the Senate, Military Governors for the rebel States! He has already exercised this dictatorial usurpation in Louisiana, and he defeated the bill to prevent its limitation. * * The President has greatly presumed on the forbearance which the supporters of his Administration have so long practiced, in view of the arduous conflict in which we are engaged, and the reckless ferocity of our political opponents. But he must understand that our support is of a cause and not of a man; that the authority of Congress is paramount and must be respected; that the whole body of the Union men of Congress will not submit to be impeached by him of rash and unconstitutional legislation; and if he wishes our support, he must confine himself to his executive duties—to obey and execute, not make the laws—to suppress by arms armed rebellion, and leave political reorganization to Congress. If the supporters of the Government fail to insist on this, they become responsible for the usurpations which they fail to rebuke, and are justly liable to the indignation of the people whose rights and security, committed to their keeping, they sacrifice. Let them consider the remedy for these usurpations, and, having found it, fearlessly execute it.

REMAINING PAPERS OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

EXPLANATORY OF GOVERNMENT PURCHASES IN MAY, 1861.

1862, May 29—The PRESIDENT sent this message* to Congress:

To the Senate and

House of Representatives:

The insurrection which is yet existing in the United States, and aims at the overthrow of the Federal Constitution and the Union, was clandestinely prepared during the winter of 1860 and 1861, and assumed an open organization in the form of a treasonable provisional government at Montgomery, in Alabama, on the 18th day of February, 1861. On the 12th day of April, 1861, the insurgents committed the flagrant act of civil war by the bombardment and capture of Fort Sumter, which cut off the hope of immediate conciliation. Immediately afterwards all the roads and avenues to this city were obstructed, and the capital was put into the condition of a siege. The mails in every direction were stopped, and the lines of telegraph cut off by the insurgents, and military and naval forces, which had been called out by the Government for the defence of Washington, were prevented from reaching the city by organized and combined treasonable resistance in the State of Maryland. There was no adequate and effective organization for the public defence. Congress had indefinitely adjourned. There was no time to convene them. It became necessary for me to choose whether, using only the existing means, agencies, and processes which Congress had provided, I should let the Government fall at once into ruin, or whether, availing myself of the broader powers conferred by the Constitution in cases of insurrection, I would make an effort to save it with all its blessings for the present age and for posterity.

I thereupon summoned my constitutional advisers, the heads of all the Departments, to meet on Sunday, the 20th day of April, 1861, at the office of the Navy Department, and then and there, with their unanimous concurrence, I directed that an armed revenue cutter should proceed to sea, to afford protection to the commercial marine, and especially the California treasure ships then on their way to this coast.

* Called forth by the passage of a resolution, April 30, in the House—yeas 79, nays 45—censuring Secretary Cameron for a supposed responsibility for, and connection with, the circumstances detailed.

I also directed the commandant of the navy-yard at Boston to purchase or charter, and arm as quickly as possible, five steamships, for purposes of public defence. I directed the commandant of the navy-yard at Philadelphia to purchase, or charter and arm, an equal number for the same purpose. I directed the commandant at New York to purchase, or charter and arm, an equal number. I directed Commander Gillis to purchase, or charter and arm, and put to sea two other vessels. Similar directions were given to Commodore Du Pont, with a view to the opening of passages by water to and from the capital. I directed the several officers to take the advice and obtain the aid and efficient services in the matter of his Excellency Edwin D. Morgan, the Governor of New York, or, in his absence, George D. Morgan, William M. Evarts, R. M. Blatchford, and Moses H. Grinnell, who were, by my directions, especially empowered by the Secretary of the Navy to act for his Department in that crisis, in matters pertaining to the forwarding of troops and supplies for the public defence.

On the same occasion I directed that Governor Morgan and Alexander Cummings, of the city of New York, should be authorized by the Secretary of War, Simon Cameron, to make all necessary arrangements for the transportation of troops and munitions of war, in aid and assistance of the officers of the Army of the United States, until communication by mails and telegraph should be completely re-established between the cities of Washington and New York. No security was required to be given by them, and either of them was authorized to act in case of inability to consult with the other.

On the same occasion I authorized and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to advance, without requiring security, two millions of dollars of public money to John A. Dix, George Opdyke, and Richard M. Blatchford, of New York, to be used by them in meeting such requisitions as should be directly consequent upon the military and naval measures necessary for the defence and support of the Government, requiring them only to act without compensation, and to report their transactions when duly called upon.

The several departments of the Government at that time contained so large a number of disloyal persons that it would have been impossible to provide safely, through official agents only, for the performance of the duties thus confided to citizens favorably known for their ability, loyalty, and patriotism.

The several orders issued upon these occurrences were transmitted by private messengers, who pursued a circuitous way to the seaboard cities, inland, across the States of Pennsylvania and Ohio and the Northern Lakes. I believe that by these and other similar measures taken in that crisis, some of which were without any authority of law, the Government was saved from overthrow. I am not aware that a dollar of the public funds thus confided without authority of law to unofficial persons was either lost or wasted, although apprehensions of such misdirection occurred to me as objections to those extraordinary proceedings, and were necessarily overruled.

I recall these transactions now because my attention has been directed to a resolution which was passed by the House of Representatives on the 30th day of last month, which is in these words:

Resolved, That Simon Cameron, late Secretary of War, by investing Alexander Cummings with the control of large sums of the public money, and authority to purchase military supplies without restriction, without requiring from him any guarantee for the faithful performance of his duties, when the services of competent public officers were available, and by involving the Government in a vast number of contracts with persons not legitimately engaged in the business pertaining to the subject-matter of such contracts, especially in the purchase of arms for future delivery, has adopted a policy highly injurious to the public service, and deserves the censure of the House.

Congress will see that I should be wanting equally in candor and in justice if I should leave the censure expressed in this resolution to rest exclusively or chiefly upon Mr. Cameron. The same sentiment is unanimously entertained by the heads of Departments, who participated in the proceedings which the House of Representatives has censured. It is due to Mr. Cameron to say that, although he fully approved the proceedings, they were not moved nor suggested by himself, and that not only the President but all the other heads of Departments were at least equally responsible with him for whatever error, wrong, or fault was committed in the premises.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

WASHINGTON, May 26, 1862.

THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKS AT A UNION MEETING IN WASHINGTON, AUGUST 6, 1862.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I believe there is no precedent for my appearing before you on this occasion, but it is also true that there is no precedent for your being here yourselves, and I offer, in justification of myself and of you, that, upon examination, I have found nothing in the Constitution against it. I, however, have an impression that there are younger gentlemen who will entertain you better, and better address your understanding than I will or could, and therefore I propose but to detain you a moment longer.

I am very little inclined on any occasion to say anything unless I hope to produce some good by it. The only thing I think of just now not likely to be better said by some one else, is a matter in which we have heard some other persons blamed for what I did myself. There has been a very widespread attempt to have a quarrel between Gen. McClellan and the Secretary of War. Now, I occupy a position that enables me to observe, that these two gentlemen are not nearly so deep in the quarrel as some pretending to be their friends. General McClellan's attitude is such that, in the very selfishness of his nature, he cannot but wish to be successful, and I hope he will—and the Secretary of War is in precisely the same situation. If the military commanders in the field cannot be successful, not only the Secretary of War, but myself, for the time being the master of them both, cannot but be failures. I know General McClellan wishes to be successful, and I know he does not wish it any more than the Secretary of War for him, and both of them together no more than I wish it. Sometimes we have a dispute about how many men General McClellan has had, and those who would disparage him say that he has had a very large number, and those who would disparage the Secretary of War insist that General McClellan has had a very small number. The basis for this is, there is always a wide difference, and on this occasion, perhaps a wider one than usual, between the grand total on McClellan's rolls and the men actually fit for duty; and those who would disparage him talk of the grand total on paper, and those who would disparage the Secretary of War talk of those at present fit for duty. General McClellan has sometimes asked for things that the Secretary of War did not give him. General McClellan is not to blame for asking for what he wanted and needed, and the Secretary of War is not to blame for not giving when he had none to give. And I say here, as far as I know, the Secretary of War has withheld no one thing at any time in my power to give him. I have no accusation against him. I believe he is a brave and able man, and I stand here, as justice requires me to do, to take upon myself what has been charged on the Secretary of War, as withholding from him.

I have talked longer than I expected to do, and now I avail myself of my privilege of saying no more.

The President's Letters on Politics.

TO HORACE GREELEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, Friday, Aug. 22, 1862.

HON. HORACE GREELEY:
DEAR SIR: I have just read yours of the 19th instant, addressed to myself through the New York Tribune.

If there be in it any statements or assumptions of fact which I may know to be erroneous, I do not now and here controvert them.

If there be any inferences which I may believe to be falsely drawn, I do not now and here argue against them.

If there be perceptible in it an impatient and dictatorial tone, I waive it in deference to an old friend whose heart I have always supposed to be right.

As to the policy I "seem to be pursuing," as you say, I have not meant to leave any one in doubt. I would save the Union. I would save it in the shortest way under the Constitution.

The sooner the national authority can be restored, the nearer the Union will be—the Union as it was.

If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save slavery, I do not agree with them.

If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time destroy slavery, I do not agree with them.

My paramount object is to save the Union and not either to save or to destroy slavery.

If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it—and if I could save it by freeing all the slaves, I would do it—and if I could save it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that.

What I do about slavery and the colored race, I do because I believe it helps to save the Union, and what I forbear, I forbear because I do not believe it would help to save the Union.

I shall do less whenever I shall believe what I am doing hurts the cause, and shall do more whenever I believe doing more will help the cause.

I shall try to correct errors when shown to be errors, and I shall adopt new views so fast as they shall appear to be true views.

I have here stated my purpose according to my view of official duty, and I intend no modification of my oft-expressed personal wish that all men everywhere could be free.

Yours,

A. LINCOLN.

THE PRESIDENT'S RESPONSE TO A SERENADE.

JULY, 1863.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I am very glad indeed to see you to night, and yet I will not say I thank you, for this call; but I do most sincerely thank Almighty God for the occasion on which you have called. How long ago is it,—eighty odd years since on the Fourth of July, for the first time, in the history of the world, a nation, by its representatives, assembled and declared as a self-evident truth, "that all men are created equal." That was the birthday of the United States of America. Since then the Fourth of July has had several very peculiar recognitions. The two men most distinguished in the framing and support of the Declaration were Thomas Jefferson and John Adams—the one having penned it, and the other sustained it—the most forcibly in debate—the only two of the fifty-five who signed it, and were elected Presidents of the United States. Precisely fifty years after they put their hands to the paper, it pleased Almighty God to take both from this stage of action. This was indeed an extraordinary and remarkable event in our history. Another President, five years after, was called from this stage of existence on the same day and month of the year; and now on this last Fourth of July, just passed, when we have a gigantic rebellion, at the bottom of which is an effort to overthrow the principle that all men were created equal, we have the surrender of a most powerful position and army on that very day. And not only so, but in a succession of battles in Pennsylvania, near to us, through three days, so rapidly fought that they might be called one great battle, on the first, second, and third of the month of July; and on the fourth the cohorts of those who opposed the Declaration that all men are created equal, “turned tail” and run. [Long continued cheers.] Gentlemen, this is a glorious theme, and the occasion for a speech, but I am not prepared to make one worthy of the occasion. I would like to speak in terms of praise due to the many brave officers and soldiers who have fought in the cause of the Union and liberties of their country from the beginning of the war. These are trying occasions, not only in success, but for the want of success. I dislike to mention the name of one single officer, lest I might do wrong to those I might forget. Recent events bring up glorious names, and particularly prominent ones; but these I will not mention. Having said this much, I will now take the music.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER TO THE ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, August 26, 1863.

Hon. JAMES C. CONKLING:

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter inviting me to attend a mass meeting of unconditional Union men, to be held at the capital of Illinois, on the 3d day of September, has been received. It would be very agreeable for me thus to meet my old friends at my own home; but I cannot just now be absent from here so long as a visit there would require.

The meeting is to be of all those who maintain unconditional devotion to the Union; and I am sure that my old political friends will thank me for tendering, as I do, the nation's gratitude to those other noble men whom no partisan malice or partisan hope can make false to the nation's life.

There are those who are dissatisfied with me. To such I would say: you desire peace, and you blame me that we do not have it. But how can we attain it? There are but three conceivable ways: First—to suppress the Rebellion by force of arms. This I am trying to do. Are you for it? If you are, so far we are agreed. If you are not for it, a second way is to give up the Union. I am against this. Are you for it? If you are, you should say so plainly. If you are not for force, nor yet for dissolution, there only remains some imaginable compromise.

I do not believe that any compromise embracing the maintenance of the Union is now possible. All that I learn leads to a directly opposite belief. The strength of the Rebellion is its military, its army. That army dominates all the country, and all the people within its range. Any offer of terms made by any man or men within that range, in opposition to that army, is simply nothing for the present; because such man or men have no power whatever to enforce their side of a compromise, if one were made with them.

To illustrate: Suppose refugees from the South and peace men of the North get together in convention, and frame and proclaim a compromise embracing a restoration of the Union. In what way can that compromise be used to keep Lee's army out of Pennsylvania? Meade's army can keep Lee's army out of Pennsylvania, and, I think, can ultimately drive it out of existence. But no paper compromise to which the controllers of Lee's army are not agreed can at all affect that army. In an effort at such compromise we would waste time, which the enemy would improve to our disadvantage; and that would be all.

A compromise, to be effective, must be made either with those who control the rebel army, or with the people, first liberated from the domination of that army by the success of our own army. Now, allow me to assure you that no word or intimation from that rebel army, or from any of the men controlling it, in relation to any peace compromise, has ever come to my knowledge or belief. All charges and insinuations to the contrary are deceptive and groundless. And I promise you that if any such proposition shall hereafter come, it shall not be rejected and kept a secret from you. I freely acknowledge myself to be the servant of the people, according to the bond of service, the United States Constitution; and that, as such, I am responsible to them.

But, to be plain. You are dissatisfied with me about the negro. Quite likely there is a difference of opinion between you and myself upon that subject. I certainly wish that all men could be free, while you, I suppose, do not. Yet, I have neither adopted nor proposed any measure which is not consistent with even your view, provided that you are for the Union. I suggested compensated emancipation; to which you replied you wished not to be taxed to buy negroes. But I had not asked you to be taxed to buy negroes, except in such a way as to save you from greater taxation to save the Union exclusively by other means.

You dislike the Emancipation Proclamation, and perhaps would have it retracted. You say it is unconstitutional. I think differently. I think the Constitution invests its Commander-in-Chief with the law of war in time of war. The most that can be said, if so much, is, that slaves are property. Is there, has there ever been, any question that by the law of war, property, both of enemies and friends, may be taken when needed? And is it not needed whenever it helps us and hurts the enemy? Armies, the world over, destroy enemies' property when they cannot use it; and even destroy their own to keep it from the enemy. Civilized belligerents do all in their power to help themselves or hurt the enemy, except a few things regarded as barbarous or cruel. Among the exceptions are the massacre of vanquished foes and non-combatants, male and female.

But the Proclamation, as law, either is valid or is not valid. If it is not valid it needs no retraction. If it is valid it cannot be retracted, any more than the dead can be brought to life. Some of you profess to think its retraction would operate favorably for the Union. Why better after the retraction than before the issue? There was more than a year and a half of trial to suppress the rebellion before the Proclamation was issued, the last one hundred days of which passed under an explicit notice that it was coming, unless averted by those in revolt returning to their allegiance. The war has certainly progressed as favorably for us since the issue of the Proclamation as before.

I know as fully as one can know the opinion of others that some of the commanders of our armies in the field, who have given us our most important victories, believe the emancipation policy and the use of colored troops constitute the heaviest blows yet dealt to the rebellion, and that at least one of those important successes could not have been achieved when it was but for the aid of black soldiers.

Among the commanders who hold these views are some who have never had an affinity with what is called “abolitionism,” or with “Republican party politics,” but who hold them purely as military opinions. I submit their opinions as entitled to some weight against the objections often urged that emancipation and arming the blacks are unwise as military measures, and were not adopted as such in good faith.

You say that you will not fight to free negroes. Some of them seem willing to fight for you; but no matter. Fight you, then, exclusively, to save the Union. I issued the proclamation on purpose to aid you in saving the Union. Whenever you shall have conquered all resistance to the Union, if I shall urge you to continue fighting, it will be an apt time then for you to declare you will not fight to free negroes. I thought that in your struggle for the Union, to whatever extent the negroes should cease helping the enemy, to that extent it weakened the enemy in his resistance to you. Do you think differently? I thought whatever negroes can be got to do as soldiers, leaves just so much less for white soldiers to do in saving the Union. Does it appear otherwise to you? But negroes, like other people, act upon motives. Why should they do anything for us if we will do nothing for them? If they stake their lives for us they must be prompted by the strongest motives, even the promise of freedom. And the promise, being made, must be kept.

The signs look better. The Father of Waters again goes unvexed to the sea. Thanks to the great Northwest for it; nor yet wholly to them. Three hundred miles up they met New England, Empire, Keystone, and Jersey, hewing their way right and left. The sunny South, too, in more colors than one, also lent a helping hand. On the spot, their part of the history was jotted down in black and white. The job was a great national one, and let none be slighted who bore an honorable part in it. And while those who have cleared the great river may well be proud, even that is not all. It is hard to say that anything has been more bravely and well done than at Antietam, Murfreesboro, Gettysburg, and on many fields of less note. Nor must Uncle Sam's web feet be forgotten. At all the watery margins they have been present, not only on the deep sea, the broad bay, and the rapid river, but also up the narrow, muddy bayou, and wherever the ground was a little damp they have been and made their tracks. Thanks to all. For the great Republic—for the principle it lives by and keeps alive—for man's vast future—thanks to all.

Peace does not appear so distant as it did. I hope it will come soon and come to stay; and so come as to be worth the keeping in all future time. It will then have been proved that among freemen there can be no successful appeal from the ballot to the bullet, and that they who take such appeal are sure to lose their case and pay the cost. And there will be some black men who can remember that with silent tongue, and clinched teeth, and steady eye, and well-poised bayonet, they have helped mankind on to this great consummation, while I fear there will be some white ones unable to forget that with malignant heart and deceitful speech they have striven to hinder it.

Still, let us not be over-sanguine of a speedy, final triumph. Let us be quite sober. Let us diligently apply the means, never doubting that a just God, in his own good time, will give us the rightful result.

Yours, very truly,

A. LINCOLN.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER TO THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, January 16, 1864.

Messrs. CROSEY & NICHOLS:

GENTLEMEN: The number for this month and year of the North American Review was duly received, and for which please accept my thanks. Of course, I am not the most impartial judge, yet, with due allowance for this, I venture to hope that the article entitled "The President's Policy," will be of value to the country. I fear I am not quite worthy of all which is therein kindly said of me personally.

The sentence of twelve lines, commencing at the top of page 252, I could wish to be not exactly as it is. In what is there expressed the writer has not correctly understood me. I have never had a theory that secession could absolve States or people from their obligations. Precisely the contrary is asserted in the inaugural address; and it was because of my belief in the continuation of these obligations that I was puzzled, for a time, as to denying the legal rights of those citizens who remained individually innocent of treason or rebellion. But I mean no more now than to merely call attention to this point.

Yours respectfully,

A. LINCOLN.

The sentence in the January number, referred to by Mr. Lincoln, is as follows:

Even so long ago as when Mr. Lincoln, not yet convinced of the danger and magnitude of the crisis, was endeavoring to persuade himself of Union majorities at the South, and to carry on a war that was half peace in hope of a peace that would have been all war, while he was still enforcing the fugitive slave law, under some theory that secession, however it might absolve States from their obligations, could not escheat them of their claims under the Constitution, and that slaveholders in rebellion had alone, among mortals, the privilege of having their cake and eating it at the same time—the enemies of free government were striving to persuade the people that the war was an abolition crusade. To rebel without reason was proclaimed as one of the rights of man, while it was carefully kept out of sight that to suppress rebellion is the first duty of the Government.

To this the editors of the Review append a note, as follows:

Nothing could have been further from the intention of the editors than to misrepresent the opinions of the President. They merely meant that, in their judgment, the policy of the administration was at first such as practically to concede to any rebel who might choose to profess loyalty, rights under the Constitution whose corresponding obligations he repudiated.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER TO COLONEL HODGES OF KENTUCKY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, April 4, 1864.

A. G. HODGES, Esq., Frankfort, Ky:

MY DEAR SIR: You ask me to put in writing the substance of what I verbally said the other day, in your presence, to Governor Bramlette and Senator Dixon. It was about as follows:

"I am naturally anti-slavery. If slavery is not wrong, nothing is wrong. I cannot remember when I did not so think and feel, and yet I have never understood that the Presidency conferred upon me an unrestricted right to act officially upon this judgment and feeling. It was in the oath I took that I would to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.

I could not take the office without taking the oath. Nor was it my view that I might take an oath to get power, and break the oath in using the power. I understood, too, that in ordinary and civil administration this oath even forbade me to practically indulge my primary abstract judgment on the moral question of slavery. I had publicly declared this many times, and in many ways. And I aver that, to this day, I have done no official act in mere deference to my abstract judgment and feeling on slavery. I did understand, however, that my oath to preserve the Constitution to the best of my ability, imposed upon me the duty of preserving, by every indispensable means, that Government—that nation, of which that Constitution was the organic law. Was it possible to lose the nation and yet preserve the Constitution? By general law, life and limb must be protected; yet often a limb must be amputated to save a life; but a life is never wisely given to save a limb. I felt that measures, otherwise unconstitutional, might become lawful, by becoming indispensable to the preservation of the Constitution, through the preservation of the nation. Right or wrong, I assumed this ground, and now avow it. I could not feel that, to the best of my ability I had even tried to preserve the Constitution, if, to save slavery, or any minor matter, I should permit the wreck of Government, country, and Constitution, altogether. When early in the war, General Fremont attempted military emancipation, I forbade it, because I did not then think it an indispensable necessity. When a little later, General Cameron, then Secretary of War, suggested the arming of the blacks, I objected, because I did not yet think it an indispensable necessity. When, still later, General Hunter attempted military emancipation, I again forbade it, because I did not yet think the indispensable necessity had come. When in March and May, and July, 1862, I made earnest and successive appeals to the border States to favor compensated emancipation, I believed the indispensable necessity for military emancipation and arming the blacks would come, unless averted by that measure. They declined the proposition, and I was, in my best judgment, driven to the alternative of either surrendering the Union, and with it, the Constitution, or of laying strong hand upon the colored element. I chose the latter. In choosing it, I hoped for greater gain than loss, but of this I was not entirely confident. More than a year of trial now shows no loss by it in our foreign relations, none in our home popular sentiment, none in our white military force, no loss by it any how, or anywhere. On the contrary, it shows a gain of quite a hundred and thirty thousand soldiers, seamen, and laborers. These are palpable facts, about which, as facts, there can be no cavilling. We have the men; and we could not have had them without the measure.

"And now let any Union man who complains of this measure, test himself by writing down in one line, that he is for subduing the rebellion by force of arms; and in the next, that he is for taking three hundred and thirty thousand men from the Union side, and placing them where they would be best for the measure he condemns. If he cannot face his case so stated, it is only because he cannot face the truth."

I add a word which was not in the verbal conversation. In telling this tale, I attempt no compliment to my own sagacity. I claim not to have controlled events, but confess plainly that events have controlled me. Now at the end of three years' struggle, the nation's condition is not what either party, or any man devised, or expected. God alone can claim it. Whither it is tending seems plain. If God now wills the removal of a great wrong, and wills also that we of the North, as well as you of the South, shall pay fairly for our complicity in that wrong, impartial history will find therein new causes to attest and revere the justice and goodness of God.

Yours, truly,

A. LINCOLN.

TO A NEW YORK MEETING.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, June 3, 1864.

Hon. F. A. CONKLING, and others:

GENTLEMEN: Your letter, inviting me to be present at a mass meeting of loyal citizens to be held at New York, on the 4th inst., for the purpose of expressing gratitude to Lieutenant General Grant for his signal services, was received yesterday. It is impossible for me to attend. I approve, nevertheless, whatever may tend to strengthen and sustain General Grant and the noble armies now under his direction.

My previous high estimate of General Grant has been maintained and heightened by what has occurred in the remarkable campaign he is now conducting. While the magnitude and difficulty of the task before him do not prove less than I expected, he and his brave soldiers are now in the midst of their great trial, and I trust at your meeting you will so shape your good words that they may turn to men and guns, moving to his and their support.

Yours, truly,

A. LINCOLN.

SPEECH OF MR. LINCOLN AT THE PHILADELPHIA FAIR, JUNE 16, 1864.

I suppose that this toast was intended to open the way for me to say something.

War, at the best, is terrible, and this war of ours, in its magnitude and in its duration, is one of the most terrible. It has deranged business, totally in many localities, and partially in all localities. It has destroyed property and ruined homes; it has produced a national debt and taxation unprecedented, at least in this country; it has carried mourning to almost every home, until it can almost be said that the "heavens are hung in black."

Yet the war continues, and several relieving coincidents have accompanied it from the very beginning which have not been known, as I understand, or have any knowledge of, in any former wars in the history of the world. The Sanitary Commission, with all its benevolent labors; the Christian Commission, with all its Christian and benevolent labors; and the various places, arrangements, so to speak, and institutions, have contributed to the comfort and relief of the soldiers. You have two of these places in this city—the Cooper Shop and Union Volunteer Refreshment Saloons. And, lastly, these Fairs, which, I believe, began only in last August, if I mistake not, in Chicago, then at Boston, at Cincinnati, Brooklyn, New York, at Baltimore, and those at present held at St. Louis, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia. The motive and object that lie at the bottom of all these are most worthy; for, say what you will, after all, the most is due to the soldier, who takes his life in his hands and goes to fight the battles of his country. In what is contributed to his comfort when he passes to and fro, and in what is contributed to him when he is sick and wounded, in whatever shape it comes, whether from the fair and tender hand of woman, or from any other source, it is much, very much. But I think that there is still that which is of as much value to him in the continual reminders he sees in the newspapers that while he is absent he is yet remembered by the loved ones at home. Another view of these various institutions, if I may so call them, is worthy of consideration, I think. They are voluntary contributions, given zealously and earnestly, on top of all the disturbances of business, of all the disorders, of all the taxation, and of all the burdens that the war has imposed upon us, giving proof that the national resources are not at all exhausted, and that the national spirit of patriotism is even firmer and stronger than at the commencement of the war.

It is a pertinent question, often asked in the mind privately, and from one to the other, when is the war to end? Surely I feel as deep an interest in this question as any other can, but I do not wish to name a day, a month, or a year when it is to end. I do not wish to run any risk of seeing the time come, without our being ready for the end, for fear of disappointment, because the time had come and not the end. We accepted this war for an object, a worthy object, and the war will end when that object is attained. Under God, I hope it never will end until that time. Speaking of the present campaign, General Grant is reported to have said, I am going through on this line if it takes all summer. This war has taken three years; it was begun or accepted upon the line of restoring the national authority over the whole national domain, and for the American people, as far as my knowledge enables me to speak, I say we are going through on this line if it takes three years more.

My friends, I did not know but that I might be called upon to say a few words before I got away from here, but I did not know it was coming just here. I have never been in the habit of making predictions in regard to the war, but I am almost tempted to make one. If I were to hazard it, it is this: That Grant is this evening, with General Meade and General Hancock, and the brave officers and soldiers with him, in a position from whence he will never be dislodged until Richmond is taken, and I have but one single proposition to put now, and, perhaps, I can best put it in the form of an interrogative. If I shall discover that General Grant and the noble officers and men under him can be greatly facilitated in their work by a sudden pouring forward of men and assistance, will you give them to me? Are you ready to march? [Cries of "yes."] Then, I say, stand ready, for I am watching for the chance. I thank you, gentlemen. [Laughter and cheers.]

This speech was repeatedly interrupted by applause, and at its close three cheers were given for the army of the Potomac, and successive cheers for Grant and Meade and Hancock, and their brave soldiers. In the mean time the President retired from the room.

The Trent Affair.

SECRETARY SEWARD TO MR. ADAMS.

NOVEMBER 30, 1861.

* * * Since that conversation was held Captain Wilkes, in the steamer San Jacinto, has boarded a British colonial steamer and taken from her deck two insurgents who were proceeding to Europe on an errand of treason against their own country. This is a new incident, unknown to and unforeseen, at least in its circumstances, by Lord Palmerston. It is to be met and disposed of by the two Governments, if possible, in the spirit to which I have adverted. Lord Lyons has prudently refrained from opening the subject to me, as, I presume, waiting instructions from home. We have done nothing on the subject to anticipate the discussion, and we have not furnished you with any explanations. We adhere to that course now, because we think it more prudent that the ground taken by the British Government should be first made known to us here, and that the discussion, if there must be one, shall be had here. It is proper, however, that you should know one fact in the case, without indicating that we attach much importance to it, namely, that, in the capture of Messrs. Mason and Slidell on board a British vessel, Captain Wilkes having acted without any instructions from the Government, the subject is therefore free from the embarrassment which might have resulted if the act had been specially directed by us.

I trust that the British Government will consider the subject in a friendly temper, and it may expect the best disposition on the part of this Government.

EARL RUSSELL TO LORD LYONS.

NOVEMBER 30, 1861.

My Lord: Intelligence of a very grave nature has reached her Majesty's Government.

This intelligence was conveyed officially to the knowledge of the Admiralty by Commander Williams, agent for mails on board the contract steamer Trent.

It appears from the letter of Commander Williams, dated "Royal Mail Contract Packet Trent, at sea, November 9," that the Trent left Havana on the 7th instant, with her Majesty's mails for England, having on board numerous passengers. Commander Williams states that shortly after noon, on the 8th, a steamer having the appearance of a man-of-war, but not showing colors, was observed ahead. On nearing her, at 1.15 p. m., she fired a round shot from her pivot-gun across the bows of the Trent and showed American colors. While the Trent was approaching her slowly, the American vessel discharged a shell across the bows of the Trent, exploding half a cable's length ahead of her. The Trent then stopped, and an officer with a large armed guard of marines boarded her. The officer demanded a list of the passengers; and, compliance with this demand being refused, the officer said he had orders to arrest Messrs. Mason, Slidell, McFarland, and Eustis, and that he had sure information of their being passengers in the Trent. While some parley was going on upon this matter, Mr. Slidell stepped forward and told the American officer that the four persons he had named were then standing before him. The commander of the Trent and Commander Williams protested against the act of taking by force out of the Trent these four passengers, then under the protection of the British flag. But the San Jacinto was at that time only two hundred yards from the Trent, her ship's company at quarters, her ports open, and tampions out. Resistance was therefore out of the question, and the four gentlemen before named were forcibly taken out of the ship. A further demand was made that the commander of the Trent should proceed on board the San Jacinto, but he said he would not go unless forcibly compelled likewise, and this demand was not insisted upon.

It thus appears that certain individuals have been forcibly taken from on board a British vessel, the ship of a neutral Power, while such vessel was pursuing a lawful and innocent voyage—an act of violence which was an affront to the British flag and a violation of international law.

Her Majesty's Government, bearing in mind the friendly relations which have long subsisted between Great Britain and the United States, are willing to believe that the United States naval officer who committed the aggression was not acting in compliance with any authority from his Government, or that if he conceived himself to be so authorized he greatly misunderstood the instructions which he had received. For the Government of the United States must be fully aware that the British Government could not allow such an affront to the national honor to pass without full reparation, and her Majesty's Government are unwilling to believe that it could be the deliberate intention of the Government of the United States unnecessarily to force into discussion between the two Governments a question of so grave a character, and with regard to which the whole British nation would be sure to entertain such unanimity of feeling.

Her Majesty's Government, therefore, trust that when this matter shall have been brought under the consideration of the Government of the United States that Government will, of its own accord, offer to the British Government such redress as alone could satisfy the British nation, namely, the liberation of the four gentlemen and their delivery to your lordship, in order that they may again be placed under British protection, and a suitable apology for the aggression which has been committed.

Should these terms not be offered by Mr. Seward, you will propose them to him.

You are at liberty to read this dispatch to the Secretary of State, and, if he shall desire it, you will give him a copy of it.

SECRETARY SEWARD TO LORD LYONS.

DECEMBER 26, 1861.

My Lord: Earl Russell's despatch of November the 30th, a copy of which you have left with me at my request, is of the following effect, namely:

That a letter of Commander Williams, dated Royal Mail Contract Packetboat Trent, at sea, November 9th, states that that vessel left Havana on the 7th of November, with her Majesty's mails for England, having on board numerous passengers. Shortly after noon, on the 8th of November, the United States war steamer San Jacinto, Capt. Wilkes, not showing colors, was observed ahead. That steamer, on being neared by the Trent, at one o'clock fifteen minutes in the afternoon, fired a round shot from a pivot-gun across her bows, and showed American colors. While the Trent was approaching slowly towards the San Jacinto, she discharged a shell across the Trent's bows, which exploded at half a cable's length before her. The Trent then stopped, and an officer with a large armed guard of marines boarded her. The officer said he had orders to arrest Messrs. Mason, Slidell, McFarland, and Eustis, and had sure information that they were passengers in the Trent. While some parley was going on upon this matter, Mr. Slidell stepped forward and said to the American officer that the four persons he had named were standing before him. The commander of the Trent and Commander Williams protested against the act of taking those four passengers out of the Trent, they then being under the protection of the British flag. But the San Jacinto was at this time only two hundred yards distant, her ship's company at quarters, her ports open and tampions out, and so resistance was out of the question. The four persons before named were then forcibly taken out of the ship. A further demand was made that the commander of the Trent should proceed on board the San Jacinto, but he said he would not go unless forcibly compelled likewise, and this demand was not insisted upon.

Upon this statement Earl Russell remarks that it thus appears that certain individuals have been forcibly taken from on board a British vessel, the ship of a neutral power, while that vessel was pursuing a lawful and innocent voyage—an act of violence which was an affront to the British flag and a violation of international law.

Earl Russell next says that her Majesty's Government, bearing in mind the friendly relations which have long subsisted between Great Britain and the United States, are willing to believe that the naval officer who committed this aggression was not acting in compliance with any authority from his Government, or that, if he conceived himself to be so authorized, he greatly misunderstood the instructions which he had received.

Earl Russell argues that the United States must be fully aware that the British Government could not allow such an affront to the national honor to pass without full reparation, and they are willing to believe that it could not be the deliberate intention of the Government of the United States unnecessarily to force into discussion between the two Governments a question of so grave a character, and with regard to which the whole British nation would be sure to entertain such unanimity of feeling.

Earl Russell, resting upon the statement and the argument which I have thus recited, closes with saying that her Majesty's government trust that when this matter shall have been brought under the consideration of the Government of the United States, it will, of its own accord, offer to the British Government such redress as alone could satisfy the British nation, namely, the liberation of the four prisoners taken from the Trent, and their delivery to your lordship, in order that they may again be placed under British protection, and a suitable apology for the aggression which has been committed. Earl Russell finally instructs you to propose those terms to me, if I should not first offer them on the part of the Government.

This despatch has been submitted to the President.

The British government has rightly conjectured, what it is now my duty to state, that Captain Wilkes, in conceiving and executing the proceeding in question, acted upon his own suggestions of duty, without any direction or instruction, or even foreknowledge of it, on the part of this Government. No directions had been given to him, or any other naval officer, to arrest the four persons named, or any of them, on the Trent or any other British vessel, or on any other neutral vessel, at the place where it occurred or elsewhere. The British government will justly infer from these facts that the United States not only have had no purpose, but even no thought, of forcing into discussion the question which has arisen, or any other which could affect in any way the sensibilities of the British nation.

It is true that a round shot was fired by the San Jacinto from her pivot-gun when the Trent was distantly approaching. But, as the facts have been reported to this government, the shot was nevertheless intentionally fired in a direction so obviously divergent from the course of the Trent as to be quite as harmless as a blank shot, while it should be regarded as a signal.

So also we learn that the Trent was not approaching the San Jacinto slowly when the shell was fired across her bows, but, on the contrary, the Trent was, or seemed to be, moving under a full head of steam, as if with a purpose to pass the San Jacinto.

We are informed also that the boarding officer, (Lieutenant Fairfax,) did not board the Trent with a large armed guard, but he left his marines in his boat when he entered the Trent. He stated his instructions from Captain Wilkes to search for the four persons named, in a respectful and courteous, though decided manner, and he asked the captain of the Trent to show his passenger list, which was refused. The lieutenant, as we are informed, did not employ absolute force in transferring the passengers, but he used just so much as was necessary to satisfy the parties concerned that refusal or resistance would be unavailing.

So, also, we are informed that the captain of the Trent was not at any time or in any way required to go on board the San Jacinto.

These modifications of the case, as presented by Commander Williams, are based upon our official reports.

I have now to remind your lordship of some facts which doubtless were omitted by Earl Russell, with the very proper and becoming motive of allowing them to be brought into the case, on the part of the United States, in the way most satisfactory to this Government. These facts are, that at the time the transaction occurred an insurrection was existing in the United States which this Government was engaged in suppressing by the employment of land and naval forces; that in regard to this domestic strife the United States considered Great Britain as a friendly power, while she had assumed for herself the attitude of a neutral; and that Spain was considered in the same light, and had assumed the same attitude as Great Britain.

It had been settled by correspondence that the United States and Great Britain mutually recognized as applicable to this local strife these two articles of the declaration made by the Congress of Paris in 1856, namely, that the neutral or friendly flag should cover enemy's goods not contraband of war, and that neutral goods not contraband of war are not liable to capture under an enemy's flag. These exceptions of contraband from favor were a negative acceptance by the parties of the rule hitherto everywhere recognized as a part of the law of nations, that whatever is contraband is liable to capture and confiscation in all cases.

James M. Mason and E. J. McFarland are citizens of the United States and residents of Virginia. John Slidell and George Eustis are citizens of the United States and residents of Louisiana. It was well known at Havana when these parties embarked in the Trent that James M. Mason was proceeding to England in the affected character of a minister plenipotentiary to the Court of St. James, under a pretended commission from Jefferson Davis, who had assumed to be president of the insurrectionary party in the United States, and E. J. McFarland was going with him in a like unreal character of secretary of legation to the pretended mission. John Slidell, in similar circumstances, was going to Paris as a pretended minister to the Emperor of the French, and George Eustis was the chosen secretary of legation for that simulated mission. The fact that these persons had assumed such characters has been since avowed by the same Jefferson Davis in a pretended message to an unlawful and insurrectionary Congress. It was, we think, rightly presumed that these ministers bore pretended credentials and instructions, and such papers are in the law known as despatches. We are informed by our consul at Paris that these despatches, having escaped the search of the Trent, were actually conveyed and delivered to emissaries of the insurrection in England. Although it is not essential, yet it is proper to state, as I do also upon information and belief, that the owner and agent, and all the officers of the Trent, including Commander Williams, had knowledge of the assumed characters and purposes of the persons before named when they embarked on that vessel.

Your lordship will now perceive that the case before us, instead of presenting a merely flagrant act of violence on the part of Captain Wilkes, as might well be inferred from the incomplete statement of it that went up to the British government, was undertaken as a simple legitima and legitimate belligerent proceeding by Captain Wilkes to arrest and capture a neutral vessel engaged in carrying contraband of war for the use and benefit of the insurgents.

The question before us is, whether this proceeding was authorized by and conducted according to the law of nations. It involves the following inquiries:

1st. Were the persons named and their supposed despatches contraband of war?

2d. Might Captain Wilkes lawfully stop and search the Trent for these contraband persons and despatches?

3d. Did he exercise that right in a lawful and proper manner?

4th. Having found the contraband persons on board and in presumed possession of the contraband despatches, had he a right to capture the persons?

5th. Did he exercise that right of capture in the manner allowed and recognized by the laws of nations?

If all these inquiries shall be resolved in the affirmative the British government will have no claim for reparation.

I address myself to the first inquiry, namely, were the four persons mentioned, and their supposed despatches, contraband?

Maritime law so generally deals, as its professors say, in rem, that is with property, and so seldom with persons, that it seems a straining of the term contraband to apply it to them. But persons, as well as property, may become contraband, since the word means broadly "contrary to proclamation, prohibited, illegal, unlawful."

All writers and judges pronounce naval or military persons in the service of the enemy contraband. Vattel says war allows us to cut off from an enemy all his resources, and to hinder him from sending ministers to solicit assistance. And Sir William Scott says you may stop the ambassador of your enemy on his passage. Despatches are not less clearly contraband, and the bearers or couriers who undertake to carry them fall under the same condemnation.

A subtlety might be raised whether pretended ministers of a usurping power, not recognized as legal by either the belligerent or the neutral, could be held to be contraband. But it would disappear on being subjected to what is the true test in all cases—namely, the spirit of the law. Sir

William Scott, speaking of civil magistrates who are arrested and detained as contraband, says:

"It appears to me on principle to be but reasonable that when it is of sufficient importance to the enemy that such persons shall be sent out on the public service at the public expense, it should afford equal ground of forfeiture against the vessel that may be let out for a purpose so intimately connected with the hostile operations."

I trust that I have shown that the four persons who were taken from the Trent by Captain Wilkes, and their despatches, were contraband of war.

The second inquiry is, whether Captain Wilkes had a right by the law of nations to detain and search the Trent.

The Trent, though she carried mails, was a contract or merchant vessel—a common carrier for hire. Maritime law knows only three classes of vessels—vessels of war, revenue vessels, and merchant vessels. The Trent falls within the latter class. Whatever disputes have existed concerning a right of visitation or search in time of peace, none, it is supposed, has existed in modern times about the right of a belligerent in time of war to capture contraband in neutral and even friendly merchant vessels, and of the right of visitation and search, in order to determine whether they are neutral, and are documented as such according to the law of nations.

I assume in the present case what, as I read British authorities, is regarded by Great Britain herself as true maritime law: That the circumstances that the Trent was proceeding from a neutral port to another neutral port does not modify the right of the belligerent captor.

The third question is whether Captain Wilkes exercised the right of search in a lawful and proper manner.

If any doubt hung over this point, as the case was presented in the statement of it adopted by the British Government, I think it must have already passed away before the modifications of that statement which I have already submitted.

I proceed to the fourth inquiry, namely: Having found the suspected contraband of war on board the Trent, had Captain Wilkes a right to capture the same?

Such a capture is the chief, if not the only recognized, object of the permitted visitation and search. The principle of the law is, that the belligerent exposed to danger may prevent the contraband persons or things from applying themselves or being applied to the hostile uses or purposes designed. The law is so very liberal in this respect that when contraband is found on board a neutral vessel not only is the contraband forfeited, but the vessel which is the vehicle of its passage or transportation, being tainted, also becomes contraband, and is subjected to capture and confiscation.

Only the fifth question remains, namely: Did Captain Wilkes exercise the right of capturing the contraband in conformity with the law of nations?

It is just here that the difficulties of the case begin. What is the manner which the law of nations prescribes for disposing of the contraband when you have found and seized it on board of the neutral vessel? The answer would be easily found if the question were what you shall do with the contraband vessel. You must take or send her into a convenient port, and subject her to a judicial prosecution there in admiralty, which will try and decide the questions of belligerency, neutrality, contraband, and capture. So, again, you would promptly find the same answer if the question were, What is the manner of proceeding prescribed by the law of nations in regard to the contraband, if it be property or things of material or pecuniary value?

But the question here concerns the mode of procedure in regard, not to the vessel that was carrying the contraband, nor yet to contraband things which worked the forfeiture of the vessel, but to contraband persons.

The books of law are dumb. Yet the question is as important as it is difficult. First, the belligerent captor has a right to prevent the contraband officer, soldier, sailor, minister, messenger, or courier from proceeding in his unlawful voyage and reaching the destined scene of his injurious service. But, on the other hand, the person captured may be innocent—that is, he may not be contraband. He, therefore, has a right to a fair trial of the accusation against him. The neutral State that has taken him under its flag is bound to protect him if he is not contraband, and is therefore entitled to be satisfied upon that important question. The faith of that State is pledged to his safety, if innocent, as its justice is pledged for his surrender if he is really contraband. Here are conflicting claims, involving personal liberty, life, honor, and duty. Here are conflicting national claims, involving welfare, safety, honor, and empire. They require a tribunal and a trial. The captors and the captured are equals; the neutral and the belligerent State are equals.

While the law authorities were found silent, it was suggested at an early day by this Government that you should take the captured persons into a convenient port, and institute judicial proceedings there to try the controversy. But only courts of admiralty have jurisdiction in maritime cases, and these courts have formulas to try only claims to contraband chattels, but none to try claims concerning contraband persons. The courts can entertain no proceedings and render no judgment in favor of or against the alleged contraband men.

It was replied all this was true; but you can reach in those courts a decision which will have the moral weight of a judicial one by a circuitous proceeding. Convey the suspected men, together with the suspected vessel, into port, and try there the question whether the vessel is contraband. You can prove it to be so by proving the suspected men to be contraband, and the court must then determine the vessel to be contraband. If the men are not contraband the vessel will escape condemnation. Still, there is no judgment for or against the captured persons. But it was assumed that there would result from the determination of the court concerning the vessel a legal certainty concerning the character of the men.

This course of proceeding seemed open to many objections. It elevates the incidental inferior private interest into the proper place of the main paramount public one, and possibly it may make the fortunes, the safety, or the existence of a nation depend on the accidents of a merely personal and pecuniary litigation. Moreover, when the judgment of the prize court upon the lawfulness of the capture of the vessel is rendered, it really concludes nothing, and binds neither the belligerent State nor the neutral upon the great question of the disposition to be made of the captured contraband persons. That question is still to be really determined, if at all, by diplomatic arrangement or by war.

One may well express his surprise when told that the law of nations has furnished no more reasonable, practical, and perfect mode than this of determining questions of such grave import between sovereign powers. The regret we may feel on the occasion is nevertheless modified by the reflection that the difficulty is not altogether anomalous. Similar and equal deficiencies are found in every system of municipal law, especially in the system which exists in the greater portions of Great Britain and the United States. The title to personal property can hardly ever be resolved by a court without resorting to the fiction that the claimant has lost and the possessor has found it, and the title to real estate is disputed by real litigants under the names of imaginary persons. It must be confessed, however, that while all aggrieved nations demand, and all impartial ones concede, the need of some form of judicial process in determining the characters of contraband persons, no other form than the illogical and circuitous one thus described exists, nor has any other yet been suggested. Practically, therefore, the choice is between that judicial remedy or no judicial remedy whatever.

If there be no judicial remedy, the result is that the question must be determined by the captor himself, on the deck of the prize vessel. Very grave objections arise against such a course. The captor is armed, the neutral is unarmed. The captor is interested, prejudiced, and perhaps violent; the neutral, if truly neutral, is disinterested, subdued, and helpless. The tribunal is irresponsible, while its judgment is carried into instant execution. The captured party is compelled to submit, though bound by no legal, moral, or treaty obligation to acquiesce. Reparation is distant and problematical, and depends at last on the justice, magnanimity, or weakness of the State in whose behalf and by whose authority the capture was made. Out of these disputes reprisals and wars necessarily arise, and these are so frequent and destructive that it may well be doubted whether this form of remedy is not a greater social evil than all that could follow if the belligerent right of search were universally renounced and abolished forever. But carry the case one step further. What if the State that has made the capture unreasonably refuse to hear the complaint of the neutral or to redress it? In that case, the very act of capture would be an act of war—of war begun without notice, and possibly entirely without provocation.

I think all unprejudiced minds will agree that, imperfect as the existing judicial remedy may be supposed to be, it would be, as a general practice, better to follow it than to adopt the summary one of leaving the decision with the captor, and relying upon diplomatic debates to review his decision. Practically, it is a question of choice between law, with its imperfections and delays, and war, with its evils and desolations. Nor is it ever to be forgotten that neutrality, honestly and justly preserved, is always the harbinger of peace, and therefore is the common interest of nations, which is only saying that it is the interest of humanity itself.

At the same time it is not to be denied that it may sometimes happen that the judicial remedy will become impossible, as by the shipwreck of the prize vessel, or other circumstances which excuse the captor from sending or taking her into port for confiscation. In such a case the right of the captor to the custody of the captured persons, and to dispose of them, if they are really contraband, so as to defeat their unlawful purposes, cannot reasonably be denied. What rule shall be applied in such a case? Clearly, the captor ought to be required to show that the failure of the judicial remedy results from circumstances beyond his control, and without his fault. Otherwise, he would be allowed to derive advantage from a wrongful act of his own.

In the present case, Captain Wilkes, after capturing the contraband persons and making prize of the Trent in what seems to be a perfectly lawful manner, instead of sending her into port, released her from the capture, and permitted her to proceed with her whole cargo upon her voyage. He thus effectually prevented the judicial examination which might otherwise have occurred.

If, now, the capture of the contraband persons and the capture of the contraband vessel are to be regarded, not as two separate or distinct transactions under the law of nations, but as one transaction, one capture only, then it follows that the capture in this case was left unfinished, and was abandoned. Whether the United States have a right to retain the chief public benefits of it, namely, the custody of the captured persons on proving them to be contraband, will depend upon the preliminary question whether the leaving of the transaction unfinished was necessary, or whether it was unnecessary, and therefore voluntary. If it was necessary, Great Britain, as we suppose, must, of course, waive the defect, and the consequent failure of the judicial remedy. On the other hand, it is not seen how the United States can insist upon her waiver of that judicial remedy, if the defect of the capture resulted from an act of Captain Wilkes, which would be a fault on their own side.

Captain Wilkes has presented to this Government his reasons for releasing the Trent. "I forbore to seize her," he says, "in consequence of my being so reduced in officers and crew, and the derangement it would cause innocent persons, there being a large number of passengers who would have been put to great loss and inconvenience, as well as disappointment, from the interruption it would have caused them in not being able to join the steamer from St. Thomas to Europe. I therefore concluded to sacrifice the interest of my officers and crew in the prize, and suffered her to proceed after the detention necessary to effect the transfer of those commissioners, considering I had obtained the important end I had in view, and which affected the interest of our country and interrupted the action of that of the confederates."

I shall consider, first, how these reasons ought to affect the action of this Government; and secondly, how they ought to be expected to affect the action of Great Britain.

The reasons are satisfactory to this Government, so far as Captain Wilkes is concerned. It could not desire that the San Jacinto, her officers and crew, should be exposed to danger and loss by weakening their number to detach a prize crew to go on board the Trent. Still less could it disavow the humane motive of preventing inconveniences, losses, and perhaps disasters, to the several hundred innocent passengers found on board the prize vessel. Nor could this Government perceive any ground for questioning the fact that these reasons, though apparently incongruous, did operate in the mind of Captain Wilkes and determine him to release the Trent. Human actions generally proceed upon mingled, and sometimes conflicting motives. He manifested the sacrifices which this decision would cost. It manifestly, however, did not occur to him that beyond the sacrifice of the private interests (as he calls them) of his officers and crew, there might also possibly be a sacrifice even of the chief and public object of his capture, namely, the right of his Government to the custody and disposition of the captured persons. This Government cannot censure him for this oversight. It confesses that the whole subject came unforeseen upon the Government, as doubtless it did upon him. Its present convictions on the point in question are the result of deliberate examination and deduction now made, and not of any impressions previously formed.

Nevertheless, the question now is, not whether Captain Wilkes is justified to his Government in what he did, but what is the present view of the Government as to the effect of what he has done. Assuming now, for argument's sake only, that the release of the Trent, if voluntary, involved a waiver of the claim of the Government to hold the captured persons, the United States could in that case have no hesitation in saying that the act which has thus already been approved by the Government must be allowed to draw its legal consequence after it. It is of the very nature of a gift or a charity that the giver cannot, after the exercise of his benevolence is past, recall or modify its benefits.

We are thus brought directly to the question whether we are entitled to regard the release of the Trent as involuntary, or whether we are obliged to consider that it was voluntary. Clearly the release would have been involuntary had it been made solely upon the first ground assigned for it by Captain Wilkes, namely, a want of a sufficient force to send the prize vessel into port for adjudication. It is not the duty of a captor to hazard his own vessel in order to secure a judicial examination to the captured party. No large prize crew, however is legally necessary, for it is the duty of the captured party to acquiesce, and go willingly before the tribunal to whose jurisdiction it appeals. If the captured party indicate purposes to employ means of resistance which the captor cannot with probable safety to himself overcome, he may properly leave the vessel to go forward; and neither she nor the State she represents can ever afterwards justly object that the captor deprived her of the judicial remedy to which she was entitled.

But the second reason assigned by Captain Wilkes for releasing the Trent differs from the first. At best, therefore, it must be held that Captain Wilkes, as he explains himself, acted from combined sentiments of prudence and generosity, and so that the release of the prize vessel was not strictly necessary or involuntary.

Secondly, how ought we to expect these explanations by Captain Wilkes of his reasons for leaving the capture incomplete to affect the action of the British government?

The observation upon this point which first occurs, is, that Captain Wilkes's explanations were not made to the authorities of the captured vessel. If made known to them, they might have approved and taken the release upon the condition of waiving a judicial investigation of the whole transaction, or they might have refused to accept the release upon that condition.

But the case is one not with them, but with the British government. If we claim that Great Britain ought not to insist that a judicial trial has been lost because we voluntarily released the offending vessel out of consideration for her innocent passengers, I do not see how she is to be bound to acquiesce in the decision which was thus made by us without necessity on our part, and without knowledge of conditions or consent on her own. The question between Great Britain and ourselves thus stated would be a question not of right and of law, but of favor to be conceded by her to us in return for favors shown by us to her, of the value of which favors on both sides we ourselves shall be the judge. Of course the United States could have no thought of raising such a question in any case.

I trust that I have shown to the satisfaction of the British Government, by a very simple and natural statement of the facts, and analysis of the law applicable to them, that this Government has neither meditated, nor practiced, nor approved any deliberate wrong in the transaction to which they have called its attention; and, on the contrary, that what has happened has been simply an inadvertency, consisting in a departure, by the naval officer, free from any wrongful motive, from a rule uncertainly established, and probably by the several parties concerned either imperfectly understood or entirely unknown. For this error the British Government has a right to expect the same reparation that we, as an independent State, should expect from Great Britain or from any other friendly nation in a similar case.

I have not been unaware that, in examining this question, I have fallen into an argument for what seems to be the British side of it against my own country. But I am relieved from all embarrassment on that subject. I had hardly fallen into that line of argument when I discovered that I was really defending and maintaining, not an exclusively British interest, but an old, honored, and cherished American cause, not upon British authorities, but upon principles that constitute a large portion of the distinctive policy by which the United States have developed the resources of a continent, and thus becoming a considerable maritime power, have won the respect and confidence of many nations. These principles were laid down for us in 1804, by James Madison, when Secretary of State, in the administration of Thomas Jefferson, in instructions given to James Monroe, our Minister to England. Although the case before him concerned a description of persons different from those who are incidentally the subjects of the present discussion, the ground he assumed then was the same I now occupy, and the arguments by which he sustained himself upon it have been an inspiration to me in preparing this reply.

"Whenever," he says, "property found in a neutral vessel is supposed to be liable on any ground to capture and condemnation, the rule in all cases is, that the question shall not be decided by the captor, but be carried before a legal tribunal, where a regular trial may be had, and where the captor himself is liable to damages for an abuse of his power. Can it be reasonable, then, or just, that a belligerent commander who is thus restricted, and thus responsible in a case of mere property of trivial amount, should be permitted, without recurring to any tribunal whatever, to examine the crew of a neutral vessel, to decide the important question of their respective allegiances, and to carry that decision into execution by forcing every individual he may choose into a service abhorrent to his feelings, cutting him off from his most tender connexions, exposing his mind and his person to the most humiliating discipline, and his life itself to the greatest danger. Reason, justice, and humanity unite in protesting against so extravagant a proceeding."

If I decide this case in favor of my own Government, I must disavow its most cherished principles, and reverse and forever abandon its essential policy. The country cannot afford the sacrifice. If I maintain those principles, and adhere to that policy, I must surrender the case itself. It will be seen, therefore, that this Government could not deny the justice of the claim presented to us in this respect upon its merits. We are asked to do the British nation just what we have always insisted all nations ought to do to us.

The claim of the British government is not made in a discourteous manner. This Government, since its first organization, has never used more guarded language in a similar case.

In coming to my conclusion I have not forgotten that, if the safety of this Union required the detention of the captured persons, it would be the right and duty of this Government to detain them. But the effectual check and waning proportions of the existing insurrection, as well as the comparative unimportance of the captured persons themselves, when dispassionately weighed, happily forbid me from resorting to that defence.

Nor am I unaware that American citizens are not in any case to be unnecessarily surrendered for any purpose into the keeping of a foreign State. Only the captured persons, however, or others who are interested in them, could justly raise a question on that ground.

Nor have I been tempted at all by the suggestions that cases might be found in history where Great Britain refused to yield to other nations, and even to ourselves, claims like that which is now before us. Those cases occurred when Great Britain, as well as the United States, was the home of generations, which, with all their peculiar interests and passions, have passed away. She could in no other way so effectually disavow any such injury as we think she does by assuming now as her own the ground upon which we then stood. It would tell little for our own claims to the character of a just and magnanimous people if we should so far consent to be guided by the law of retaliation as to lift up buried injuries from their graves to oppose against what national consistency and the national conscience compel us to regard as a claim intrinsically right.

Putting behind me all suggestions of this kind, I prefer to express my satisfaction that, by the adjustment of the present case upon principles confessedly American, and yet, as I trust, mutually satisfactory to both of the nations concerned, a question is finally and rightly settled between them, which, heretofore exhausting not only all forms of peaceful discussion, but also the arbitrament of war itself, for more than a half a century alienated the two countries from each other, and perplexed with fears and apprehensions all other nations.

The four persons in question are now held in military custody at Fort Warren, in the State of Massachusetts. They will be cheerfully liberated. Your lordship will please indicate a time and place for receiving them.

EARL RUSSELL TO LORD LYONS.

JANUARY 10, 1862.

MY LORD: In my despatch to you of the 30th of November, after informing you of the circumstances which had occurred in relation to the capture of the four persons taken from on board the Trent, I stated to you that it thus appeared that certain individuals had been forcibly taken from on board a British vessel, the ship of a neutral power, while such vessel was pursuing a lawful and innocent voyage; an act of violence which was an affront to the British flag, and a violation of international law. I concluded by directing you, in case the reparation which her Majesty's government expected to receive should not be offered by Mr. Seward, to propose to that minister to make such redress as alone would satisfy the British nation, namely: first, the liberation of the four gentlemen taken from on board the Trent, and their delivery to your lordship, in order that they might again be placed under British protection; and, secondly, a suitable apology for the aggression which had been committed.

I received yesterday your lordship's despatch of the 27th ultimo, enclosing a note to you from Mr. Seward, which is in substance the answer to my despatch of the 30th of November.

Proceeding at once to the main points in discussion between us, her Majesty's government have carefully examined how far Mr. Seward's note, and the conduct it announces, comply substantially with the two proposals I have recited.

With regard to the first, viz: the liberation of the prisoners with a view to their being again placed under British protection, I find that the note concludes by stating that the prisoners will be cheerfully liberated, and by calling upon your lordship to indicate a time and place for receiving them. No condition of any kind is coupled with the liberation of the prisoners.

With regard to the suitable apology which the British government had a right to expect, I find that the Government of the United States distinctly and unequivocally declares that no directions had been given to Captain Wilkes, or to any other naval officer, to arrest the four persons named or any of them, on the Trent, or on any other British vessel, or on any other neutral vessel, at the place where it occurred or elsewhere.

I find further that the Secretary of State expressly forbears to justify the particular act of which her Majesty's government complained. If the United States Government had alleged that, although Captain Wilkes had no previous instructions for that purpose, he was right in capturing the persons of the four prisoners, and in removing them from the Trent on board his own vessel, to be afterwards carried into a port of the United States, the Government which had thus sanctioned the proceeding of Captain Wilkes would have become responsible for the original violence and insults of the act. But Mr. Seward contents himself with stating that what has happened has been simply an inadvertency, consisting in a departure by a naval officer, free from any wrongful motive, from a rule uncertainly established, and probably by the several parties concerned either imperfectly understood or entirely unknown. The Secretary of State goes on to affirm that for this error the British government has a right to expect the same reparation which the United States as an independent State should expect from Great Britain or from any other friendly nation in a similar case.

Her Majesty's government having carefully taken into their consideration the liberation of the prisoners, the delivery of them into your hands, and the explanations to which I have just referred, have arrived at the conclusion that they constitute the reparation which her Majesty and the British nation has a right to expect.

It gives her Majesty's government great satisfaction to be enabled to arrive at a conclusion favorable to the maintenance of the most friendly relations between the two nations. I need not discuss the modifications in my statement of facts which Mr. Seward says he has derived from the reports of officers of his Government. I cannot conclude, however, without adverting shortly to the discussions which Mr. Seward has raised upon points not prominently brought into question in my despatch of the 30th of November. I there objected, on the part of her Majesty's government, to that which Captain Wilkes had done. Mr. Seward, in his answer, points out what he conceives Captain Wilkes might have done without violating the law of nations.

It is not necessary that I should here discuss in detail the five questions ably argued by the Secretary of State. But it is necessary that I should say that her Majesty's government differ from Mr. Seward in some of the conclusions at which he has arrived; and it may lead to a better understanding between the two nations on several points of international law which may, during the present contest, or at some future time be brought into question, that I should state to you, for communication to the Secretary of State, wherein those differences consist. I hope to do so in a few days.

In the meantime, it will be desirable that the commanders of the United States cruisers should be instructed not to repeat acts for which the British government will have to ask for redress, and which the United States Government cannot undertake to justify.

You will read and give a copy of this despatch to the Secretary of State.

COMMENT OF THE LONDON TIMES.

The London Times of January 11, 1863, commenting on the proper reception to be given these visitors, remarked:

So we do sincerely hope that our countrymen will not give these fellows anything in the shape of an ovation. The civility that is due to a foe in distress is all that they can claim. We have returned them good for evil, and, sooth to say, we should be exceedingly sorry that they should ever be in a situation to choose what return they will make for the good we have now done them. They are here for their own interest, in order, if possible, to drag us into their own quarrel, and, but for the unpleasant contingencies of a prison, rather disappointed perhaps that their detention has not provoked a new war. When they stepped on board the Trent they did not trouble themselves with the thought of the mischief they might be doing an offending neutral; and if now, by any less perilous device, they could entangle us in the war, no doubt they would be only too happy. We trust there is no chance of their doing this, for, impartial as the British public is in the matter, it certainly has no prejudice in favor of slavery, which, if anything, these gentlemen represent. What they and their secretaries are to do here passes our conjecture. They are personally nothing to us. They must not suppose, because we have gone to the very verge of a great war to rescue them, that therefore they are precious in our eyes. We should have done just as much to rescue two of their own negroes; and, had that been the object of the rescue, the swarthy Pompey and Cesar would have had just the same right to triumphal arches and municipal addresses as Messrs. Mason and Slidell. So, please, British public, let's have none of these things. Let the commissioners come up quietly to town, and have their say with anybody who may have time to listen to them. For our part, we cannot see how anything they have to tell can turn the scale of British duty and deliberation. There have been so many cases of peoples and nations establishing an actual independence, and compelling the recognition of the world, that all we have to do is what we have done before, up to the very last year. This is now a simple matter of precedent. Our statesmen and lawyers know quite as much on the subject as Messrs. Mason and Slidell, and are in no need of their information or advice.

ACTION OF CONGRESS.

Second Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress. IN HOUSE.

1861, December 2—Mr. LOVEJOY, by unanimous consent, offered this joint resolution:

That the thanks of Congress are due, and are hereby tendered, to Captain Wilkes of the United States Navy, for his brave, adroit, and patriotic conduct in the arrest and detention of the traitors James M. Mason and John Slidell.

Mr. EDGERTON moved this as a substitute:

That the President of the United States be requested to present to Captain Charles Wilkes a gold medal, with suitable emblems and devices, in testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of his good conduct in promptly arresting the rebel ambassadors James M. Mason and John Slidell.

Which was agreed to; and the resolution passed.

1862, February 19—The Senate indefinitely postponed it.

1861, December 16—Mr. VALLANDIGHAM offered this resolution:

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy has reported to this House that Captain Charles Wilkes, in command of the San Jacinto, an armed public vessel of the United States, did, on the 8th of November, 1861, on the high seas, intercept the Trent, a British mail steamer, and forcibly remove therefrom James M. Mason and John Slidell—"disloyal citizens, leading conspirators, rebel enemies, and dangerous men"—who, with their suite, were on their way to Europe "to promote the cause of the insurrection," claiming to be ambassadors from the so-called Confederate States; and whereas the Secretary of the Navy has further reported to this House, that "the prompt and decisive action of Captain Wilkes on this occasion merited and received the emphatic approval of the Department," and moreover, in a public letter has thanked Captain Wilkes for the act; and whereas this House, on the first day of the session, did propose to tender the thanks of Congress to Captain Wilkes, for his "brave, adroit, and patriotic conduct in the arrest and detention of the traitors James M. Mason and John Slidell;" and whereas further, on the same day, this House did request the President to confine the said James M. Mason and John Slidell in the cells of convicted felons until certain military officers of the United States, captured and held by the so-called Confederate States, should be treated as prisoners of war: Therefore,

Be it resolved, (as the sense of this House,) That it is the duty of the President to now firmly maintain the stand thus taken, approving and adopting the act of Captain Wilkes, in spite of any menace or demand of the British government; and that this House pledges its full support to him in upholding now the honor and vindicating the courage of the Government and people of the United States against a foreign power.

Which, on motion of Mr. FENTON, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs—yeas 109, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aldrich, Alley, Arnold, Babbitt, Joseph Bailey, Baker, Baxter, Beaman, Biddle, Bingham, Francis P. Blair, Jacob B. Blair, Samuel S. Blair, Blake, William G. Brown, Buffinton, Burnham, Culbert, Chamberlain, Clark, Cobb, Coffax, Roscoe Conkling, Cooper, Covode, Davis, Delano, Diven, Duell, Dunlap, Dunn, Edwards, Eliot, English, Fenton, Fessenden, Franchot, Frank, Gooch, Granger, Monarchical Intrigues in Central and South America.

1864, March 15—Mr. McDOWGALL offered this resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any correspondence or other information in possession of the Government, relating to any plan or plans now projected or being projected with a view to the establishment of monarchical governments in Central and South America.

March 24—The PRESIDENT transmitted this paper from the Secretary of State, in reply:

The Secretary of State, to whom has been referred the resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant, requesting the President "to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any correspondence or other information in possession of the Government relating to any plan or plans now projected, or being projected, with a view to the establishment of monarchical governments in Central and South America," has the honor to report, that surmises and jealousies are constantly arising on the subject to which the resolution refers, which are brought to the notice of the Department by our representatives abroad. But there is no correspondence or other form of information which furnishes any reliable facts showing the existence of "plans" for the accomplishment of the object mentioned.

Any correspondence which might be regarded as embraced in the resolution, besides being very vague, is, in its nature, confidential, and its publication at the present time would be incompatible with the public interest.

Alleged Foreign Enlistments.

1864, June 28—The PRESIDENT transmitted, in reply to a Senate resolution of 24th, these reports:

FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

WASHINGTON, June 23, 1864.

The Secretary of State, to whom has been referred the resolution of the Senate of the 24th instant, requesting the President to inform that body "if any authority has been given any one, either in this country or elsewhere, to obtain recruits in Ireland or Canada for our army and navy; and whether any such recruits have been obtained, or whether, to the knowledge of the Government, Irishmen or Canadians have been induced to emigrate to this country in order to be recruited; and if so, what measures, if any, have been adopted in order to arrest such conduct," has the honor, in reply to the inquiries thus submitted, to report, that no authority has been given by the Executive of this Government, or by any executive department, to any one, either in this country or elsewhere, to obtain recruits either in Ireland, or in Canada, or in any foreign country, for either the army or the navy of the United States; and on the contrary, that whenever application for such authority has been made, it has been refused and absolutely withheld.

If any such recruits have been obtained, either in the provinces named in the resolution, or in any foreign country, they have been obtained by persons who are not even citizens of the United States, but subjects or citizens of the country where the recruits were obtained. The persons who obtained such recruits, if any were so obtained, were answerable to the laws of the foreign province or country where their offences were committed, and at the same time they were not within the reach of our own laws and tribunals; and such persons acted without any authority or consent, and even without the knowledge of this Government. This Government has no knowledge that any such recruits have been obtained in the provinces named, or in any foreign country. In two or three instances it has been reported to this department that recruiting agents crossed the Canadian frontier, without authority, with a view to engage recruits or reclaim deserters. The complaints thus made were immediately investigated, the proceedings of such recruiting agents were promptly disavowed and condemned, the recruits or deserters, if any had been brought into the United States, were at once returned, and the offending agents were dismissed from the public service.

In the land and naval forces of the United States there are found not only some Canadians, some Englishmen, and some Irishmen, but also many subjects of continental European powers. All of these persons were voluntary immigrants into the United States. They enlisted after their arrival on our shores, of their own free accord, within our own limits and jurisdiction, and not in any foreign country. The executive government has no knowledge of the nature of the special inducements which led these volunteers to emigrate from their native countries, or of the purposes for which they emigrated. It has, however, neither directly nor indirectly invited their immigration by any offers of employment in the military or naval service. When such persons were found within the United States, exactly the same inducements to military service were open to them which by authority of law were offered at the same time to citizens of the United States.

Having thus answered the inquiries contained in the resolution of the Senate, the Secretary of State might here without inpropriety close this report. Nevertheless, the occasion is a proper one for noticing complaints on the subject of recruitment in our army and navy which have recently found utterance in the British House of Lords. The Secretary of State has, therefore, further to report that the Government of the United States has practiced the most scrupulous care in preventing and avoiding in Great Britain, and in all other foreign countries, any violation of international or municipal laws in regard to the enlistment of soldiers and seamen.

Moreover, when the British government, or any other foreign government, has complained of any alleged violation of the rights of its subjects within the United States, this Government has listened to the complaints patiently, investigated them promptly, and where redress was found due, and was practicable, has cheerfully accorded it. This Government, on the other hand, has been obliged to submit, in the ordinary way, grave complaints of the enlistment, equipment, and periodical payment in British ports of seamen and mariners employed in making unauthorized war from such ports against the United States.

It is a notorious fact, manifest to all the world, that a vigorous and continual tide of emigration is flowing from Europe, and especially from portions of the British empire, and from Germany and Sweden, into the United States. This immigration, like the immigration which preceded it, results from the reciprocal conditions of industrial and social life in Europe and America. Of the mass of immigrants who arrive on our shores, far the largest number go immediately into the occupations of peaceful industry. Those, on the contrary, who are susceptible to the attractions of military life, voluntarily enter the national service with a similar class of our own native citizens, upon the same equal inducements, and with the same patriotic motives. There is no law of nations, and no principles of international comity, which requires us to refuse their aid in the cause of the country and of humanity.

This Government does not repudiate or discourage immigration. The Government frankly avows that it encourages immigration from all countries, but only by open, lawful, and honorable agencies and means. However statesmen in other countries may have at the beginning misunderstood the nature and direction of the present civil war, that nature and that direction were not misunderstood by the Government of the United States. It was foreseen here that the seditious attempt to divide the American Union, if not discouraged by other commercial and maritime powers, would not merely produce great commercial and social embarrassment in the United States, but that, if it should be persisted in and protracted, it must seriously disturb the commerce and industry of other nations. Upon this ground, among others, the Government of the United States earnestly remonstrated with foreign States against their award of unusual commercial and belligerent privileges to the insurgents, in derogation of the sovereignty of the United States. When, however, it was fully disclosed that the insurrection aimed at nothing less than to separate fifteen of these States from the rest, and to re-establish them within our own lawful territory as one single independent nation upon the foundation of African slavery, this Government did not hesitate, so far as authorized by law, to draw upon all the resources of the country, and to call to activity all the energies of the American people to prevent so great a crime. It further resolved to devote its best efforts within the limits of international law and the Constitution of the United States, first to bring African slavery to an end throughout the world, and secondly to strengthen the interest of free labor upon the American continent. It recognized and entered into commercial relations with free States founded on African colonization. It refused a market for slaves, and it pursued the slave trader on the high seas, and denies to him an asylum on our own shores. On the contrary, it invites honest and industrious freemen hither from all parts of the world, and gives them free homes and ample fields, while it opens to them virgin mines and busy workshops, with all the privileges of perfect civil and religious liberty. So far as increase of immigration has resulted from the action of the Government during the present civil war, it is due exclusively to what has thus lawfully been done with those two ends of extinguishing slavery and fortifying freedom always in view. Nor has this Government any reason to be disappointed with the results. The country has sustained a very destructive war for the period of three years. Yet it is not here that national resources or credit fails. It is not here that patriots are wanting to defend the country of their birth or their choice, nor is it here that miners, farmers, merchants, artisans, and laborers lack either subsistence or employment, with abundant rewards. The number of slaves is rapidly diminishing, and the number of freemen continues to augment, even during the convulsions of domestic war, more rapidly than ever a free population advanced in any other country, or even in our own.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

The President.

FROM THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON CITY, June 27, 1864.

Sir: In answer to the Senate resolution of inquiry, passed June 24, 1864, and referred by you to this department, I have the honor to reply:

First. That no authority has been given by this department to any one, either in this country or elsewhere, to obtain recruits in Ireland or Canada for the army of the United States.

Second. That no recruits have been obtained in Ireland or in Canada for the army of the United States with my knowledge or consent, and, to the best of my information and belief none have been obtained, nor any effort made to obtain them.

Third. That neither Irishmen nor Canadians have, with my knowledge, approbation, or consent, or with the knowledge, approbation, or consent of any one in this department, been induced to emigrate to this country in order to enlist into the army.

Fourth. That no measures have been adopted by this department to arrest any such conduct, because no information of any such conduct has reached the department, and I do not believe that it has been practiced in any instance.

I will add that no encouragement or inducement whatever has been extended by this department to any person or persons to obtain recruits for the army anywhere beyond the limits of the United States.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON.

Secretary of War.

FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 27, 1864.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this Department of a resolution passed in the Senate of the United States on the 24th instant, requesting the President of the United States to inform the Senate if any authority has been given to any one, either in this country or elsewhere, to obtain recruits in Ireland or in Canada for our army or navy; and whether any such recruits have been obtained, or whether, to the knowledge of the Government, Irishmen or Canadians have been induced to emigrate to this country in order to be so recruited; and if so, what measures, if any, have been adopted to arrest such conduct; and to state, in reply, that no such order as that indicated in the resolution has been given by the Navy Department to any one, either in this country or elsewhere, nor is the Navy Department aware that any such recruits have been obtained, or that inducements have been offered to Irishmen or Canadians to emigrate to this country in order to be so recruited.

On the occasion of a visit of the United States steamer Kearsarge to Queenstown, Ireland, in November last, several Irishmen secreted themselves on board the vessel, were carried off in her, and when discovered were returned to that port and put ashore. This circumstance gave rise to a charge that the Kearsarge had violated the foreign enlistment act of Great Britain. Captain Winslow, commanding the Kearsarge, disavowed having violated this act or any intention of permitting others under his command to do so. Explanations have been made to the British government, and it is presumed the matter has been satisfactorily settled.

I am, sir, with very great respect, your obedient servant,
GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

Foreign Mediation.

SECRETARY SEWARD'S LETTER TO GOV. HICKS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, April 22, 1861.

His Excellency THOS. H. HICKS, Governor of Maryland:

Sir: I have had the honor to receive your communication this morning, in which you inform me that you have felt it to be your duty to advise the President of the United States to order elsewhere the troops then off Annapolis, and also that no more may be sent through Maryland; and that you have further suggested that Lord Lyons be requested to act as mediator between the contending parties in our country to prevent the effusion of blood. * * *

If eighty years could have obliterated all the other noble sentiments of that age in Maryland, the President would be hopeful, nevertheless, that there is one that would forever remain there and everywhere. That sentiment is that no domestic contention whatever, that may arise among the parties of this Republic, ought in any case to be referred to any foreign arbitration, least of all to the arbitration of an European monarchy.

I have the honor to be, with distinguished consideration, your Excellency's most obedient servant.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FRENCH MEDIATION.

During 1862, the French Government proposed to the Russian and English governments to join it in trying to bring about an armistice for six months between "the Federal Government and the Confederates of the South;" which they declined.

Jan. 9, 1863—M. Drouyn de l'Huys, Minister of Foreign Affairs, addressed M. Mercier, the French Minister at Washington, on this subject.

We add a few paragraphs:

Sir: In forming the purpose of assisting, by the proffer of our good offices, to shorten the period of those hostilities which are desolating the American continent, had we not been guided, beyond all, by the friendship which actuates the government of the Emperor in regard to the United States, the little success of our overtures might chill the interests with which we follow the fluctuations of this contest; but the sentiment to which we have yielded is too sincere for indifference to find a place in our thoughts, and that we should cease to be painfully affected, whilst the war continues to rage.

We cannot regard without profound regret this war, worse than civil, comparable to the most terrible distractions of the ancient republics, and whose disasters multiply in proportion to the resources and the valor which each of the belligerent parties develop.

The government of his Majesty have therefore seriously examined the objections which have been made to us. Where we have suggested the idea of a friendly mediation, and we have asked ourselves whether they are truly of a nature to set aside as premature every tentative to a reconciliation, on one part has been opposed to us the repugnance of the United States to admit the intervention of foreign influence in the dispute, on the other, the hope, which the Federal Government has not abandoned, of attaining its solution by force of arms.

Assuredly, sir, recourse to the good offices of one or several neutral powers contains nothing incompatible with the pride so legitimate amidst a great nation, and wars purely international are not those alone which furnish examples of the useful character of mediation.

SECRETARY SEWARD'S LETTER TO MR. DAYTON.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

WASHINGTON, 6th Feb., 1863.

Sir: The intimation given in your dispatch of January 15th, No. 255, that I might expect a special visit from M. Mercier, has been realized. He called on the 3d instant, and gave me a copy of a dispatch which he had just then received from M. Drouyn de l'Huys under the date of the 21st of January. I have taken the President's instructions, and I now proceed to give you his views upon the subject in question.

It has been considered with seriousness resulting from the reflection that the people of France are known to be faultless sharers with the American nation in the misfortunes and calamities of our unhappy civil war; nor do we on this, any more than on other occasions, forget the traditional friendship of the two countries, which we unhesitatingly believe has inspired the counsels that M. Drouyn de l'Huys has imparted.

He says, "the Federal Government does not despair, we know, of giving more active impulse to hostilities;" and again he remarks, "the protraction of the struggle, in a word, has not shaken the confidence (of the Federal Government) in the definite success of its efforts." These passages seem to me to do unintentional injustice to the language, whether confidential or public, in which this Government has constantly spoken on the subject of the war. It certainly has had and avowed only one purpose—a determination to preserve the integrity of the country. So far from admitting any laxity of effort, or betraying any despondency, the Government, has on the contrary, borne itself cheerfully in all vicissitudes with unwavering confidence in an early and complete triumph of the national cause. Now, when we are, in a manner, invited by a friendly power to review the twenty-one months' history of the conflict, we find no occasion to abate that confidence. Through such an alternation of victories and defeats as is the appointed incident of every war, the land and naval forces of the United States have steadily advanced, reclaiming from the insurgents the ports, forts, and posts, which they had treacherously seized before the strife actually began, and even before it was seriously apprehended. So many of the States and districts which the insurgents included in the field of their projected exclusive slaveholding dominions, have already been re-established under the flag of the Union, that they now retain only the States of Georgia, Alabama, and Texas, with half of Virginia, half of North Carolina, two thirds of South Carolina, half of Mississippi, and one third respectively of Arkansas and Louisiana. The national forces hold even this small territory in close blockade and siege.

This Government, if required, does not hesitate to submit its achievements to the test of comparison; and it maintains that in no part of the world, and in no times, ancient or modern, has a nation, when rendered all unready for combat by the enjoyment of eighty years of almost unbroken peace, so quickly awakened at the alarm of sedition, put forth energies so vigorous, and achieved successes so signal and effective, as those which have marked the progress of this contest on the part of the Union.

M. Drouyn de l'Huys, I fear, has taken other light than the correspondence of this Government for his guidance, in ascertaining its temper and firmness. He has probably read of divisions of sentiment among those who hold themselves forth as organs of public opinion here, and has given to them an undue importance. It is to be remembered that this is a nation of thirty millions, civilly divided into forty-one States and Territories, which cover an expanse hardly less than Europe; that the people are a pure democracy, exercising everywhere the utmost freedom of speech and suffrage; that a great crisis necessarily produces vehement as well as profound debate, with sharp collisions of individual, local, and sectional interests, sentiments and ambitions, and that this heat of controversy is increased by the intervention of speculations, interests, prejudices, and passions from every other part of the civilized world. It is, however, through such debates that the agreement of the nation upon any subject is habitually attained, its resolution formed, and its policy established. While there has been much difference of popular opinion and favor concerning the agents who shall carry on the war, the principles on which it shall be waged, and the means with which it shall be prosecuted, M. Drouyn de l'Huys has only to refer to the statute book of Congress and the Executive ordinances, to learn that the national activity has hitherto been, and yet is, as efficient as that of any other nation—whatever its form of government—ever was, under circumstances of equally grave import to its peace, safety and welfare. Not one voice has been raised anywhere, out of the immediate field of the insurrection, in favor of foreign intervention, of mediation, of arbitration, or of compromise, with the relinquishment of one acre of the national domain, or the surrender of even one constitutional franchise. At the same time, it is manifest to the world that our resources are yet abundant, and our credit adequate to the existing emergency.

What M. Drouyn de l'Huys suggests is that this Government shall appoint commissioners to meet, on neutral ground, commissioners of the insurgents. He supposes that in the conferences to be thus held reciprocal complaints could be discussed, and in place of the accusations which the North and the South now mutually cast upon each other, the conferees would be engaged with discussions of the interests which divide them. He assumes, further, that the commissioners would seek, by means of well-ordered and profound deliberation, whether these interests are definitively irreconcilable, whether separation is an extreme that can no longer be avoided, or whether the memories of a common existence, the ties of every kind which have made of the North and the South one whole Federative State, and have borne them on to so high a degree of prosperity, are not more powerful than the causes which have placed arms in the hands of the two populations.

The suggestion is not an extraordinary one, and it may well have been thought by the Emperor of the French, in the earnestness of his benevolent desire for the restoration of peace, a feasible one. But when M. Drouyn de l'Huys shall come to review it in the light in which it must necessarily be examined in this country, I think he can hardly fail to perceive that it amounts to nothing less than a proposition that, while this Government is engaged in suppressing an armed insurrection, with the purpose of maintaining the constitutional national authority, and preserving the integrity of the country, it shall enter into diplomatic discussion with the insurgents upon the questions whether that authority shall not be renounced, and whether the country shall not be delivered over to disunion, to be quickly followed by ever increasing anarchy.

If it were possible for the Government of the United States to compromise the National authority so far as to enter into such debates, is it not easy to perceive what good results could be obtained by them.

The commissioners must agree in recommending either that the Union shall stand, or that it shall be voluntarily dissolved; or else they must leave the vital question unsettled, to abide at last the fortunes of the war. The Government has not shut out knowledge of the present temper, any more than of the past purposes of the insurgents. There is not the least ground to suppose that the controlling actors would be persuaded at this moment, by any arguments which national commissioners could offer, to forego the ambition that has impelled them to the disloyal position they are occupying. Any commissioners who should be appointed by these actors, or through their dictation or influence, must enter the conference imbued with the spirit, and pledged to the personal fortunes of the insurgent chiefs. The loyal people in the insurrectionary States would be unheard, and any offer for peace by this Government, on the condition of the maintenance of the Union must necessarily be rejected.

On the other hand, as I have already intimated, this Government has not the least thought of relinquishing the trust which has been confided to it by the nation, under the most solemn of all political sanctions; and if it had any such thought, it would still have abundant reason to know that peace proposed at the cost of dissolution would be immediately, unreservedly, and indignantly rejected by the American people. It is a great mistake that European statesmen make, if they suppose this people are demoralized. Whatever, in the case of an insurrection, the people of France, or of Great Britain, or of Switzerland, or the Netherlands would do to save their national existences, no matter how the strife might be regarded by or affect foreign nations, just so much, and certainly no less, the people of the United States will do, if necessary to save for the common benefit the region which is bounded by the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, and by the shores of the Gulfs of St. Lawrence and Mexico, together with the free and common navigation of the Rio Grande, Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Ohio, St. Lawrence, Hudson, Delaware, Potomac, and other natural highways by which this land, which to them is at once a land of inheritance and a land of promise, is opened and watered. Even if the agents of the American people now exercising their power, should, through fear or faction, fall below this height of the national virtue, they would be speedily, yet constitutionally, replaced by others of sterner character and patriotism.

I must be allowed to say, also, that M. Drouyn de l'Huys errs in his description of the parties to the present conflict. We have here, in a political sense, no North and South, no southern and northern States. We have an insurrectionary party, which is located chiefly upon and adjacent to the shore of the Gulf of Mexico; and we have, on the other hand, a loyal people, who constitute not only northern States, but also eastern, middle, western, and southern States.

I have on many occasions heretofore submitted to the French Government the President's views of the interests and the ideas more effective for the time than even interests which lie at the bottom of the American Government and people to sustain the Federal Union. The President has done the same thing in his messages and other public declarations. I refrain, therefore, from reviewing that argument in connection with the existing question.

M. Drouyn de l'Huys draws to his aid the conferences which took place between the colonies and Great Britain, in our Revolutionary war. He will allow us to assume, that action in the crisis of a nation must accord with its necessities, and therefore can seldom be conformed to precedents. Great Britain, when entering on the negotiations had manifestly come to entertain doubts of her ultimate success; and it is certain that the councils of the colonies could not fail to take new courage, if not to gain other advantage, when the parent State compromised so far as to treat of peace on the terms of conceding their independence.

It is true, indeed, that peace must come at some time, and that conferences must attend, if they are not allowed to precede the pacification. There is, however, a better form for such conferences than the one which M. Drouyn de l'Huys suggests. The latter would be palpably in derogation of the Constitution of the United States, and would carry no weight because destitute of the sanction necessary to bind either the disloyal or the loyal portions of the people. On the other hand, the Congress of the United States furnishes a constitutional forum for debates between the alienated parties. Senators and Representatives from the loyal portion of the people are there already, freely empowered to confer; and seats also are vacant, and inviting Senators and Representatives of the discontented party who may be constitutionally sent there from the States involved in the insurrection. Moreover, the conferences which can thus be held in Congress have this great advantage over any that could be organized upon the plan of M. Drouyn de l'Huys, namely: that the Congress, if it were thought wise, could call a national convention to adopt its recommendations, and give them all the solemnity and binding force of organic law. Such conferences between the alienated parties may be said to have already begun. Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Missouri—States which are claimed by the insurgents—are already represented in Congress, and submitting with perfect freedom, and in a proper spirit, their advice upon the course best calculated to bring about, in the shortest time, a firm, lasting, and honorable peace. Representatives have been sent, also, from Louisiana, and others are understood to be coming from Arkansas.

There is a preponderating argument in favor of the congressional form of conference over that which is suggested by M. Drouyn de l'Huys, namely: that while an accession to the latter would bring this Government into a concurrence with the insurgents in disregarding and setting aside an important part of the Constitution of the United States, and so would be of pernicious example, the congressional conference, on the contrary, preserves and gives new strength to that sacred writing which must continue through future ages the sheet anchor of the Republic.

You will be at liberty to read this dispatch to M. Drouyn de l'Huys, and to give him a copy, if he shall desire it.

To the end that you may be informed of the whole case, I transmit a copy of M. Drouyn de l'Huys's dispatch.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONGRESS UPON FOREIGN MEDIATION.

Third Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

Whereas it appears from the diplomatic correspondence submitted to Congress that a proposition, friendly in form, looking to pacification through foreign mediation, has been made to the United States by the Emperor of the French and promptly declined by the President; and whereas the idea of mediation or intervention in some shape may be regarded by foreign governments as practicable, and such governments, through this misunderstanding, may be led to proceedings tending to embarrass the friendly relations which now exist between them and the United States; and whereas, in order to remove for the future all chance of misunderstanding on this subject, and to secure, for the United States the full enjoyment of that freedom from foreign interference which is one of the highest rights of independent States, it seems fit that Congress should declare its convictions thereon: Therefore,

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That while, in times past, the United States have sought and accepted the friendly mediation or arbitration of foreign powers for the pacific adjustment of international questions, where the United States were the party of the one part and some other sovereign power the party of the other part; and while they are not disposed to misconstrue the natural and humane desire of foreign powers to aid in arresting domestic troubles, which, widening in their influence, have afflicted other countries, especially in view of the circumstance, deeply regretted by the American people, that the blow aimed by the rebellion at the national life has fallen heavily upon the laboring population of Europe; yet, notwithstanding these things, Congress cannot hesitate to regard every proposition of foreign interference in the present contest as so far unreasonable and inadmissible that its only explanation will be found in a misunderstanding of the true state of the question, and of the real character of the war in which the Republic is engaged.

2. That the United States are now grappling with an unprovoked and wicked rebellion, which is seeking the destruction of the Republic that it may build a new power, whose corner-stone, according to the confession of its chiefs, shall be slavery: that for the suppression of this rebellion, and thus to save the Republic and to prevent the establishment of such a power, the national Government is now employing armies and fleets in full faith that through these efforts all the purpose of conspirators and rebels will be crushed; that while engaged in this struggle, on which so much depends, any proposition from a foreign power, whatever form it may take, having for its object the arrest of these efforts, is, just in proportion to its influence, an encouragement to the rebellion and to its declared principles, and on this account, is calculated to prolong and embitter the conflict, to cause increased expenditure of blood and treasure, and to postpone the much desired day of peace; that, with these convictions, and not doubting that every such proposition, although made with good intent, is injurious to the national interests, Congress will be obliged to look upon any further attempt in the same direction as an unfriendly act, which it earnestly deprecates, to the end that nothing may occur abroad to strengthen the rebellion or to weaken those relations of good will with foreign powers which the United States are happy to cultivate.

3. That the rebellion from its beginning, and far back even in the conspiracy which preceded its outbreak, was encouraged by the hope of support from foreign powers; that its chiefs frequently boasted that the people of Europe were so far dependent upon regular supplies of the great southern staple that sooner or later their governments would be constrained to take side with the rebellion in some effective form, even to the extent of forcible intervention, if the milder form did not prevail; that the rebellion is now sustained by this hope, which every proposition of foreign interference quickens anew, and that without this life-giving support it must soon yield to the just and paternal authority of the national Government; that, considering these things, which are aggravated by the motive of the resistance thus encouraged, the United States regret that foreign powers have not frankly told the chiefs of the rebellion that the work in which they are engaged is hateful, and that a new government, such as they seek to found, with slavery as its acknowledged corner-stone, and with no other declared object of separate existence, is so far shocking to civilization and the moral sense of mankind that it must not expect welcome or recognition in the commonwealth of nations.

4. That the United States, confident in the justice of their cause, which is the cause also of good government and of human rights everywhere among men; anxious for the speedy restoration of peace, which shall secure tranquillity at home and remove all occasion of complaint abroad; and awaiting with well-assured trust the final suppression of the rebellion, through which all these things, rescued from present danger, will be secured forever, and the Republic, one and indivisible, triumphant over its enemies, will continue to stand an example to mankind, hereby announce, as their unalterable purpose, that the war will be vigorously prosecuted, according to the humane principles of Christian States, until the rebellion shall be suppressed; and they reverently invoke upon their cause the blessings of Almighty God.

5. That the President be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions, through the Secretary of State, to the ministers of the United States in foreign countries, that the declaration and protest herein set forth may be communicated by them to the government to which they are accredited.

1863, March 3—The resolutions were passed by the Senate—yeas 31, nays 5, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. LETTER OF LORD LYONS TO EARL RUSSELL RESPECTING MEDIATION.

WASHINGTON, November 17, 1862.

In his dispatches of the 17th and of the 24th ultimo, and of the 7th instant, Mr. Stuart reported to your lordship the result of the elections for members of Congress and State officers, which have recently taken place in several of the most important States of the Union. Without repeating the details, it will be sufficient for me to observe that the success of the Democratic, or (as it now styles itself) the Conservative Party, has been so great as to manifest a change in public feeling, among the most rapid and the most complete that has ever been witnessed, even in this country.

On my arrival at New York on the 8th instant I found the Conservative leaders exulting in the crowning success achieved by the party in that State. They appeared to rejoice, above all, in the conviction that personal liberty and freedom of speech had been secured for the principal State of the Union. They believed that the Government must at once desist from exercising in the State of New York the extraordinary (and as they regarded them) illegal and unconstitutional powers which it had assumed. They were confident that at all events after the 1st of January next, on which day the newly elected Governor would come into office, the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus could not be practically maintained. They seemed to be persuaded that the result of the elections would be accepted by the President as a declaration of the will of the people; that he would increase the moderate and conservative element in the Cabinet; that he would seek to terminate the war, not to push it to extremity; that he would endeavor to effect a reconciliation with the people of the South, and renounce the idea of subjugating or exterminating them.

On the following morning, however, intelligence arrived from Washington which dashed the rising hopes of the Conservatives. It was announced that General McClellan had been dismissed from the command of the army of the Potomac, and ordered to repair to his home; that he had, in fact, been removed altogether from active service. The general had been regarded as the representative of Conservative principles in the army. Support of him had been made one of the articles of the Conservative electoral programme. His dismissal was taken as a sign that the President had thrown himself entirely into the arms of the extreme radical party, and that the attempt to carry out the policy of that party would be persisted in. The irritation of the Conservatives at New York was certainly very great; it seemed, however, to be not unmixed with consternation and despondency.

Several of the leaders of the Democratic party sought in interviews me, both before and after the arrival of the intelligence of General McClellan's dismissal. The subject uppermost in their minds while they were speaking to me, was naturally that of foreign mediation between the North and South. Many of them seemed to think that this mediation must come at last, but they appeared to be very much afraid of its coming too soon. It was evident that they apprehended that a premature proposal of foreign intervention would afford the Radical party a means of reviving the violent war spirit, and of thus defeating the peaceful plans of the Conservatives. They appeared to regard the present moment as peculiarly unfavorable for such an offer, and, indeed, to hold that it would be essential to the success of any proposal from abroad that it should be deferred until the control of the Executive Government should be in the hands of the Conservative party.

I gave no opinion on the subject. I did not say whether or no I myself thought foreign intervention probable or ad-visible, but I listened with attention to the accounts given me of the plans and hopes of the Conservative party. At the bottom I thought I perceived a desire to put an end to the war, even at the risk of losing the southern States altogether; but it was plain that it was not thought prudent to avow this desire. Indeed some hints of it, dropped before the elections, were so ill received that a strong declaration in the contrary sense was deemed necessary by the Democratic leaders.

At the present moment, therefore, the chiefs of the Conservative party call loudly for a more vigorous prosecution of the war, and reproach the Government with slackness as well as with want of success in its military measures. But they repudiate all idea of interfering with the institutions of the southern people, or of waging a war of subjugation or extermination. They maintain that the object of the military operations should be to place the North in a position to demand an armistice with honor and effect. The armistice should (they hold) be followed by a convention, in which such changes of the Constitution should be proposed as would give the South ample security on the subject of its slave property, and would enable the North and the South to reunite and to live together in peace and harmony. The Conservatives profess to think that the South might be induced to take part in such a convention, and that a restoration of the Union would be the result.

The more sagacious members of the party must, however, look upon the proposal of a convention merely as a last experiment to test the possibility of reunion. They are no doubt well aware that the more probable consequence of an armistice would be the establishment of Southern independence, but they perceive that if the South is so utterly alienated that no possible concessions will induce it to return voluntarily to the Union, it is wiser to agree to separation than to prosecute a cruel and hopeless war.

It is with reference to such an armistice as they desire to attain, that the leaders of the Conservative party regard the question of foreign mediation. They think that the offer of mediation, if made to a radical administration, would be rejected; that, if made at an unpropitious moment, it might increase the virulence with which the war is prosecuted. If their own party were in power, or virtually controlled the administration, they would rather, if possible, obtain an armistice without the aid of foreign governments, but they would be disposed to accept an offer of mediation if it appeared to be the only means of putting a stop to hostilities. They would desire that the offer should come from the great powers of Europe conjointly, and in particular that as little prominence as possible should be given to Great Britain.

At Washington I have had fewer opportunities than I had at New York of ascertaining the present views of the chiefs of the political parties. At the interview which I had with Mr. Seward the day after my arrival he showed no disposition to enter upon political matters. He did not appear to expect or to desire to receive from me any special communication from her Majesty's government. The President, when I waited upon him, talked to me only on ordinary topics. I, for my part, gladly shunned all allusion to foreign intervention, my principal object being to avoid saying anything which might embarrass me in carrying out any instructions on the subject which I may receive from your lordship.

All things considered, my own opinion certainly is that the present moment is not a favorable one for making an offer of mediation. It might embarrass the peace party, and even oblige them, in order to maintain their popularity, to make some declaration against it, and this might make it difficult for them to accept a similar offer at a more propitious time. It would in all probability be rejected by the President, who appears to have thrown himself into the arms of the extreme radical party.

The views of that party are clear and definite. They declare that there is no hope of reconciliation with the Southern people; that the war must be pursued, per fas et nefas, until the disloyal men of the South are ruined and subjugated, if not exterminated; that not an inch of the old territory of the Republic must be given up; that foreign intervention, in any shape, must be rejected and resented. This party would desire to turn an offer of mediation to account, for the purpose of inflaming the war spirit and producing a reaction against the Conservatives.

It is probable, too, that the Government would urge, in answer to an offer of mediation, that it has by no means abandoned the hope of putting down the rebellion within a reasonable time; that at all events, this is not a moment at which it can reasonably be called upon to put a stop to hostilities. It would observe that the armies of the United States are everywhere advancing, and that expeditions are prepared against Texas, as well as against Charleston, Mobile, and other points on the coast. It would point out that it had equipped a considerable number of war-vessels, iron-clad as well as others, at a vast expense; that the season had just arrived when the autumn rains would render the rivers navigable by armed vessels, and when the Southern coast would be free from epidemic disease.

It might even represent an advance of the Army of the Potomac to Richmond as a probable event. The experience of the past is certainly not calculated to inspire any great confidence in the results of these warlike preparations, but the political interests of the party now in power render a continuance of the war a necessity to it. Its only chance of regaining its lost popularity lies in successful military operations. Unless it can obtain a much higher place in public estimation than it now occupies, not only will its tenure of power become extremely precarious, but some of its leading members may be called to a severe account for their extra-legal proceedings. During the session of Congress which begins next month, the present Administration has indeed reason to expect an uncompromising support from a majority of both Houses of Congress. But on the 4th of March next, the existing House of Representatives is dissolved by the terms of the Constitution, and at the same time several of the present Senators go out of office. The majority of the members chosen at the recent elections for the new House of Representatives are of the Democratic or Conservative party, and in some States, Senators of that party will be returned in the room of those whose term of office expires next March. The new Congress is likely to be hostile to the Administration and to the Radical party; and although it will not, in the ordinary course of things, assemble until the last month of next year, the President will hardly be able to persist in his present policy and in his assumption of extraordinary powers, unless he can, in virtue of military successes, obtain a reputation with the people which will sustain him in a contest with the Legislature.

It would seem, then, to be vain to make an offer of mediation to the present Government, in their present mood, with any notion that it would be accepted. A change of mood may, however, take place after the 4th of March, if no great military successes occur in the interval. Such a change may possibly be produced sooner by military reverses. A proposal, however, to mediate, made even under the present circumstances, by three or more of the great powers of Europe conjointly might not produce any great inconvenience.

It is, indeed, urged by some people that mediation should be offered, not so much with a view to its being accepted as to its clearing the way for a recognition of the Southern Confederacy. And, indeed, if it were determined that the time had come for recognizing that Confederacy, no doubt an offer of mediation would be a suitable preliminary. But I do not clearly understand what advantage is expected to result from a simple recognition of the southern government; and I presume that the European powers do not contemplate breaking up the blockade by force of arms, or engaging in hostilities with the United States in support of the independence of the South.

I have, indeed, heard it maintained that Great Britain should recognize the independence of the South as soon as possible, with a view to impede the success of the efforts of the conservative party to reconstruct the Union. The advocates of this opinion consider a re-union as a probable event, and apprehend that the first result of it would be that the combined forces of the North and the South would be let loose upon Canada. I certainly do not at present share these apprehensions. All hope of the reconstruction of the Union appears to be fading away, even from the minds of those who most ardently desire it. But if the reconstruction be still possible, I do not think we need conclude that it would lead to an invasion of Canada, or to any consequences injurious to Great Britain. At any rate dangers of this kind are remote. The immediate and obvious interest of Great Britain, as well as of the rest of Europe, is that peace and prosperity should be restored to this country as soon as possible. The point chiefly worthy of consideration appears to be whether separation or reunion be the more likely to effect this object.

The French in Mexico.

Third Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN SENATE.

1863, January 19.—Mr. McDOUGALL offered the following concurrent resolutions:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the present attempt by the government of France to subject the Republic of Mexico to her authority by armed force is a violation of the established and known rules of international law, and that it is, moreover, a violation of the faith of France, pledged by the treaty made at London on the 31st day of October, 1861, between the allied governments of Spain, France, and England, communicated to this Government over the signatures of the re-representatives of the allies by letter of the 20th day of November, 1861, and particularly and repeatedly assured to this Government through its ministers resident at the Court of France.

Resolved further, That the attempt to subject the Republic of Mexico to the French authority is an act not merely unfriendly to this Republic, but to free institutions everywhere, and that it is regarded by this Republic as not only unfriendly, but as hostile.

Resolved further, That it is the duty of this Republic to require of the government of France that her armed forces be withdrawn from the territories of Mexico.

Resolved further, That it is the duty and proper office of this Republic now, and at all times, to lend such aid to the Republic of Mexico as is or may be required to prevent the forcible interposition of any of the States of Europe in the political affairs of that Republic.

Resolved further, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be communicated to the government of Mexico the views now expressed by the two Houses of Congress, and be further requested to cause to be negotiated such treaty or treaties between the two Republics as will best tend to make these views effective.

1863, February 4—The resolutions were, on motion of Mr. SUMNER, laid on the table—yeas 34, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Arnold, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, King, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Pomerooy, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilnot, Wilson of Massachusetts—34.

NAYS Messrs. Kennedy, Latham, McDougall, Powell, Rice, Richardson, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Turpie, Wilson of Missouri—10.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress. IN SENATE.

1864, Jan. 11—Mr. McDUGALL offered this joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

IN RELATION TO THE OCCUPATION OF MEXICO.

Resolved, &c., That the occupation of a portion of the territory of the Republic of Mexico by the armed forces of the government of France, with the purposes avowed by the government of France, is an act unfriendly to the Republic of the United States of America.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That it is the duty of the proper department of this Government to demand of the government of France the withdrawal of her armed forces from the Mexican territory within a reasonable time.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That in the event the government of France shall decline or refuse to so withdraw her armed forces, or shall fail to take measures to that effect, on or before the fifteenth day of March next, then it will become the duty of the Congress of the United States of America to declare war against the government of France.

June 14—Mr. McDUGALL sought to introduce this resolution, but objection was made:

Resolved, That the people of the United States can never regard with indifference the attempt of any foreign power to overthrow by force or to supplant by fraud the institutions of any republican government on the western continent, and that they will view with extreme jealousy, as menacing to the peace and independence of their own country, the efforts of any such power to obtain any footholds for monarchical Governments sustained by foreign military force in near proximity to the United States.

IN HOUSE.

NAYS—None.

The resolution is as follows:

Relative to the substitution of monarchical for republican Government in Mexico, under European auspices.

Resolved, &c., That the Congress of the United States are unwilling, by silence, to leave the nations of the world under the impression that they are indifferent spectators of the deplorable events now transpiring in the Republic of Mexico; and they therefore think fit to declare that it does not accord with the policy of the United States to acknowledge a monarchical government, erected on the ruins of any republican government in America, under the auspices of any European power.

IN SENATE.

1864, April 5—The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it remained unreported at the close of the session.

April 27—Mr. McDUGALL offered a resolution that the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to report to the Senate the joint resolution printed above.

May 28—Mr. McDUGALL offered a resolution that the committee be discharged from the subject, both of which went over.

IN HOUSE.

May 23—Mr. H. W. DAVIS offered this resolution, which was agreed to without a division:

Whereas the following announcement appeared in the Moniteur, the official journal of the French Government:

“Le gouvernement de l'Empereur a reçu du gouvernement des Etats-Unis des explications satisfaisantes sur le sens et la portée de la résolution prise par l'Assemblée des représentants à Washington, au sujet des affaires du Mexique.

“On sait, d'ailleurs, que le Sénat avait déjà ajourné indéfiniment l'examen de cette résolution, à laquelle, dans tous les cas, le pouvoir exécutif n'eût point accordé sa sanction.”—Moniteur.

Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not inconsistent with the public interest, any explanations given by the Government of the United States to the Government of France respecting the sense and bearing of the joint resolution relative to Mexico, which passed the House of Representatives unanimously on the 4th of April, 1864.

May 24—The PRESIDENT transmitted the following correspondence, communicated by the Secretary of State, in response to the resolution of the House:

MR. SEWARD'S LETTER TO MR. DAYTON, DATED DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, APRIL 7, 1864.

I send you a copy of a resolution which passed the House of Representatives on the 4th instant, by a unanimous vote, and which declares the opposition of that body to a recognition of a monarchy in Mexico. M. Geoffrey has lost no time in asking for an explanation of this proceeding.

It is hardly necessary, after what I have heretofore written with perfect candor for the information of France, to say that this resolution truly interprets the unanimous sentiment of the people of the United States in regard to Mexico. It is, however, another and distinct question whether the United States would think it necessary or proper to express themselves in the form adopted by the House of Representatives at this time. This is a practical and purely Executive question, and the decision of its constitutionality belongs not to the House of Representatives, nor even to Congress, but to the President of the United States. You will, of course, take notice that the declaration made by the House of Representatives is in the form of a joint resolution, which, before it can acquire the character of a legislative act, must receive, first, the concurrence of the Senate, and, secondly, the approval of the President of the United States; or, in case of his dissent, the renewed assent of both houses of Congress, to be expressed by a majority of two-thirds of each body. While the President receives the declaration of the House of Representatives with the profound respect to which it is entitled, as an exposition of its sentiments upon a grave and important subject, he directs that you inform the Government of France that he does not at present contemplate any departure from the policy which this Government has hitherto pursued in regard to the war which exists between France and Mexico. It is hardly necessary to say that the proceeding of the House of Representatives was adopted upon suggestions arising within itself, and not upon any communication of the Executive department; and that the French Government would be seasonably apprised of any change of policy upon this subject which the President might at any future time think it proper to adopt.

MR. DAYTON'S LETTER, DATED PARIS, APRIL 22, 1864.

SIR: I visited M. Drouyn de l'Huys yesterday at the department of foreign affairs. The first words he addressed to me, on entering the room, were: "Do you bring us peace, or bring us war?" I asked him to what he referred, and he said he referred more immediately to those resolutions recently passed by Congress in reference to the invasion of Mexico by the French, and the establishment of Maximilian upon the throne of that country. I said to him, in reply, that I did not think France had a right to infer that we were about to make war against her on account of anything contained in those resolutions; that they embodied nothing more than had been constantly held out to the French government from the beginning; that I had always represented to the government here that any action upon their part interfering with the form of government in Mexico would be looked upon with dissatisfaction in our country, and they could not expect us to be in haste to acknowledge a monarchical government, built upon the foundations of a republic which was our next neighbor; that I had reason to believe you held the same language to the French Minister in the United States. This allegation he did not seem to deny, but obviously viewed the resolutions in question as a serious step upon our part; and I am told that the leading secessionists here build largely upon these resolutions as a means of fomenting ill-feeling between this country and some others and ourselves. Mr. Mason and his secretary have gone to Brussels to confer with Mr. Dudley Mann, who is their commissioner at that place. Mr. Slidell, it is said, was to have gone to Austria, although he has not yet got off.

SECOND LETTER FROM MR. DAYTON, PARIS, MAY 2, 1864, BEING IN REPLY TO MR. SEWARD'S OF APRIL 7.

SIR: Immediately upon the receipt of your dispatch No. 525, I applied to M. Drouyn de l'Huys for a special interview, which was granted for Saturday last. I then said that I knew that the French government had felt some anxiety in respect to the resolution which had recently been passed by the House of Representatives, in reference to Mexico; and inasmuch as I had just received a copy of that resolution, together with the views of the President of the United States, I begged, if agreeable, to read to him your dispatch in reference to the latter. To this he assented, and as the shortest and most satisfactory mode, following out my instructions, I read to him that entire portion of your dispatch which applies to this subject, stating, at the same time, that I thought it was a remarkable illustration of the frankness and straightforwardness of the President. When the reading was closed, M. Drouyn de l'Huys expressed his gratification, and after asking some questions in regard to the effect of laying a resolution upon the table in the Senate, the conversation terminated.

The extreme sensitiveness which was manifested by this government when the resolution of the House of Representatives was first brought to its knowledge has, to a considerable extent, at least, subsided.

MR. SEWARD'S RESPONSES OF MAY 9 AND MAY 21:

SIR: Your dispatch of April 22 (No. 454) has been received. What you have said to M. Drouyn de l'Huys on the subject of the resolution of the House of Representatives concerning Mexico, as you have reported it, is entirely approved. The resolution yet remains unacted upon in the Senate.

Mr. Corwin was to leave Vera Cruz on the 3d instant under the leave of absence granted to him by this department on the 8th of August last.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch of May 2 (No. 461.) and to approve of your proceedings therein mentioned. We learn that Mr. Corwin, our minister plenipotentiary to Mexico, is at Havana, on his return to the United States, under leave of absence.

June 4—MR. DAVIS, of Maryland, asked unanimous consent to make a written report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in response to the above message of the President. MR. BROOMALL objected.

June 6—He asked consent, and MR. ARNOLD objected. He then moved to suspend the rules, which was rejected—yeas 43, nays 55, (two thirds being required,) as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Coz, Henry Winter Davis, Dawson, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Griswold, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. June 27—MR. DAVIS made this report, which was ordered to be printed:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs have examined the correspondence submitted by the President relative to the joint resolution on Mexican affairs with the profound respect to which it is entitled, because of the gravity of its subject and the distinguished source from which it emanated.

They regret that the President should have so widely departed from the usage of constitutional governments as to make a pending resolution of so grave and delicate a character the subject of diplomatic explanations. They regret still more that the President should have thought proper to inform a foreign government of a radical and serious conflict of opinion and jurisdiction between the depositories of the legislative and executive power of the United States.

No expression of deference can make the denial of the right of Congress constitutionally to do what the House did with absolute unanimity, other than derogatory to their dignity.

They learn with surprise that, in the opinion of the President, the form and term of expressing the judgment of the United States on recognizing a monarchical government imposed on a neighboring republic is a "purely executive question, and the decision of it constitutionally belongs not to the House of Representatives, nor even to Congress, but to the President of the United States."

This assumption is equally novel and inadmissible. No President has ever claimed such an exclusive authority. No Congress can ever permit its expression to pass without dissent.

It is certain that the Constitution nowhere confers such authority on the President.

The precedents of recognition, sufficiently numerous in this revolutionary era, do not countenance this view; and if there be one not inconsistent with it, the committee have not found it.

All questions of recognition have heretofore been debated and considered as grave questions of national policy, on which the will of the people should be expressed in Congress assembled; and the President, as the proper medium of foreign intercourse, has executed that will. If he has ever anticipated its expression, we have not found the case.

The declaration and establishment of the independence of the Spanish American colonies first brought the question of recognition of new governments or nations before the Government of the United States; and the precedents then set have been followed ever since, even by the present Administration.

The correspondence now before us is the first attempt to depart from that usage, and deny the nation a controlling deliberative voice in regulating its foreign policy.

The following are the chief precedents on recognition of new governments, and the policy of the United States Government on that topic:

On the 9th of February, 1821, Henry Clay moved in the House of Representatives to amend the appropriation bill by the following clause:

"For an outfit, and one year's salary, to such minister as the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, may send to any government of South America, which has established and is maintaining its independence on Spain, a sum not exceeding $18,000." It failed.

On the 10th of February, he moved that the House of Representatives participate with the people of the United States in the deep interest which they feel for the success of the Spanish provinces of South America, which are struggling for their liberty and independence, and that it will give its constitutional support to the President of the United States whenever he may deem it expedient to recognize the sovereignty and independence of any of the said provinces.

A motion to amend by the proviso "that this resolution shall not be construed to interfere with the independent exercise of the treaty-making power," and another, "that the House approves of the course heretofore pursued by the President of the United States with regard to the said provinces," were negatived.

The resolution was adopted, and a committee appointed to lay it before President Monroe.

The committee, on the 17th February, reported—

"That the President assured the committee that, in common with the people of the United States and the House of Representatives, he felt great interest in the success of the provinces of Spanish America, which are struggling to establish their freedom and independence, and that he would take the resolution into deliberate consideration, with the most perfect respect for the distinguished body from which it had emanated."

So the House of Representatives took the initiative towards recognizing the new republics. The amendment to the appropriation bill would have been a legislative recognition. The resolution was a formal statement of the opinion of the House to the President, which he did not think beyond their constitutional authority.

At the first session of the next Congress the House of Representatives, on motion of Mr. Nelson, of Virginia, resolved—

"That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House such communications as may be in the possession of the Executive, from the agents of the United States with the governments south of the United States, which have declared their independence, and the communications from the agents of such governments in the United States with the Secretary of State, as tend to show the political condition of those governments, and the state of the war between them and Spain, as it may be consistent with the public interest to communicate."

President Monroe answered the application on the 8th of March in an elaborate message, of which the following extracts sufficiently show that he did not think recognition "a purely executive question," and that the decision of it constitutionally belongs, "not to the House of Representatives, nor even to Congress, but to the President of the United States:"

"In transmitting to the House of Representatives the documents called for by the resolution of that House of January, I consider it my duty to invite the attention of Congress to a very important subject, and to communicate the sentiments of the Executive on it; that should Congress entertain similar sentiments, there may be such co-operation between the two departments of the Government as their respective rights and duties may require."

"This contest has now reached such a stage, and been attended with such decisive success on the part of the provinces, that it merits the most profound consideration, whether their right to the rank of independent nations, with all the advantage incident to it in their intercourse with the United States, is not complete."

After narrating the events, he proceeds:

"When the result of such a contest is manifestly settled, the new governments have a claim to recognition by other powers which ought not to be resisted."

"When we regard, then, the great length of time which the war has been prosecuted, the complete success which has attended it in favor of the provinces, the present condition of the parties, and the utter inability of Spain to produce any change in it, we are compelled to conclude that its fate is settled, and that the provinces which have declared their independence, and are in the enjoyment of it, ought to be recognized."

"In proposing this measure, it is not contemplated to change thereby in the slightest manner our friendly relations with either of the parties."

"The measure is proposed under a thorough conviction that it is in strict accord with the law of nations, and that the United States owe it to their position and character in the world, as well as to their essential interests, to adopt it."

"Should Congress concur in the view herein presented, they will doubtless see the propriety of making the necessary appropriations for carrying it into effect."

It is quite apparent that President Monroe was far from countenancing the opinion that the form and time in which the United States would think it necessary to express themselves on the policy of the recognition is a purely executive question, and that he did not think the decision of it constitutionally belongs not to the House of Representatives, nor even to Congress, but to the President of the United States, to the exclusion of Congress. Had he so thought, he would have refused the production of the papers, as President Washington did the diplomatic instructions relative to the English treaty.

He would have announced his purpose to recognize the republics, and left it to Congress to provide for diplomatic intercourse with them.

Far from that, he proposes for their consideration the policy of recognition; and, if they concur in that, asks them to make the necessary appropriations to carry it into effect.

He consulted the will of the nation at the mouth of Congress, and proposed to concur in its execution.

So Congress understood him, for the papers and message were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That committee considered, in an elaborate report, the question of independence of the republics, the policy and principles involved in their recognition, and on the 19th of March, 1822, they submitted it to the House. It concluded as follows:

"Your committee having thus considered the subject referred to them in all its aspects, are unanimously of opinion that it is just and expedient to acknowledge the independence of the several nations of Spanish America without any reference to the diversity in the form of their governments; and in accordance with this opinion they respectfully submit the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the House of Representatives concur in the opinion expressed by the President in his message of the 8th of March, 1822, that the American provinces of Spain which have declared their independence, and are in the enjoyment of it, ought to be recognized by the United States as independent nations.

"Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to report a bill appropriating a sum not exceeding $100,000 to enable the President to give due effect to such recognition."

It is, therefore, equally apparent that the House of Representatives of the 17th Congress was clearly of opinion with President Monroe that the question of recognition was not purely executive, but that it constitutionally belongs to Congress as well as to the President; that the Legislature declares the will of the United States, which the Executive gives effect to—each concurring in the act of recognition according to their respective constitutional functions.

In obedience to that resolution the following bill, recognizing the new nation, was reported and passed and approved on the 4th of May, 1822:

"That for such missions to the independent nations on the American continent as the President may deem proper, there be, and hereby is, appropriated a sum not exceeding $100,000, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The approval of that law completed the recognition of the new nations. The sending ministers to some or all of them was a matter of executive discretion, not at all essential to or connected with the fact of recognition. Ministers were appointed to Mexico, Colombia, Buenos Ayres, and Chili, on the 27th of January, 1823. None was appointed to Peru till May, 1826; yet it is certain Peru was as much recognized by the United States as the other governments from the 4th of May, 1822.

This great precedent has governed all that follow it.

The acknowledgment of the independence of Texas stands next in our history. It is a most instructive precedent, strictly following the forms observed respecting the governments of Spanish America.

On the 18th of June, 1836, on the motion of Henry Clay, the Senate adopted the resolution—

"That the independence of Texas ought to be acknowledged by the United States whenever satisfactory information shall be received that it has in successful operation a civil government capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of an independent power."

The House of Representatives, on the 4th of July, 1836, adopted a resolution in the same words; and added a second:

"That the House of Representatives perceive with satisfaction that the President of the United States has adopted measures to ascertain the political, military, and civil condition of Texas."—(Congressional Globe, 1st session 24th Congress, pp. 453, 486.)

Those resolutions were not formal acknowledgments of a government of Texas; the report of the Senate Committee showed the circumstances were not sufficiently known; and both Senate and House awaited further information at the hands of the President.

On the 2d December, while communicating the information, President Jackson accepted the occasion to express to Congress his opinion on the subject. The following passages are very instructive, touching the authority to recognize new States:

"Nor has any deliberative inquiry ever been instituted in Congress, or in any of our legislative bodies, as to whom belonged the power of recognizing a new State; a power, the exercise of which is equivalent, under some circumstances, to a declaration of war; a power nowhere expressly delegated, and only granted in the Constitution, as it is necessarily involved in some of the great powers given to Congress, in that given to the President and Senate to form treaties and to appoint ambassadors and other public ministers, and in that conferred on the President to receive ministers from foreign nations."

"In the preamble to the resolution of the House of Representatives, it is distinctly intimated that the expediency of recognizing the independence of Texas should be left to the decision of Congress. In this view, on the ground of expediency, I am disposed to concur; and do not, therefore, think it necessary to express any opinion as to the strict constitutional right of the Executive, either apart from, or in conjunction with, the Senate over the subject. It is to be presumed that on no future occasion will a dispute arise, as none has heretofore occurred, between the Executive and Legislature in the exercise of the power of recognition. It will always be considered consistent with the spirit of the Constitution and most safe that it should be exercised, when probably leading to war, with a previous understanding with that body by whom war can alone be declared, and by whom all the provisions for sustaining its perils must be furnished. Its submission to Congress, which represents in one of its branches the States of this Union, and in the other the people of the United States, where there may be reasonable ground to apprehend so grave a consequence, would certainly afford the fullest satisfaction to our own country, and a perfect guarantee to all other countries, of the justice and prudence of the measures which ought to be adopted."

After forcibly stating why he thought "we should still stand aloof," he closed with the following declaration:

"Having thus discharged my duty, by presenting with simplicity and directness the views which, after much reflection, I have been led to take of this important subject, I have only to add the expression of my confidence that if Congress should differ with me upon it, their judgment will be the result of dispassionate, prudent, and wise deliberation; with the assurance that, during the short time which I shall continue connected with the Government, I shall promptly and cordially unite with you in such measures as may be deemed best fitted to increase the prosperity and perpetuate the peace of our favored country."

The concurrent resolutions of the Senate and House of Representatives, and that message of President Jackson, leave no doubt that the views which presided over the recognition of the South American Governments still prevailed, and that the President was as far from asserting as Congress from admitting that the recognition of new nations and the foreign policy of the United States is a purely Executive question.

The independence of Texas was finally recognized in pursuance of the following enactment in the appropriation bill of the second session of the Twenty-Fourth Congress which appropriates money—

"For the outfit and salary of a diplomatic agent to be sent to the republic of Texas, whenever the President of the United States may receive satisfactory evidence that Texas is an independent power, and shall deem it expedient to appoint such minister."

That law was approved by President Jackson.

Not only is this exclusive assumption without countenance in the early history of the Republic, but it is irreconcilable with the most solemn acts of the present Administration. The independence of Hayti is nearly as old as that of the United States; it antedated that of the South American republics, and the republic of Liberia has long been recognized by European nations. Both were first recognized by act of Congress, approved by President Lincoln on the 5th of July, 1862, which enacted—

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint diplomatic representatives of the United States to the republics of Hayti and Liberia respectively. Each of the representatives so appointed shall be accredited as commissioner and consular general, and shall receive the compensation of commissioners," &c., &c.

That was a formal recognition of those republics by law, whether the President sent diplomatic representatives or not.

Quite in the spirit of these precedents is the well-considered language of the Supreme Court:

"Those questions which respect the rights of a part of a foreign empire which asserts and is contending for its independence, belong more properly to those who can declare what the law shall be, who can place the nation in such a position with respect to foreign powers as to their own judgment shall appear wise, to whom are entrusted its foreign relations, than to that tribunal whose power as well as duty is confined to the application of the rule which the legislature may prescribe for it."

But the joint resolution of the 4th of April does more than declare the refusal of the United States to recognize a monarchical usurpation in Mexico. It declares a general rule of policy, which can be authentically and authoritatively expressed only by the body charged with the legislative power of the United States.

"Resolved, &c., That the Congress of the United States are unwilling, by silence, to leave the nations of the world under the impression that they are indifferent spectators of the deplorable events now transpiring in the republic of Mexico; and they, therefore, think fit to declare that it does not accord with the policy of the United States to acknowledge a monarchical government erected on the ruins of any republican government in America, under the auspices of any European power."

The committee are of opinion that this authority, to speak in the name of the United States, has never, before the correspondence in question, been considered a purely executive function.

The most remarkable declaration of this kind in our history, which events seem now likely to make of as grave practical interest as when it was uttered, is President Monroe's declaration in his message of the 2d December, 1823:

"With the governments which have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, after great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition, for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

But though always the accurate expression of the feelings of the American people, it was not regarded as the settled policy of the nation, because not formally declared by Congress. By the administration of President John Quincy Adams, which followed, it was treated as merely an executive expression on behalf of the people, which Congress alone could elevate to the dignity of a national policy by its formal adoption.

In 1826, Mr. Poinsett, the minister to Mexico, having used language supposed to commit the United States to that policy in behalf of Mexico, a resolution was promptly introduced into the House of Representatives and adopted on the 27th of March, 1826—

"That the Committee on Foreign Affairs inquire and report to this House upon what authority, if any, the minister of the United States to the Mexican republic, in his official character, declared to the plenipotentiary of that government that the United States have pledged themselves not to permit any other power than Spain to interfere either with their (the South American republics) independence, or form of government," &c., &c.—2 Cong. Deb., 19th Con., 1st sess., p. 1820.)

Mr. Poinsett hastened to explain by his letter of the 6th of May, 1826, to Henry Clay, then Secretary of State:

"I cannot rest satisfied without stating explicitly that, in the observations I made during my conference with the Mexican plenipotentiaries, I alluded only to the message of the President of the United States to Congress in 1823."

"That message, dictated, in my opinion, by the soundest policy, has been regarded both in Europe and America as a solemn declaration of the views and intentions of the Executive of the United States, and I have always considered that declaration as a pledge, so far forth as the language of the President can pledge the nation, to defend the new American republics from the attacks of any of the powers of Europe other than Spain. That the people of the United States are not bound by any declarations of the Executive is known and understood as well in Mexico, where the government is modelled on our own political institutions, as in the United States themselves. But in order to correct any erroneous impressions these words might have made on the minds of the Mexican plenipotentiaries, I explained to them in the course of our conference this morning their precise meaning: that the declaration of Mr. Monroe in his message of 1823, to which I had alluded, indicated only the course of policy the Executive of the United States was disposed to pursue towards these countries, but was not binding on the nation unless sanctioned by the Congress of the United States; and when I spoke of the United States having pledged themselves not to permit any other power than Spain to interfere with the independence or form of government of the American republics, I meant only to allude to the above-cited declaration of the President of the United States in his message of 1823, and to nothing more."

This explanation is the more significant from the fact that Mr. Clay's instructions to Mr. Poinsett directed him to bring to the notice of the Mexican government the message of the late President of the United States to their Congress on the 2d of December, 1823, asserting certain important principles of intercontinental law in the relations of Europe and America; and, after stating and enlarging on them, Mr. Clay proceeds: "Both principles were laid down after much and anxious deliberation on the part of the late administration. The President, who then formed a part of it, continues entirely to coincide in both, and you will urge upon the government of Mexico the propriety and expediency of asserting the same principles on all proper occasions."

And in reply to the resolution of inquiry of the 27th of March, Mr. Clay accompanied his instructions with the declaration—entirely in the spirit of Mr. Poinsett's letter—"that the United States have contracted no engagement, nor made any pledge, to the governments of Mexico and South America, or either of them, that the United States would not permit the interference of any foreign power with the independence or form of government of those nations. * * * * *

"If, indeed, an attempt by force had been made by allied Europe to subvert the liberties of the southern nations on this continent, and to erect upon the ruins of their free institutions monarchical systems, the people of the United States would have stood pledged, in the opinion of the Executive, not to any foreign State, but to themselves and their posterity, by their dearest interests and highest duties, to resist to the utmost such attempt; and it is to a pledge of that character that Mr. Poinsett above refers."—(2 Cong. Debates, 19th Congress, 1st session, App. 83, 84.)

Such were the views of the administration of President John Quincy Adams, whose Secretary of State was Henry Clay, and whose minister to Mexico was Mr. Poinsett, upon the supremacy of the legislature in declaring the foreign policy of the United States, the diplomatic execution and conduct of which is confided to the President.

It is impossible to condense the elaborate message of President Adams of the 15th of March, 1826, dedicated to persuading Congress to concur in and sanction the Panama mission; but that message and the great debate which consumed the session in both Houses are unmeaning on the assumptions of this correspondence with the French government; and the consideration and approval of its recommendations elevate President Monroe's declaration to the dignity and authority of the policy of the nation solemnly and legally proclaimed by Congress.

That message was in reply to a resolution requesting the President to inform the House of Representatives "in regard to what objects the agents of the United States are expected to take part in the deliberations of that congress"—of Panama.

Among the subjects of deliberation, the President enumerated the declaration of President Monroe above quoted and on that topic said:

"Most of the new American republics have declared their entire assent to them; and they now propose, among the subjects of consideration at Panama, to take into consideration the means of making effectual the assertion of that principle as well as the means of resisting interference from abroad with the domestic concerns of the American governments."

"In alluding to these means, it would obviously be premature at this time to anticipate that which is offered merely as matter for consultation, or to pronounce upon those measures which have been or may be suggested. The purpose of this government is to concur in none which would import hostility to Europe, or justly excite resentment in any of her States. Should it be deemed advisable to contract any conventional engagement on this topic, our views would extend no further than to a mutual pledge of the parties to the compact, to maintain the principle in application to its own territory, and to permit no colonial lodgments or establishments of European jurisdiction upon its own soil; and with respect to the obtrusive interference from abroad, if the future character may be inferred from that which has been, and perhaps still is, exercised in more than one of the new States, a joint declaration of its character and exposure of it to the world would be probably all that the occasion would require."

"Whether the United States should or should not be parties to such a declaration may justly form a part of the deliberation. That there is an evil to be remedied needs little insight into the secret history of late years to know, and that this remedy may best be considered at the Panama meeting deserves at least the experiment of consideration."

Upon this message, after elaborate debates, Congress passed in May an appropriation "for carrying into effect the appointment of a mission to the congress of Panama;" and the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed ministers to that congress, and furnished them with instructions in conformity with the message, and in execution of the policy approved by Congress.

Accident and delays prevented the arrival of our mission before the dissolution of the congress: but President Adams thought the gravity of the precedent justified him in communicating to Congress, in 1829, Mr. Clay's instructions to the ministers for our information; and the precedent remains, forever to vindicate the authority of Congress to declare and present the foreign policy of the United States.

The great name of Daniel Webster is justly considered authoritative on any question of constitutional power; and in that debate, when the enemies of the Administration strove to insert particular instructions to the diplomatic agents sent to that congress, he clearly defined the limits of executive and congressional authority, in declaring the policy and conducting the negotiations to effectuate it.

On the 4th of April, 1826, he is reported to have said in the House of Representatives:

"He would ask two questions: First, Does not the Constitution vest the power of the Executive in the President? Second, Is not the giving of instructions to ministers abroad an exercise of Executive power? Why should we take this responsibility on ourselves? He denied that the President had devolved, or could devolve, his own constitutional responsibility, or any part of it, on this House. The President had sent this subject to the House for its concurrence, by voting the necessary appropriation. Beyond this the House was not called on to act. We might refuse the appropriation if we saw fit, but we had not the power to make our vote conditional, and to attach instructions to it."

"There was a way, indeed, in which this House might express its opinion in regard to foreign politics. That is by resolution. He agreed entirely with the gentleman that, if the House were of opinion that a wrong course was given to our foreign relations, it ought to say so, and say so by some measure that should affect the whole, and not a part, of our diplomatic intercourse. It ought to control all missions, and not one only."

"There was no reason why the ministers to Panama should act under these restrictions that did not equally apply to other diplomatic agents—for example, to our minister at Colombia, Mexico, or other new States. A resolution expressive of the sense of the House would, on the contrary, lead to instructions to be given to them all. A resolution was, therefore, the regular mode of proceeding. We saw, for instance, looking at these documents, that our government had declared to some of the governments of Europe, perhaps it has declared to all the principal powers, that we could not consent to the transfer of Cuba to any European power. No doubt the executive government can maintain that ground only so long as it receives the approbation and support of Congress. If Congress be of opinion that this course of policy is wrong, then he agreed it was in the power, and he thought, indeed, the duty of Congress to interfere and to express dissent. If the amendment now offered prevailed, the declarations so distinctly made on this point could not be reported, under any circumstances, at Panama; but they might, nevertheless, be reported any where and everywhere else. Therefore, if we dissent from this opinion, that dissent should be declared by resolution, and that would change the whole course of our diplomatic correspondence on that subject in all places. If any gentleman thinks, therefore, that we ought to take no measure, under any circumstances, to prevent the transfer of Cuba into the hands of any government, European or American, let him bring forward his resolution to that effect. If it should pass, it will effectually prevent the repetition of such declarations as have been made."—(2 Cong. Debates, 19th Congress, 1st session, pp. 2021, 2022.)

This view is, in the opinion of the committee, at once the just view and the traditional practice of the government; the will of the people expressed in the legislative form by the legislative power can declare authoritatively the foreign policy of the nation; to the President is committed the diplomatic measures for effecting it.

The constitutional authority of Congress over the foreign relations of the United States can hardly be considered an open question, after the concurrent resolutions of Mr. Senator Sumner, adopted in the last Congress, it is believed, at the suggestion, certainly with the approval of the President, and by him officially notified to foreign governments, as the most authentic and authoritative expression of the national will respecting intervention, mediation, and every other form of foreign intrusion into the domestic struggle in the United States.

The committee are not inclined to discuss theoretically questions of relative power. The Constitution is a practical, and not a theoretical instrument. It has been administered and construed by men of practical sagacity, and in their hands the voice of the people has been heard authoritatively in the executive chamber, on the conduct of foreign affairs.

But this correspondence requires us to say, that in view of the historic precedents, it is not a purely executive question whether the United States would think it necessary to express themselves in the form adopted by the House of Representatives at this time; it does belong to Congress to declare and decide on the foreign policy of the United States, and it is the duty of the President to give effect to that policy by means of the diplomatic negotiations, or military power if it be authorized.

The President is not less bound to execute the national will expressed by law in its foreign than in its domestic concerns.

The President appoints all officers of the United States, but their duties are regulated, not by his will, but by law. He is the commander of the army and navy, but he has no power to use it except when the law points out the occasion and the object. He appoints foreign ministers, but neither in this case are they, by reason of their appointment, anything but the ministers of the law. If it be true that the appointment of an ambassador to a nation implies the recognition of the nation, it is just as sound logic to argue that none can be appointed to a nation that does not exist by the recognition of Congress, as that the President can recognize alone, because he can appoint.

But we prefer to waive the question. We are anxious not to depart from the approved precedents of our history. Our desire is to preserve, not to change. We will not inquire what would be the effect of a recognition of a new nation by the President against the will of Congress. We prefer to indulge the hope so wisely expressed by President Jackson, that "it is to be presumed that on no future occasion will a dispute arise, as none has heretofore occurred, between the Executive and Legislature in the exercise of the power of recognition."

Hitherto new nations, new powers, have always been recognized upon consultation and concurrence of the executive and legislative departments, and on the most important occasions by and in pursuance of law in the particular cases.

Changes of the person or dynasty of rulers of recognized powers, which created no new power, have not been treated always with the same formality; but usually the general law providing for diplomatic intercourse with the power whose internal administration had changed remained on the statute book and conferred a plenary discretion on the President, under the sanction of which he has accredited ministers to the new possessors of power. It is not known that hitherto the President has ever undertaken to recognize a new nation or a new power not before known to the history of the world, and not before acknowledged by the United States, without the previous authority of Congress.

It is peculiarly unfortunate that the new view of the executive authority should have been announced to a foreign government, the tendency of which was to diminish the force and effect of the legislative expression of what is admitted to be the unanimous sentiment of the people of the United States, by denying the authority of Congress to pronounce it.

Of the prudence of that expression at this time Congress is the best and only judge under the forms of the Constitution, and the President has no right to influence it otherwise than in the constitutional expression of his assent or his dissent when presented to him for his consideration.

It is vain to suppose that such a declaration increases the danger of war with France. The Emperor of the French will make war on the United States when it suits his convenience, and it can be done without danger to his dynastic interests. Till then, in the absence of wrong or insult on our part, there will be no war. When that time arrives we shall have war, no matter how meek, inoffensive, or pusillanimous our conduct may be, for our sin is our freedom and our power, and the only safety of monarchical, imperial, aristocratic, or despotic rule, lies in our failure or our overthrow.

It postpones the inevitable day to be ready and powerful at home, and to express our resolution not to recognize acts of violence to republican neighbors on our borders perpetrated to our injury. That declaration will encourage the republicans of America, to resist and endure, and not to submit. It is not perceived how an attack on the United States can promote the establishment of a monarch in Mexico. It might seriously injure us, but it would be an additional obstacle to the accomplishment of that enterprise. It is fortunate that events in Europe, in great measure, embarrass any further warlike enterprise on this continent, and the ruler who has not thought fit to mingle in the strife of Poland or Schleswig-Holstein will hardly venture to provoke a war with the United States.

The committee are content to bide their time, confident in the fortune and fortitude of the American people, but resolved not to encourage by a weak silence complications with foreign powers inimical to our greatness and safety, which, in the words of Mr. Webster, "a firm and timely assertion of what we hold to be our own rights and our own interests would strongly tend to avert."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That Congress has a constitutional right to an authoritative voice in declaring and prescribing the foreign policy of the United States, as well in the recognition of new powers as in other matters; and it is the constitutional duty of the President to respect that policy, not less in diplomatic negotiations than in the use of the national force when authorized by law; and the propriety of any declaration of foreign policy by Congress is sufficiently proved by the vote which pronounces it; and such proposition while pending and undetermined is not a fit topic of diplomatic explanation with any foreign power.

FRANCE, MEXICO, AND THE UNITED STATES.

The Courier du Dimanche, of Paris, publishes a circular letter addressed by M. Drouyn de L'Huys, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, to the agents of the Empire abroad, respecting the relation of France to the American Government. This letter is a sequel to the correspondence between Mr. Seward and Mr. Dayton with regard to the Mexican question, and is as follows:—

PARIS, May 7, 1864.—Mr. Dayton has called on me to read to me a despatch addressed to him by the Secretary of State of the Union, in order to define the responsibility of the Government of Washington, and to show that a vote of the House of Representatives, or of the Senate, or even of the two Houses, while it naturally recommends itself to the attention of the Government, did not oblige it to modify its policy and take from it its liberty of action.

Mr. Seward sees no reason to follow in the Mexican question a line of conduct other than that which he had adopted heretofore; and if his disposition should happen to be modified, we should be directly and in good time informed of this resolution and its motives.

I have replied to Mr. Dayton that in the opinion of the Government of the Emperor, nothing could justify this change; that our confidence in the wisdom and enlightenment of the American Cabinet was too great to permit us to suppose it to have any idea of compromising, by thoughtless action, the true interests of the United States.

While expressing to Mr. Dayton the entire satisfaction which the assurances he was charged with giving to us caused to the government of the Emperor, I added that I thought, in effect, that, even from the point of view of the United States, the choice would not be doubtful between the establishment in Mexico of a stable and regular government, and the perpetuation of an anarchy of which they had been the first to suffer and to point out the great inconvenience.

The reorganization of a vast country which, after the restoration of order and security, is expected to play an important economical part in the world, would be for the United States especially a real source of advantage, since it would open a new market to them from which they, because of their proximity, would profit more than others.

The prosperity of Mexico would therefore agree with their rightly understood interests, and I certainly do not believe that the Government of Washington could misunderstand this truth.

DROUYN DE L'HUYS.

The Arguelles Case.

1864, May 28—In the SENATE, Mr. JOHNSON offered this resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate, if he shall not deem it incompatible with the public interest, whether he has, and when, authorized a person alleged to have committed a crime against Spain or any of its dependencies, to be delivered up to officers of that government; and whether such delivery was had; and if so, under what authority of law or treaty it was done.

May 31—The PRESIDENT transmitted a reply covering a report from the Secretary of State and other documents, by which it appears that Don José Augustin Arguelles, an officer in the Spanish army in Cuba, had captured a slave expedition, while he was acting as Lieutenant Governor of the district of Colon, in Cuba. It was subsequently discovered that he had, with the connivance of the curate of Colon, made representations to the Spanish Government that one hundred and forty-one of the recaptured negroes had died of small-pox, though, in fact, he had sold them into slavery, and succeeded in escaping to the United States, where he was arrested by the officers of the United States and surrendered to the Cuban authorities.

In explanation of this act on the part of the Government of the United States, the Secretary of State reports as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, May 30, 1864.

The Secretary of State, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 25th instant, requesting the President to inform that body, "if he shall not deem it incompatible with the public interest, whether he has, and when, authorized a person, alleged to have committed a crime against Spain, or any of its dependencies, to be delivered up to officers of that government; and whether such delivery was had; and if so, under what authority of law or of treaty it was done," has the honor to submit to the President a copy of the papers which are on file or on record in this department relative to the subject of the resolution.

By the act of Congress of the 15th of May, 1820, the African slave trade is declared to be piracy.

By the ninth article of the treaty of 1842 with Great Britain, it is stipulated that, "Whereas, notwithstanding all efforts which may be made on the coast of Africa for suppressing the slave trade, the facilities for carrying on that traffic, and avoiding the vigilance of cruisers, by the fraudulent use of flags and other means, are so great, and the temptations for pursuing it, while a market can be found for slaves, so strong, as that the desired result may be long delayed, unless all markets be shut against the purchase of African negroes, the parties to this treaty agree that they will unite in all becoming representations and remonstrances with any and all powers within whose dominions such markets are allowed to exist, and that they will urge upon all such powers the propriety and duty of closing such markets effectually at once and forever."

There being no treaty of extradition between the United States and Spain, nor any act of Congress directing how fugitives from justice in Spanish dominions shall be delivered up, the extradition in the case referred to in the resolution of the Senate is understood by this department to have been made in virtue of the law of nations and the Constitution of the United States.

Although there is a conflict of authorities concerning the expediency of exercising comity towards a foreign government by surrendering, at its request, one of its own subjects charged with the commission of crime within its territory, and although it may be conceded that there is no national obligation to make such a surrender upon a demand therefor, unless it is acknowledged by treaty or by statute law, yet a nation is never bound to furnish asylum to dangerous criminals who are offenders against the human race; and it is believed that if in any case the comity could with propriety be practiced, the one which is understood to have called forth the resolution furnished a just occasion for its exercise.

Respectfully submitted.
To the PRESIDENT.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Upon the arrival at Havana of the fugitive Arguelles, General Dulce, the Captain-General of Cuba, addressed to the Spanish minister at Washington the following note:

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: My aide-de-camp, with the person expected, arrived in the steamer Eagle.

I request your excellency to render thanks in my name to Mr. Seward for the service which he has rendered to humanity by furnishing the medium through which a great number of human beings will obtain their freedom, whom the desertion of the person referred to would have reduced to slavery. His presence alone in this island a very few hours has given liberty to eighty-six.

I also render thanks to your excellency for the efficiency of your action.

God preserve your excellency many years.

DOMINGO DULCE.

HAVANA, May 19, 1864.

Murray, United States Marshal for the Southern District of New York, was indicted by the grand jury for the arrest of Arguelles, on a charge of kidnapping, and the matter came up before the General Sessions in New York, upon a petition of the counsel for defendant to transfer the case to the United States District Court, on the ground that under the act of Congress passed March 3, 1863, relating to habeas corpus, &c., any officer of the Federal Government, exposed to criminal prosecution, might remove the case in the Federal courts by filing a petition setting forth that the offence charged was done by the authority of the President or the Congress of the United States.

July 6—Judge Russell and Recorder Hoffmann concurring, decided that the petition to remove the case to the United States courts must be denied, the State courts having jurisdiction thereof. The counsel for the defence then made a motion to quash the indictment.

IN HOUSE.

June 6—Mr. Cox offered this resolution:

Resolved, That the recent extradition of a Spanish subject, by the action of the Chief Executive of the United States, in the absence of a law or treaty on the subject, was a violation of the Constitution of the United States and of the law of nations, and in derogation of the right of asylum, which has ever been a distinguishing feature of our political system.

The House refused to second the demand for the previous question—yeas 38, nays 57.

It was then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary—yeas 72, nays 43. The NAYS were—

Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. THE FINANCES.

Our Financial Legislation.

The financial legislation has been as follows:

1860, December 17—Authorized an issue of $10,000,000 in TREASURY NOTES, to be redeemed after the expiration of one year from the date of issue, and bearing such a rate of interest as may be offered by the lowest bidders. Authority was given to issue these notes in payment of warrants in favor of public creditors at their par value, bearing six per cent. interest per annum.

1861, February 8—Authorized a LOAN of $25,000,000, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding six per cent. per annum, and reimbursable within a period not beyond twenty years nor less than ten years. This loan was made for the payment of the current expenses, and was to be awarded to the most favorable bidders.

March 2—Authorized a LOAN of $10,000,000, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding six per cent. per annum, and reimbursable after the expiration of ten years from July 1, 1861. In case proposals for the loan were not acceptable, authority was given to issue the whole amount in TREASURY NOTES, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding six per cent. per annum. Authority was also given to substitute TREASURY NOTES for the whole or any part of the loans for which the Secretary was by law authorized to contract and issue bonds, at the time of the passage of this act, and such treasury notes were to be made receivable in payment of all public dues, and redeemable at any time within two years from March 2, 1861.

March 2—Authorized an issue, should the Secretary of the Treasury deem it expedient, of $2,800,000 in coupon BONDS, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, and redeemable in twenty years, for the payment of expenses incurred by the Territories of Washington and Oregon in the suppression of Indian hostilities during the years 1855-56.

July 17—Authorized a loan of $250,000,000, for which could be issued BONDS bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 7 per cent. per annum, irredeemable for twenty years, and after that redeemable at the pleasure of the United States.

TREASURY NOTES bearing interest at the rate of 7.30 per cent. per annum, payable three years after date; and

United States NOTES without interest, payable on demand, to the extent of $50,000,000. (Increased by act of February 12, 1862, to $60,000,000.)

The bonds and treasury NOTES to be issued in such proportions of each as the Secretary may deem advisable.

August 5—Authorized an issue of BONDS bearing 6 per cent. interest per annum, and payable at the pleasure of the United States after twenty years from date, which may be issued in exchange for 7.30 treasury notes; but no such bonds to be issued for a less sum than $500, and the whole amount of such bonds not to exceed the whole amount of 7.30 treasury notes issued.

1862, February 25—Authorized the issue of $150,000,000 in legal tender United States NOTES, $50,000,000 of which to be in lieu of demand notes issued under act of July 17, 1861, $500,000,000 in 6 per cent. bonds, redeemable after five years, and payable twenty years from date, which may be exchanged for United States notes, and a temporary loan of $25,000,000 in United States notes for not less than thirty days, payable after ten days' notice at 5 per cent. interest per annum.

March 17—Authorized an increase of TEMPORARY LOANS of $25,000,000, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum.

July 11—Authorized a further increase of TEMPORARY

LOANS of $50,000,000, making the whole amount authorized $100,000,000.

March 1—Authorized an issue of CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS, payable one year from date, in settlement of audited claims against the Government. Interest 6 per cent. per annum, payable in gold on those issued prior to March 4, 1863, and in lawful currency on those issued on and after that date. Amount of issue not specified.

1862, July 11—Authorized an additional issue of $150,000,000 legal tender NOTES, $35,000,000 of which might be in denominations less than five dollars. Fifty million dollars of this issue to be reserved to pay temporary loans promptly in case of emergency.

July 17—Authorized an issue of NOTES of the fractional part of one dollar, receivable in payment of all dues, except customs, less than five dollars, and exchangeable for United States notes in sums not less than five dollars. Amount of issue not specified.

1863, January 17—Authorized the issue of $100,000,000 in United States NOTES for the immediate payment of the army and navy; such notes to be a part of the amount provided for in any bill that may hereafter be passed by this Congress. The amount in this resolution is included in act of March 3, 1863.

March 3—Authorized a LOAN of $300,000,000 for this and $600,000,000 for the next fiscal year, for which could be issued bonds running not less than ten nor more than forty years, principal and interest payable in coin, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, payable on bonds not exceeding $100, annually, and on all others semi-annually. And TREASURY NOTES (to the amount of $400,000,000) not exceeding three years to run, with interest at not over 6 per cent. per annum, principal and interest payable in lawful money, which may be made a legal tender for their face value, excluding interest, or convertible into United States notes. And a further issue of $150,000,000 in United States NOTES for the purpose of converting the Treasury notes which may be issued under this act, and for no other purpose. And a further issue, if necessary, for the payment of the army and navy, and other creditors of the Government, of $150,000,000 in United States NOTES, which amount includes the $100,000,000 authorized by the joint resolution of Congress, January 17, 1863. The whole amount of bonds, treasury notes, and United States notes issued under this act not to exceed the sum of $900,000,000.

March 3—Authorized an issue not exceeding $50,000,000 in FRACTIONAL CURRENCY, (in lieu of postage or other stamps,) exchangeable for United States notes in sums not less than three dollars, and receivable for any dues to the United States less than five dollars, except duties on imports. The whole amount issued, including postage and other stamps issued as currency, not to exceed $50,000,000. Authority was given to prepare it in the Treasury Department, under the supervision of the Secretary.

1864, March 3—Authorized, in lieu of so much of the loan of March 3, 1863, a LOAN of $200,000,000 for the current fiscal year, for which may be issued bonds redeemable after five and within forty years, principal and interest payable in coin, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, payable annually on bonds not over $100, and on all others semi-annually. These bonds to be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

1864, June 30—Authorized a LOAN of $400,000,000, for which may be issued bonds, redeemable after five nor more than thirty years, or if deemed expedient, made payable at any period not more than forty years from date—interest not exceeding six per cent. semi-annually, in coin. Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to dispose of these bonds, or any part, and of the remainder of the five-twenties, in the United States or in Europe, on such terms as he may deem most advisable, for lawful money of the United States, or, at his discretion, for Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any act of Congress. And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority. In lieu of an equal amount of bonds, not exceeding $200,000,000, the Secretary is authorized to issue Treasury notes of not less than $10, payable at any time not exceeding three years, or, if thought expedient, redeemable at any time after three years, at an interest not exceeding seven and three tenths per cent., payable in lawful money at maturity, or, at the discretion of the Secretary, semi-annually. And the said Treasury notes may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury, on the best terms that can be obtained, for lawful money; and such of them as shall be made payable, principal and interest, at maturity, shall be a legal tender to the same extent as United States notes for their face value, excluding interest, and may be paid to any creditor of the United States at their face value, excluding interest, or to any creditor willing to receive them at par, including interest; and any Treasury notes issued under the authority of this act may be made convertible, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, into any bonds issued under the authority of this act. And the Secretary of the Treasury may redeem and cause to be cancelled and destroyed any Treasury notes or United States notes heretofore issued under authority of previous acts of Congress, and substitute, in lieu thereof, an equal amount of Treasury notes such as are authorized by this act, or of other United States notes: Provided, That the total amount of bonds and Treasury notes authorized by the first and second sections of this act shall not exceed $400,000,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore issued; nor shall the total amount of United States notes, issued or to be issued, ever exceed $400,000,000, and such additional sum, not exceeding $50,000,000, as may be temporarily required for the redemption of temporary loan; nor shall any Treasury note bearing interest, issued under this act, be a legal tender in payment or redemption of any notes issued by any bank, banking association, or banker, calculated or intended to circulate as money.

SEC. 3. That the interest on all bonds heretofore issued, payable annually, may be paid semi-annually; and in lieu of such bonds authorized to be issued, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue bonds bearing interest payable semi-annually. And he may also issue in exchange for Treasury notes heretofore issued bearing seven and three-tenths per centum interest, besides the six per cent bonds heretofore authorized, like bonds of all the denominations in which said Treasury notes have been issued; and the interest on such Treasury notes after maturity shall be paid in lawful money, and they may be exchanged for such bonds at any time within three months from the date of notice of redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, after which the interest on such Treasury notes shall cease. And so much of the law approved March 3, 1864, as limits the loan authorized therein to the current fiscal year, is hereby repealed; and the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow money and issue therefor bonds or notes conferred by the first section of the act of March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government," shall cease on and after the passage of this act, except so far as it may effect [affect] $75,000,000 of bonds already advertised.

SPECIAL WAR INCOME TAX.

Resolved, &c., That, in addition to the income duty already imposed by law, there shall be levied, assessed, and collected on the first day of October eighteen hundred and sixty-four, a special income duty upon the gains, profits, or income for the year ending the thirty-first day of December next preceding the time herein named, by levying, assessing, and collecting said duty of all persons residing within the United States, or of citizens of the United States residing abroad, at the rate of five per centum on all sums exceeding six hundred dollars, and the same shall be levied, assessed, estimated, and collected, except as to the rates, according to the provisions of existing laws for the collection of an income duty, annually, where not inapplicable hereto; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as to time and mode, or other matters, to enforce the collection of the special income duty herein provided for, as may be necessary: Provided, That in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income, as aforesaid, for the foregoing special income duty, no deductions shall be made for dividends or interest received from any association, corporation, or company, nor shall any deduction be made for any salary or pay received.

"Legal Tenders."

Second Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

1862, Feb. 6.—The House came to a vote on two propositions for the issue of $150,000,000 in Treasury notes.

The one, for notes without interest, and denomination not below $5—of which $50,000,000 should be in lieu of so many of the "Demand notes"—to be receivable for all duties, imposts, excises, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States, and all salaries, &c., from the United States, "and shall also be lawful money, and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States," to be exchangeable for twenty year six per cent. bonds, interest payable semi-annually, or five year seven per cent. bonds with interest payable semi-annually in coin. Such United States notes to be received the same as coin in payment for loans. Five hundred millions of bonds authorized, payable after twenty years, at six per cent. interest payable semi-annually.

The other, offered as an amendment, authorized $100,000 of Treasury notes at 3.65 per cent. per annum, payable in two years, to be receivable for all public dues except duties on imports, and for all salaries, debts, and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, at the option of such individuals, corporations, and associations, exchangeable for 7.30 bonds with interest payable semi-annually in coin, and receivable the same as coin in payment of loans. $500,000,000 of bonds authorized—$200,000,000 at 7.30 interest payable semi-annually in coin, and redeemable after ten years, and $300,000,000, redeemable after twenty-four years, at 6 per cent., payable semi-annually in coin.

The latter was rejected—yeas 55, nays 95, as follows:

While this question was pending before the Committee of Ways and Means, the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. CHASE, addressed them a letter, from which this is an extract:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 29, 1862.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution of the Committee of Ways and Means, referring me to House bill No. 240, and requesting my opinion as to the propriety and necessity of its immediate passage by Congress.

The condition of the Treasury certainly renders immediate action on the subject of affording provision for the e. • penditures of the Government, both expedient and necessary. The general provisions of the bill submitted to me, seem to me well adapted to the end proposed. There are, however, some points which may, perhaps, be usefully amended.

The provision making United States notes a legal tender has doubtless been well considered by the committee, and their conclusion needs no support from any observation of mine. I think it my duty, however, to say, that in respect to this provision my reflections have conducted me to the same conclusions they have reached. It is not unknown to them that I have felt, nor do I wish to conceal that I now feel, a great aversion to making anything but coin a legal tender in payment of debts. It has been my anxious wish to avoid the necessity of such legislation. It is, however, at present impossible, in consequence of the large expenditures entailed by the war, and the suspension of the banks, to procure sufficient coin for disbursements; and it has, therefore, become indispensably necessary that we should resort to the issue of United States notes. The making them a legal tender might, however, still be avoided if the willingness manifested by the people generally, by railroad companies, and by many of the banking institutions, to receive and pay them as money in all transactions were absolutely or practically universal; but, unfortunately, there are some persons and some institutions which refuse to receive and pay them, and whose action tends not merely to the unnecessary depreciation of the notes, but to establish discrimination in business against those who, in this matter, give a cordial support to the Government, and in favor of those who do not. Such discriminations should, if possible, be prevented; and the provision making the notes a legal tender, in a great measure at least, prevents it, by putting all citizens, in this respect, on the same level both of rights and duties.

The committee, doubtless, feel the necessity of accompanying this measure by legislation necessary to secure the highest credit as well as the largest currency of these notes. This security can be found, in my judgment, by proper provisions for funding them in interest bearing bonds, by well-guarded legislation authorizing banking associations with circulation based on the bonds in which the notes are funded, and by a judicious system of adequate taxation, which will not only create a demand for the notes, but—by securing the prompt payment of interest—raise and sustain the credit of the bonds. Such legislation, it may be hoped, will divest the legal tender clause of the bill of injurious tendencies, and secure the earliest possible return to a sound currency of coin and promptly convertible notes.

I beg leave to add that vigorous military operations and the unsparing retrenchment of all necessary expenses will also contribute essentially to this desirable end.

I have the honor to be, with very great respect, yours truly,
S. P. CHASE.

HON. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman.

During the pendency of this question, 1862, January 15—Mr. CORNING offered this joint resolution:

Resolved, &c., That in order to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government, the interest on the national loans, and have an ample sinking fund for the ultimate liquidation of the public debt, a tax shall be imposed, which shall, with the tariff on imports, secure an annual revenue of not less than $150,000,000.

Which was adopted—yeas 133, nays 6. The NAYS were:

SMALL BANK NOTES—VETO MESSAGE.

To the Senate of the United States:

The bill which has passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, entitled "An act to repeal that part of an act of Congress which prohibits the circulation of bank notes of a less denomination than five dollars in the District of Columbia," has received my attentive consideration, and I now return it to the Senate, in which it originated, with the following objections:

1. The bill proposes to repeal the existing legislation, prohibiting the circulation of bank notes of a less denomination than five dollars within the District of Columbia, without permitting the issuing of such bills by banks not now legally authorized to issue them. In my judgment, it will be found impracticable, in the present condition of the currency, to make such a discrimination. The banks have generally suspended specie payments; and a legal sanction given to the circulation of the irredeemable notes of one class of them, will almost certainly be so extended, in practical operation, as to include those of all classes, whether authorized or unauthorized. If this view be correct, the currency of the District, should this act become a law, will certainly and greatly deteriorate to the serious injury of honest trade and honest labor.

2. This bill seems to contemplate no end which cannot be otherwise more certainly and beneficially attained. During the existing war, it is peculiarly the duty of the National Government to secure to the people a sound circulating medium. This duty has been, under existing circumstances, satisfactorily performed, in part at least, by authorizing the issue of United States notes, receivable for all Government dues except customs, and made a legal tender for all debts public and private, except interest on the public debt. The object of the bill submitted to me, namely, that of providing a small note currency during the present suspension, can be fully accomplished by authorizing the issue—as part of any new emission of United States notes made necessary by the circumstances of the country—of notes of a similar character, but of less denomination than five dollars. Such an issue would answer all the beneficial purposes of the bill; would save a considerable amount to the treasury, in interest; would greatly facilitate payments to soldiers and other creditors of small sums; and would furnish to the people a currency as safe as their own Government.

Entertaining these objections to the bill, I feel myself constrained to withhold from it my approval, and return it for the further consideration and action of Congress.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

State Taxation.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

June 22—The loan bill before the House in Committee of the Whole, and the question being on the first section, authorizing a loan of $400,000,000, closing with this clause:

And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to strike out the clause, which was agreed to—yeas 61, nays 44.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to insert at the end of the first section these words:

And that the bonds and other obligations issued under this act shall be subject to State and municipal taxation.

Mr. NOBLE moved to amend the amendment by substituting the following:

And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States, shall be subject to State and municipal taxation, on equal terms, the same as other property.

Which was rejected.

Mr. KERNAN moved this substitute for Mr. HOLMAN's amendment:

And that the owners of the bonds and obligations issued under and by virtue of the provisions of this act shall be liable to State and municipal taxation upon the value thereof to the same extent as they are liable to such taxation upon any other securities or similar personal estate owned by them.

Mr. HOLMAN accepted the amendment, which was rejected—yeas 56, nays 59.

June 23—Pending the consideration of the loan bill in the House, being in Committee of the Whole,

Mr. STEVENS offered this substitute for the bill:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States, $400,000,000, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, and to issue therefor, coupon or registered bonds of the United States, redeemable, at the pleasure of the Government, after any period not less than five nor more than thirty years, and, if deemed expedient, made payable at any period not more than forty years from date, payable in coin. And said bonds shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, not less than fifty dollars, and bear an annual interest not exceeding eight per cent., payable semi-annually, and the interest on all bonds heretofore issued, payable annually, may be paid semi-annually; and in lieu of such bond, authorized to be issued, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue bonds, bearing interest, payable semi-annually. And he may also issue in exchange for Treasury notes heretofore issued bearing seven and three tenths per cent. interest, besides the six per cent. bonds heretofore authorized, like bonds of the denomination of $100 and of $50. And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to strike out the last sentence, which was rejected, on division—yeas 58, nays 73.

* January 17—The President sent this message to Congress:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have signed the joint resolution to provide for the immediate payment of the army and navy of the United States, passed by the House of Representatives on the 14th and by the Senate on the 15th instant.

The joint resolution is a simple authority, amounting, however, under existing circumstances, to a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to make an additional issue of $100,000,000 in United States notes, if so much money is needed, for the payment of the army and navy.

My approval is given in order that every possible facility may be afforded for the prompt discharge of all arrears of pay due to our soldiers and our sailors.

While giving this approval, however, I think it my duty to express my sincere regret that it has been found necessary to authorize so large an additional issue of United States notes when this circulation, and that of the suspended banks together, have become already so redundant as to increase prices beyond real values, thereby augmenting the cost of living to the injury of labor, and the cost of supplies to the injury of the whole country.

It seems very plain that the continued issues of United States notes, without any check to the issues of suspended banks and without adequate provision for the raising of money by loans, and for funding the issues so as to keep them within due limits, must soon produce disastrous consequences. And this matter appears to me so important that I feel bound to avail myself of this occasion to ask the especial attention of Congress to it.

That Congress has power to regulate the currency of the country can hardly admit of a doubt; and that a judicious measure to prevent the deterioration of this currency, by a reasonable taxation of bank circulation or otherwise, is needed, seems equally clear. Independently of this general consideration, it would be unjust to the people at large to exempt banks enjoying the special privilege of circulation from their just proportion of the public burdens.

In order to raise money by way of loans most easily and cheaply, it is clearly necessary to give every possible support to the public credit. To that end, a uniform currency, in which taxes, subscriptions to loans, and all other ordinary public dues, as well as all private dues, may be paid, is almost if not quite indispensable. Such a currency can be furnished by banking associations, organized under a general act of Congress, as suggested in my message at the beginning of the present session. The securing of this circulation by the pledge of United States bonds, as therein suggested, would still further facilitate loans, by increasing the present and causing a future demand for such bonds.

In view of the actual financial embarrassments of the Government, and of the greater embarrassments sure to come if the necessary means of relief be not afforded, I feel that I should not perform my duty by a simple announcement of my approval of the joint resolution which proposes relief only by increasing circulation, without expressing my earnest desire that measures, such in substance as those I have just referred to, may receive the early sanction of Congress.

By such measures, in my opinion, will payment be most certainly secured, not only to the army and navy, but to all honest creditors of the Government, and satisfactory provision made for future demands on the treasury.

"Every organization under this act shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States a duty of one per cent. each half year, from and after the 1st day of April, in the year 1864, upon the maximum amount of their circulating notes during the six months; and in default of such payment the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to retain one per cent. of the amount of bonds required to be deposited as security for such circulation at each semi-annual payment of the interest thereon; and such duty and the taxes or duties imposed by Congress from time to time shall be in lieu of all other taxes on such associations: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the market value of the shares in any of the said banking associations, held by any person or body-corporate created by State law, being included in the valuation of the aggregate personal property of such person or State corporation in assessing any tax imposed by any State or municipal authority on the aggregate personal estate of all persons subject to the authority of such State or municipality."

Mr. FENTON moved to substitute this:

And that nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the taxation by States of the capital stock of banks organized under this act, the same as the property of other moneyed corporations for State or municipal purposes; but no State shall impose any tax upon such associations or their capital, circulation, dividends, or business, at a higher rate of taxation than shall be imposed by such State upon the same amount of moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State: Provided, That no State tax shall be imposed on any part of the capital stock of such association invested in the bonds of the United States, deposited as security for its circulation.

ON TAXATION.

April 29—The Senate committee reported a substitute for Mr. FENTON's amendment adopted by the House, which proposed that—

In lieu of all other taxes every association shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a duty of one half of one per cent. each half year from and after the 1st day of January, 1864, upon the average amount of its notes in circulation, and a duty of one quarter of one per cent. each half year upon the average amount of its deposits, and a duty of one quarter of one per cent. each half year, as aforesaid, on the average amount of its capital stock beyond the amount invested in United States bonds. * * * Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the market value of the shares in any of the said associations, held by any person or body-corporate, from being included in the valuation of the personal property of such person or corporation in the assessment of all taxes imposed by or under State authority for State, county, or municipal purposes; but not at a greater rate than is assessed upon all other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State. And all the remedies provided by State laws for the collection of such taxes shall be applicable thereto: Provided, also, That nothing in this act shall exempt the real estate of associations from either State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real estate is taxed.

Mr. POMEROY moved to strike out the first proviso, and insert:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as exempting the capital stock of an association, beyond the amount invested in United States bonds and deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as part of its capital or as security for its circulating notes, from being subject to the same rate of State and municipal taxation as is imposed upon other personal property in the State, city, or town in which the association is located.

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the market value of the shares in any of the said associations, held by any person or body-corporate, from being included in the valuation of the personal property of such person or corporation in the assessment of all taxes imposed by or under State authority for State, county, or municipal purposes in the State where the bank is situated; &c.

And in lieu of all other taxes on the capital, circulation, deposits, shares, and other property, every association shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a duty of one per cent. each half year from and after the 1st day of January, 1864, upon the average amount of its notes in circulation, and the duty of one half of one per cent. each half year upon the average amount of its deposits, and a duty of one half of one per cent. each half year, as aforesaid, on the average amount of its capital stock beyond the amount invested in United States bonds: * * * Provided, That nothing in this act shall exempt the real estate of associations from either State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real estate is taxed: Provided also, That all taxes imposed by this or any future act on banking associations organized under national legislation shall be

* Mr. SUMNER read this letter from Secretary Chase:
TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

SIR: Nothing but my deep sense of the importance of sustaining by every possible means the public credit, upon which the sole dependence of the Government to suppress the insurrection must rest, would induce me to address you this letter upon a subject which has already received so much consideration.

The bill in relation to the national banking system now under debate is in the nature of an amendment to the act of the last session. Though a complete bill in itself, it contains few provisions not substantially embraced in that act, among which that in relation to the measure and distribution of taxation may be regarded perhaps as the most important. Under ordinary circumstances there might be no insuperable objection to leaving the property organized under the national banking law, subject as are almost all descriptions of property to general taxation, State, national, and municipal. But in the present condition of the country, I respectfully submit that this particular description of property should be placed in the same category with imported goods before their entry into general consumption, and be subjected to exclusive national taxation.

At the present moment the duties on imports form the sole reliance of the Government for means to pay the interest on the public debt. If to these means the taxes to be paid by the national banks shall be added a most important addition will be made to these measures. The mere fact that these taxes are made payable to the national Government and so rendered available for the payment of interest on the public debt, and for the reduction of its principal, will strengthen the public credit and facilitate the negotiation of the necessary loans at moderate rates of interest. I have no doubt that such a disposition of these taxes would be worth more to the Government during the present struggle in practical results than three times the actual value of the taxes themselves.

I do not at all suggest that this description of property should not be taxed as heavily as any other description. On the contrary, I think it just that it should bear its full proportion of the public burdens. I am only anxious that the taxation upon it shall be made to contribute as largely as possible to the general welfare, and it is the conviction deeply impressed on my mind that it will contribute more when aggregated in one mass, and made to tell upon the general public credit, than when distributed between the nation and the States and numerous municipal corporations, that prompts me to address these views to you.

Under any plan of partition that may be adopted the amount of taxation distributable to the several States and municipalities will be comparatively small and unimportant, and it is quite possible that the total taxation of banking property for all purposes, will be less than it will if taxed exclusively for national purposes. The advantages of partition to States and municipalities will therefore be small, and the banks may not lose by it. The nation alone will be injured. It will not be understood, of course, that the foregoing suggestions are intended to apply to real estate held by any banking institutions; that description of property must necessarily be held by titles under State laws, and should properly be subjected exclusively to State taxation, except in the event of a direct tax by Congress.

The case is otherwise with the personal property and credits of the banking associations. These receive their organization from national law and for great national purposes, and may therefore be with great propriety, and—as I have endeavored to show at the present time—with great public advantage be subjected to exclusive national taxation.

Respectfully yours,
S. P. CHASE.
The Hon. WILLIAM PITT FESSENDEN,
Chairman of the Committee on Finance, Senate Chamber.

applied exclusively to the payment of the interest and principal of the national debt of the United States.

Which was rejected—yeas 11, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Wilkinson, Wilson—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle—24.

ON SMALL NOTES.

May 10—Mr. BUCKALEW moved to strike out of the twenty-second section the words allowing one, two, and three dollar bills; which was rejected—yeas 8, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Doolittle, Henderson, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, Wilson—27.

ON REPEALING THE BANKING SYSTEM.

Mr. POWELL moved to substitute for the whole bill, a section repealing the banking act of February 25, 1863; which was rejected—yeas 6, (Messrs. Buckalew, Henderson, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury,) nays 31.

The bill then passed.

The House non-concurred in the Senate's amendments, when a Committee of Conference was appointed, who reported, June 1. The tax question was settled by adding these words to the thirty-second section:

And nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent all the shares in any of the said associations, held by any person or body corporate, from being included in the valuation of personal property of such person or corporation, in the assessment of taxes imposed by or under State authority, at the place where such bank is located, and not elsewhere; but not at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of said States: Provided further, That the tax so imposed under the law of any State upon the shares of any of the associations authorized by this act shall not exceed the rate imposed on shares in any of the bank organizations under the authority of the State where such association is located.

The bill provides for a tax of one per cent. on the circulation of national banks, one half of one per cent. on their deposits, and one per cent. on their capital above the amount invested in United States bonds.

The report was concurred in, without a division in either house.

* TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 18, 1864.

SIR: Your letter of the 13th instant, making inquiries in regard to the kind of currency with which the five-twenty years six per cent. and the three years seven-thirty per cent. notes are to be redeemed, has been received.

It has been the constant usage of the Department to redeem all coupon and registered bonds forming part of the funded or permanent debt of the United States in coin, and this usage has not been deviated from during my administration of affairs.

All the treasury notes and other obligations forming part of the temporary loan are payable and will be redeemed in lawful money: that is to say, in United States notes until after the resumption of specie payments, when they also will doubtless be redeemed in coin, or equivalent notes.

The five-twenty sixes being payable twenty years from date, though redeemable after five years, are considered as belonging to the funded or permanent debt, and so also are the twenty years sixes into which the three years seven-thirty notes are convertible. These bonds, therefore, according to the usage of the Government, are payable in coin.

The three years seven-thirty treasury notes are part of the temporary loan, and will be paid in United States notes, unless holders prefer conversion to payment.

Very respectfully,

S. P. CHASE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

That all Treasury notes of all denominations of one hundred dollars, not bearing interest, which shall not be presented for funding under the provisions of the first section of this act, shall, from and after the first day of April, 1864, east of the Mississippi River, and the first day of July, 1864, west of the Mississippi, cease to be receivable in payment of public dues, and said notes, if not so presented at the time, shall, in addition to the tax of thirty-three and one-third cents imposed in the fourth section of this act, be subject to a tax of ten per cent. per month until so presented; which taxes shall attach to said notes wherever circulated, and shall be deducted from the face of said notes wherever presented for payment or for funding, and such notes shall not be exchangeable for the new issue of Treasury notes provided for in this act.

SEC. 4. That on all the said Treasury notes not funded or used in payment of taxes at the dates and places prescribed in the first section of this act, there shall be levied at said dates and places a tax of $33\frac{1}{3}$ cents for every dollar funded on the face of said notes. Said tax shall attach to said notes wherever circulated, and shall be collected by deducting the same at the Treasury, its depositories and by the collectors, and by all Government officers receiving the same, wherever presented for payment, or for funding, or in payment of Government dues, or for postage or in exchange for new notes as hereinafter provided, and said Treasury notes shall be fundable in bonds as provided in the first section of this act, until the first day of January, 1865, at the rate of sixty-six cents and two thirds on the dollar, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury at any time between the first of April east and the first of July, 1864, west of the Mississippi river, and the first of January, 1865, to substitute and exchange new Treasury notes for same, at the rate of sixty-six and two thirds cents on the dollar: Provided, That notes of the denomination of \$100 shall not be entitled to the privilege of said exchange: Provided, further, That on the right to fund all such Treasury notes which may remain outstanding on the first day of January, 1865, and which may not be exchanged for new Treasury notes, as herein provided, a tax of one hundred per cent is hereby imposed.

SEC. 5. That after the 1st day of April next, all authority heretofore given to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue Treasury notes shall be, and is hereby, revoked; provided, the Secretary of the Treasury may after that time issue new Treasury notes in such forms as he may prescribe, payable two years after the ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States, said new issue to be receivable in payment of all public dues except export and import duties, and to be issued in exchange for old notes at the rate of \$2 of the new issue for \$3 of the old issues, whether said old notes be surrendered for exchange by the holders thereof or be received into the Treasury under the provisions of this act; and the holders of the new notes or of the old notes, except those of the denomination of \$100, after they are reduced to 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ cents on the dollar by the tax aforesaid, may convert them into call certificates bearing interest at the rate of four per cent per annum, and payable two years after a ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States, unless sooner converted into new notes.

SEC. 6. That to pay the expenses of the Government, not otherwise provided for, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue six per cent bonds to an amount not exceeding $500,000,000, the principal and interest whereof shall be free from taxation, and for the payment of the interest thereon, the entire net receipts of any export duty hereinafter laid on the value of all cotton, tobacco, and naval stores, which shall be exported from the Confederate States, and the net proceeds of the import duties now laid, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the interest are hereby specially pledged: Provided, That the duties now laid upon imports, and hereby pledged, shall hereafter be paid in specie or in sterling exchange, or in the coupons of said bonds.

SEC. 12. That any State holding Treasury notes received before the times herein fixed for taxing said notes shall be allowed until the 1st day of January, 1865, to fund the same in six per cent. bonds of the Confederate States, payable twenty years after date, and the interest payable semi-annually. But all Treasury notes received by any State after the time fixed for taxing the same, as aforesaid, shall be held to have been received, diminished by the amount of said tax. The discrimination between the notes subject to the tax and those not so subject shall be left to the good faith of each State, and the certificate of the Governor thereof shall in each case be conclusive.

S.E.C. 13. That Treasury notes heretofore issued, bearing interest at the rate of seven dollars and thirty cents on the hundred dollars per annum, shall no longer be received in payment of public dues, but shall be deemed and considered bonds of the Confederate States, payable two years after the ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States, bearing the rate of interest specified on their face, payable the 1st of January in each and every year.

SPECULATIONS ON THE FUNDING.

The Richmond Examiner of the 11th of April, 1864, gives the following statistics of the rebel currency, from which it will be seen that a desperate attempt is making to retrieve the financial disasters of the South:

The depletion of the Confederate currency under the recent legislation is much greater than is generally supposed; and in this connection it will be interesting to refer to well established figures. The entire issue of the old circulation we may take at $800,000,000. The number of one hundred dollar bills in circulation has been about $250,000,000. Of lesser denominations that will be funded, there are, at least, say $50,000,000. Deduct now the $300,000,000 funded, and we have $500,000,000. This, reduced by the discount of thirty-three and one-third per cent., will, in round numbers, leave us $320,000,000.

The tax levied for 1864 is estimated considerably above $400,000,000. There being only $320,000,000 funded in four per cents., it follows that $100,000,000 of currency must be used in addition to the above for the payment of taxes for 1864, which will still further reduce the circulating medium to $220,000,000. From the last named sum there must be subtracted the amount required to pay the additional taxes imposed by the late Congress on the income tax of 1863, as well as some portion of the old taxes that will not be paid on the first of April, 1864. The circulation would thus be reduced to $200,000,000, without reference to the manufacture and emission of more paper money.

But here comes up the important question of the new issue, which involves the vitality of the whole scheme. The first interpretation of the currency act was that it denied power to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue one dollar notes except in exchange for the present currency at the rate of two dollars of the new for three dollars of the old, which may remain unfunded on the first of April. Others construe the act to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to issue two dollars of the new issue for three dollars of the old, whether funded or unfunded—whether exchanged or paid in for taxes.

The latter construction is said to be favored by Mr. Manning, namely, that he is authorized to issue new notes to the amount of two-thirds of the whole of the old issue. In other words, supposing the old notes in circulation amounted to $800,000,000 the first of April, the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to issue two-thirds of this amount, that is, $533,333,333, affording a supply to the Treasury for about eight months, irrespective of the sum that may be raised by the sale of six per cent. bonds.

[From the Richmond Sentinel.]

There is but little doubt that the funding, east and west of the Mississippi, will amount to $500,000,000. The total issue outstanding, March 31 is thereby reduced say to $455,000,000. Of this, a considerable portion, probably $100,000,000, is in $100 notes. Excluding these, we have $355,000,000 left, of which the issues of $5 and under amount to $90,969,893 50. Suppose $85,000,000 of these are now in circulation, and we have for all others $269,000,000, which the tax of one third has reduced to $200,000,000. The total circulation at the present time, irrespective of the new issue, is therefore, largely less than $300,000,000, and of this a considerable amount is always to be found in the hands of the disbursing officers and depositories.

We have not included in the above any estimates of the amount of circulation lost or destroyed, and thereby gained to the Government. It is doubtless considerable.

The amount of currency which has been canceled and destroyed (irrespective of the operations of the present currency law) is nearly twenty per cent. of the whole issue. If this reduction be applied to the five dollar notes, the amount of these in circulation would appear to be $2,272,252.

[From The Examiner of the 21st March, 1864.]

Only ten days now intervene before the currency remaining in circulation is taxed one-third, and, consequently, during the week commencing Monday, the holders of Treasury notes must decide whether they will keep them until the 1st of April and submit to the Government shave, fund the amount in four per cent. bonds, or exchange it for bonds or personal property. The necessity of coming to a conclusion is "sharpening the wits" of the people, though it is not improbable that some who esteem themselves

"wondrous wise" in financial matters will commit a blunder in disposing of their surplus cash. The ability to penetrate the future is a power which few, if any, possess, and hence the views expressed in regard to the effect of the financial legislation of Congress, after the currency is reduced, are diverse and vaguely theoretical.

Everybody knows that a $10 note, after 1st April, will only represent a net value of $9.66%, and accordingly the universal desire is to dispose of the currency in hand at this time, so as to avoid this apparent loss, very few being willing to hold it with the expectation that $96 of the new currency will, in a few weeks, buy more of any article than $100 will purchase now. They must see the fact before they will believe it, but then it will be too late to profit by the development.

In the meantime, all kinds of "cornering" processes are in vogue, and it must be admitted that some of them are plausible enough. For instance, it is argued that certain bonds and stocks may be bought now, and sold in the new currency at a decline not exceeding fifteen to twenty-five per cent.—thereby saving ten to fifteen in the transmutory malum.

On the last day of the session, June 15, President Davis vetoed the bill allowing further time to persons within the enemy's lines to fund their Treasury notes. The consideration of the subject was postponed until the next session.

RICHMOND, April 22, 1864.

The outstanding amount of Treasury notes, of the denomination of five dollars and under, is about seventy-five millions.

The funding returns sum up an aggregate of two hundred and thirty-seven million dollars. Twenty small depositories yet to hear from. The only State from which complete returns have been received is Georgia, where the amount funded is seventy-two millions one hundred and eighty-four thousand dollars.

TAXATION.

THE TAX ACT OF JULY, 1861.

The Richmond Enquirer gives the following summary of the act authorizing the issue of Treasury notes and bonds, and providing a war tax for their redemption:

Section one authorizes the issue of Treasury notes, payable to bearer at the expiration of six months after the ratification of a treaty of peace between the Confederate States and the United States. The notes are not to be of a less denomination than five dollars, to be re-issued at pleasure, to be received in payment of all public dues, except the export duty on cotton, and the whole issue outstanding at one time, including the amount issued under former acts, are not to exceed one hundred millions of dollars.

Section two provides that, for the purpose of funding the said notes, or for the purpose of purchasing specie or military stores, &c., bonds may be issued, payable not more than twenty years after date, to the amount of one hundred millions of dollars, and bearing an interest of eight per cent. per annum. This amount includes the thirty millions already authorized to be issued. The bonds are not to be issued in less amounts than $100, except when the subscription is for a less amount, when they may be issued as low as $50.

Section three provides that holders of Treasury notes may at any time exchange them for bonds.

Section four provides that, for the special purpose of paying the principal and interest of the public debt, and of supporting the Government, a war tax shall be assessed and levied of fifty cents upon each one hundred dollars in value of the following property in the Confederate States, namely: Real estate of all kinds; slaves; merchandise; bank stocks; railroad and other corporation stocks; money at interest or invested by individuals in the purchase of bills, notes, and other securities for money, except the bonds of the Confederate States of America, and cash on hand or on deposit in bank or elsewhere; cattle, horses, and mules; gold watches, gold and silver plate; pianos and pleasure carriages: Provided, however, That when the taxable property, herein above enumerated, of any head of a family is of value less than five hundred dollars, such taxable property shall be exempt from taxation under this act. It provides further that the property of colleges, schools, and religious associations shall be exempt.

The remaining sections provide for the collection of the tax.

THE TAX ACT OF DECEMBER 19, 1861.

The exception allowed by the twentieth section for agricultural products shall be construed to embrace such products only when in the hands of the producers, or held for his account. But no tax shall be assessed or levied on any money at interest when the notes, bond, bill, or other security taken for its payment, shall be worthless from the insolvency and total inability to pay of the payor or obligor, or person liable to make such payment; and all securities for money payable under this act shall be assessed according to their value, and the assessor shall have the same power to ascertain the value of such securities as the law confers upon him with respect to other property.

SEC. 7. In case any of the Confederate States shall undertake to pay the tax to be collected within its limits before the time at which the district collectors shall enter upon the discharge of their duties, the Secretary of the Treasury may suspend the appointment of such collectors, and may direct the chief collector to appoint assessors, and to take proper measures for the making and perfecting the returns, assessments and lists required by law; and the returns, assessments and lists so made, shall have the same legal validity, to all intents and purposes, as if made according to the provisions of the act to which this act is supplementary.

SEC. 8. That tax lists already given, varying from the provisions of this act, shall be corrected so as to conform thereto.

THE TAX ACT OF APRIL 24, 1863.

[From the Richmond Whig, April 21.]

We present below a synopsis of the bill to lay taxes for the common defence and to carry on the government of the Confederate States, which has passed both branches of Congress. It is substantially the bill proposed by the committee on conference:

1. The first section imposes a tax of eight per cent. upon the value of all naval stores, salt, wines and spirituous liquors, tobacco, manufactured or unmanufactured, cotton, wool, flour, sugar, molasses, syrup, rice, and other agricultural products, held or owned on the 1st day of July next, and not necessary for family consumption for the unexpired portion of the year 1863, and of the growth or production of any year preceding the year 1863; and a tax of one per cent. upon all moneys, bank notes or other currency on hand or on deposit on the 1st day of July next, and on the value of all credits on which the interest has not been paid, and not employed in a business, the income derived from which is taxed under the provisions of this act: Provided, That all moneys owned, held or deposited beyond the limits of the Confederate States shall be valued at the current rate of exchange in Confederate treasury notes. The tax act of February 17, 1864, levies, in addition to the above rates, the following, as stated in the Richmond Sentinel of February, 1864:

SEC. 1. Upon the value of real, personal, and mixed property, of every kind and description, except the exemptions hereafter to be named, five per cent.; the tax levied on property employed in agriculture to be credited by the value of property in kind.*

Sec. 3. Upon the market value of gold and silver coin or bullion, five per cent.; also the same upon moneys held abroad, or all bills of exchange drawn therefor.

A tax of five per cent. on all solvent credits, and on all bank bills and papers used as currency, except non-interest bearing Confederate Treasury notes, and not employed in a registered business taxed twenty-five per cent.

Sec. 4. Profits in trade and business taxed as follows:

On the purchase and sale of agricultural products and mercantile wares generally, from January 1, 1863, to January 1, 1865, ten per cent in addition to the tax under the act of April 24, 1863.

The same on the purchase and sale of coin, exchange, stocks, notes, and credits of any kind, and any property not included in the foregoing.

Sec. 5. The following are exempted from taxation:

One thousand dollars of the property of the widow or minor children of any officer, soldier, sailor, or marine, who has died in the service.

When property has been injured or destroyed by the enemy, or the owner unable temporarily to use or occupy it by reason of the presence or proximity of the enemy, the assessment may be reduced in proportion to the damage sustained by the owner, and the tax in the same ratio by the district collector.

Sec. 6. The taxes on property for 1864 to be assessed as on the day of the passage of this act, and collected the 1st of June next, with ninety days extension west of the Mississippi. The additional tax on incomes or profits for 1863, to be paid forthwith; the tax on incomes, &c., for 1864, to be collected according to the acts of 1863.

Sec. 7. Exempts from tax on income for 1864, all property herein taxed ad valorem. The tax on Confederate bonds in no case to exceed the interest payable on the same; and said bonds exempt from tax when held by minors or lunatics, if the interest do not exceed one thousand dollars.

THE TAX LAW.

We learn that, according to the construction of the recent tax law in the Treasury Department, tax payers will be required to state the articles and objects subjected to a specific or ad valorem tax, held, owned, or possessed by them on the 17th day of February, 1864, the date of the act.

The daily wages of detailed soldiers and other employes of the Government are not liable to taxation as income, although they may amount, in the aggregate, to the sum of $1,000 per annum.

A tax additional to both the above was imposed as follows, June 1, 1864:

A bill to provide supplies for the army, and to prescribe the mode of making impressments.*

Sec. 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, Every person required to pay a tax in kind, under

That foreigners resident within the Confederate States shall not be required to pay, except from the aforesaid articles produced by or for them, or from income or profits derived from business conducted by them within those States; nor shall any tax be levied upon the produce of residents where the total value of such products during said years is less than $500; nor shall any tax be levied on the income of residents where the total value of such income is less than $500.

* The Georgia Supreme Court has made an important decision in the case of impressment of sugar in the hands of a merchant. One of the points was that "the Congress of the provisions of the "Act to lay taxes for the common defense and carry on the Government of the Confederate States," approved April 24, 1863, and the act amendatory thereof, approved February 17, 1864, shall, in addition to the one tenth required by said acts to be paid as a tax in kind, deliver to the Confederate Government, of the products of the present year and of the year 1865, one other tenth of the several products taxed in kind by the acts aforesaid, which additional one tenth shall be ascertained, assessed and collected, in all respects, as is provided by law for the said tax in kind, and shall be paid for, on delivery, by the Post Quartermasters in the several districts at the assessed value thereof, except that payment for cotton and tobacco shall be made by the agents of the Treasury Department appointed to receive the same.

Sec. 2. The supplies necessary to the support of the producer and his family, and to carry on his ordinary business, shall be exempt d from the contribution required by the preceding section, and from the additional impressments authorized by the act: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal or affect the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the impressment of meat for the use of the army, under certain circumstances," approved Feb. 17, 1864, and if the amount of any article or product so necessary cannot be agreed upon between the assessor and the producer, it shall be ascertained and determined by disinterested freeholders of the vicinage, as is provided in cases of disagreement as to the estimates and assessments of tax in kind. If required by the assessor, such freeholder shall ascertain whether a producer, who is found unable to furnish the additional one tenth of any one product, cannot supply the deficiency by the delivery of an equivalent in other products, and upon what terms such commutation shall be made. Any commutation thus awarded shall be enforced and collected, in all respects, as is provided for any other contribution required by this act.

Sec. 3. The Secretary of War may, at his discretion, decline to assess, or, after assessment, may decline to collect the whole or any part of the additional one tenth herein provided for, in any district or locality; and it shall be his duty promptly to give notice of any such determination, specifying, with reasonable certainty, the district or locality and the product, or the proportion thereof, as to which he so declines.

Sec. 4. The products received for the contribution herein required, shall be disposed of and accounted for in the same manner as those received for the tax in kind; and the Secretary of War may, whenever the exigencies of the public service will allow, authorize the sale of products received from either source, to public officers or agents charged in any State with the duty of providing for the families of soldiers. Such sale shall be at the prices paid or assessed for the products sold, including the actual cost of collections.

Sec. 5. If, in addition to the tax in kind and the contribution herein required, the necessities of the army or the good of the service shall require other supplies of food or forage, or any other private property, and the same cannot be procured by contract, then impressments may be made of such supplies or other property, either for absolute ownership or for temporary use, as the public necessities may require. Such impressments shall be made in accordance with the provisions, and subject to the restrictions of the existing impressment laws, except so far as is herein otherwise provided.

Sec. 6. The right and the duty of making impressments is hereby confided exclusively to the officers and agents charged in the several districts with the assessment and collection of the tax in kind and of the contribution herein required; and all officers and soldiers in any department of the army are hereby expressly prohibited from undertaking in any manner to interfere with these officers and agents in any part of their duties in respect to the tax in kind, the contribution, or the impressment herein provided for: Provided, That this prohibition shall not be applicable to any district, county, or parish in which there shall be no officer or agent charged with the appointment and collection of the tax in kind.

Sec. 7. Supplies or other property taken by impressment shall be paid for by the post quartermasters in the several districts, and shall be disposed of and accounted for by them as is required in respect to the tax in kind and the contribution herein required; and it shall be the duty of the post quartermasters to equalize and apportion the impressments within their districts, as far as practicable, so as to avoid oppressing any portion of the community.

The Confederate States have the constitutional power to authorize, by statute, the accumulation of supplies for future use of the army by impressment, where holders refuse to sell at fair prices: Provided, 'Just compensation' be made or tendered to the owner."

SEC 8. If any one not authorized by law to collect the tax in kind or the contribution herein required, or to make impressments, shall undertake, on any pretence of such authority, to seize or impress, or to collect or receive any such property, or shall, on any such pretence, actually obtain such property, he shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding five times the value of such property, and be imprisoned not exceeding five years, at the discretion of the court having jurisdiction. And it shall be the duty of all officers and agents charged with the assessment and collection of the tax in kind and of the contribution herein required, promptly to report, through the post quartermasters in the several districts, any violation or disregard of the provisions of this act by any officer or soldier in the service of the Confederate States.

SEC. 9. That it shall not be lawful to impress any sheep, milch cows, brood mares, stud horses, jacks, bulls, or other stock kept or necessary for raising horses, mules, or cattle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The President on Colonization, in August, 1862.

1862, August 14.—The President received a deputation of colored persons relative to emigration. The interview is thus reported:

WASHINGTON, THURSDAY, August 14, 1862.

This afternoon the President of the United States gave an audience to a committee of colored men at the White House. They were introduced by Rev. J. Mitchell, Commissioner of Emigration. E. M. Thomas, the chairman, remarked that they were there by invitation to hear what the Executive had to say to them.

Having all been seated, the President, after a few preliminary observations, informed them that a sum of money had been appropriated by Congress, and placed at his disposition, for the purpose of aiding the colonization in some country of the people, or a portion of them, of African descent, thereby making it his duty, as it had for a long time been his inclination, to favor that cause; and why, he asked, should the people of your race be colonized, and where? Why should they leave this country? This is, perhaps, the first question for proper consideration. You and we are different races. We have between us a broader difference than exists between almost any other two races. Whether it is right or wrong I need not discuss; but this physical difference is a great disadvantage to us both, as I think. Your race suffer very greatly, many of them by living among us, while ours suffer from your presence. In a word we suffer on each side. If this is admitted, it affords a reason, at least, why we should be separated. You here are freemen, I suppose.

A VOICE—Yes, sir.

THE PRESIDENT—Perhaps you have long been free, or all your lives. Your race are suffering, in my judgment, the greatest wrong inflicted on any people. But even when you cease to be slaves, you are yet far removed from being placed on an equality with the white race. You are cut off from many of the advantages which the other race enjoys. The aspiration of men is to enjoy equality with the best when free, but on this broad continent not a single man of your race is made the equal of a single man of ours. Go where you are treated the best, and the ban is still upon you. I do not propose to discuss this, but to present it as a fact, with which we have to deal. I cannot alter it if I would. It is a fact about which we all think and feel alike, I and you. We look to our condition. Owing to the existence of the two races on this continent, I need not recount to you the effects upon white men, growing out of the institution of slavery. I believe in its general evil effects on the white race. See our present condition—the country engaged in war! our white men cutting one another's throats—none knowing how far it will extend—and then consider what we know to be the truth. But for your race among us there could not be war, although many men engaged on either side do not care for you one way or the other. Nevertheless, I repeat, without the institution of slavery, and the colored race as a basis, the war could not have an existence. It is better for us both, therefore, to be separated. I know that there are free men among you who, even if they could better their condition, are not as much inclined to go out of the country as those who, being slaves, could obtain their freedom on this condition. I suppose one of the principal difficulties in the way of colonization is that the free colored man cannot see that his comfort would be advanced by it. You may believe that you can live in Washington, or elsewhere in the United States, the remainder of your life; perhaps more so than you can in any foreign country, and hence you may come to the conclusion that you have nothing to do with the idea of going to a foreign country. This is (I speak in no unkind sense) an extremely selfish view of the case. But you ought to do something to help those who are not so fortunate as yourselves. There is an unwillingness on the part of our people, harsh as it may be, for you free colored people to remain with us. Now if you could give a start to the white people you would open a wide door for many to be made free. If we deal with those who are not free at the beginning, and whose intellects are clouded by slavery, we have very poor material to start with. If intelligent colored men, such as are before me, would move in this matter, much might be accomplished. It is exceedingly important that we have men at the beginning capable of thinking as white men, and not those who have been systematically oppressed. There is much to encourage you. For the sake of your race you should sacrifice something of your present comfort for the purpose of being as grand in that respect as the white people. It is a cheering thought throughout life, that something can be done to ameliorate the condition of those who have been subject to the hard usages of the world. It is difficult to make a man miserable while he feels he is worthy of himself and claims kindred to the great God who made him. In the American Revolutionary war sacrifices were made by men engaged in it, but they were cheered by the future. General Washington himself endured greater physical hardships than if he had remained a British subject, yet he was a happy man, because he was engaged in benefiting his race, in doing something for the children of his neighbors, having none of his own.

The colony of Liberia has been in existence a long time. In a certain sense it is a success. The old President of Liberia, Roberts, has just been with me the first time I ever saw him. He says they have within the bounds of that colony between three and four hundred thousand people, or more than in some of our old States, such as Rhode Island or Delaware, or in some of our newer States, and less than in some of our larger ones. They are not all American colonists or their descendants. Something less than 12,000 have been sent thither from this country. Many of the original settlers have died, yet, like people elsewhere, their offspring outnumber those deceased. The question is, if the colored people are persuaded to go anywhere, why not there? One reason for unwillingness to do so is, that some of you would rather remain within reach of the country of your nativity. I do not know how much attachment you may have toward our race. It does not strike me that you have the greatest reason to love them. But still you are attached to them at all events. The place I am thinking about having for a colony is in Central America. It is nearer to us than Liberia—not much more than one fourth as far as Liberia, and within seven days' run by steamers. Unlike Liberia, it is a great line of travel—it is a highway. The country is a very excellent one for any people, and with great natural resources and advantages, and especially because of the similarity of climate with your native soil, thus being suited to your physical condition. The particular place I have in view is to be a great highway from the Atlantic or Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, and this particular place has all the advantages for a colony. On both sides there are harbors among the finest in the world. Again, there is evidence of very rich coal mines. A certain amount of coal is valuable in any country. Why I attach so much importance to coal is, it will afford an opportunity to the inhabitants for immediate employment till they get ready to settle permanently in their homes. If you take colonists where there is no good landing, there is a bad show; and so where there is nothing to cultivate, and of which to make a farm. But if something is started so that you can get your daily bread as soon as you reach there, it is a great advantage. Coal land is the best thing I know of with which to commence an enterprise. To return—you have been talked to upon this subject, and told that a speculation is intended by gentlemen who have an interest in the country, including the coal mines. We have been mistaken all our lives if we do not know whites, as well as blacks, look to their self-interest. Unless among those deficient of intellect, everybody you trade with makes something. You meet with these things here and everywhere. If such persons have what will be an advantage to them, the question is, whether it cannot be made of advantage to you? You are intelligent and know that success does not as much depend on external help as on self-reliance. Much, therefore, depends upon yourselves. As to the coal mines, I think I see the means available for your self-reliance. I shall, if I get a sufficient number of you engaged, have provision made that you shall not be wronged. If you will engage in the enterprise, I will spend some of the money intrusted to me. I am not sure you will succeed. The Government may lose the money, but we cannot succeed unless we try; but we think with care we can succeed. The political affairs in Central America are not in quite as satisfactory condition as I wish. There are contending factions in that quarter; but it is true, all the factions are agreed alike on the subject of colonization, and want it, and are more generous than we are here. To your colored race they have no objection. Besides, I would endeavor to have you made equals, and have the best assurance that you should be the equals of the best. The practical thing I want to ascertain is, whether I can get a number of able-bodied men, with their wives and children, who are willing to go, when I present evidence of encouragement and protection. Could I get a hundred tolerably intelligent men, with their wives and children, and able to "cut their own fodder," so to speak? Can I have fifty? If I could find twenty-five able-bodied men, with a mixture of women and children—good things in the family relation, I think—I could make a successful commencement. I want you to let me know whether this can be done or not. This is the practical part of my wish to see you. These are subjects of very great importance—worthy of a month's study, of a speech delivered in an hour. I ask you, then, to consider seriously, not pertaining to yourselves merely, nor for your race and ours for the present time, but as one of the things, if successfully managed, for the good of mankind—not confined to the present generation, but as

"From age to age descends the lay
To millions yet to be,
Till far its echoes roll away
Into eternity."

The above is merely given as the substance of the President's remarks.

The chairman of the delegation briefly replied, that "they would hold a consultation, and in a short time give an answer." The President said, "Take your full time—no hurry at all."

The delegation then withdrew.

It was proposed to settle these persons on a tract of country in New Grenada, but that Government objected, and no further attempt has been made in that direction. (For further particulars see page 212.)

Incompatibility of Civil and Military Office.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK and FRANCIS P. BLAIR, Jr., were elected in the fall of 1862 members of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, the first named then being a Major General. The latter was commissioned a Brigadier, and then a Major General, subsequently to the election. BLAIR, Jr., by continuing to hold the office of Major General of Volunteers to which he was appointed November 29, 1862, and to discharge the duties thereof till January 1, 1864, the date of his resignation, did thereby decline and disqualify himself to hold the office of Representative in the Thirty-Eighth Congress, the first session of which commenced on the first Monday in December, 1863.

Bill to Punish Conspiracies.

The bill to define and punish conspiracies provides that if two or more persons within any State or Territory of the United States shall conspire together to overthrow, or to put down, or to destroy by force, the Government of the United States, or to levy war against the United States, or to oppose by force the authority of the Government of the United States; or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States; or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States against the will, or contrary to the authority of the United States; or by force, or intimidation, or threat, to prevent any person from accepting or holding any office, or trust, or place of confidence, under the United States: each and every person so offending shall be guilty of a high crime, and upon conviction in any district or circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction, or district or supreme court of any Territory of the United States having jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine not less than $500 and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment, solitary or social, and with or without hard labor, as the court shall determine, for a period not less than six months nor greater than six years; or by both such fine and imprisonment.

1861, July 15—It passed the House—yeas 123, nays 7, (Messrs. Ashley, Burnett, Diven, Edgerton, Goodwin, Pomeroy, Wood.)

July 26—The bill passed the Senate without a division.

Same day—Mr. POWELL presented this protest against its passage:

Protest of the minority of the Senate of the United States against the passage of the House bill No. 45, entitled "An act to define and punish certain conspirators."

The undersigned, members of the Senate, dissent from the passage of the bill on the following grounds:

The government of the United States is a Government of specially delegated powers; and though treason is one of the highest crimes known to the law, it is a political offense.

To guard against the abuses which in times of high excitement had, in the history of England previous to the revolution of 1688, too often sacrificed able, virtuous, and innocent men on charges of treason and kindred offences, unaccompanied by acts, the Constitution of the United States expressly defines the crime of treason in the following terms:

ART. 3, SEC. 3. "Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort."

It further provides that "no person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court."

The intent to restrict Congress in the creation of crimes of the nature created by this bill seems obvious; for in treason all are principals, and in any conspiracy of the kind stated in the bill, an overt act in pursuance of it, proved by two witnesses, would be treason against the United States.

Thus the creation of an offence, resting in intention alone, without overt act, would render nugatory the provision last quoted, and the door would be opened for those similar oppressions and cruelties which, under the excitement of political struggles, have so often disgraced the past history of the world. The undersigned can conceive no possible object in defining the crime of treason by our ancestors, and requiring proof by two witnesses to the same overt act to justify the conviction of the accused, unless it be to restrict the power of Congress in the creation of a political crime kindred to treason, and charged as resting in intent alone, which would, if accompanied by an overt act, be treason.

It matters not that the punishment prescribed in the law is not death, but imprisonment; for the passage of the bill, though it might not affect the life of an innocent man, would give, from the uncertainty of the offence charged, and the proof requisite to sustain it, the utmost latitude to prosecutions founded on personal enmity and political animosity and the suspicions as to intention which they inevitably engender.

Colored Men as Citizens.

OPINION OF ATTORNEY GENERAL BATES.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE,
November 29, 1862.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR: Some time ago I had the honor to receive your letter submitting, for my opinion, the question whether or not colored men can be citizens of the United States. The urgency of other unavoidable engagements, and the great importance of the question itself, have caused me to delay the answer until now.

Your letter states that "the schooner Elizabeth and Margaret, of New Brunswick, is detained by the revenue cutter Tiger, at South Amboy, New Jersey, because commanded by a 'colored man,' and so by a person not a citizen of the United States. As colored masters are numerous in our coasting trade, I submit, for your opinion, the question suggested by Captain Martin, of the Tiger: Are colored men citizens of the United States, and therefore competent to command American vessels?"

The question would have been more clearly stated if, instead of saying are colored men citizens, it had been said, can colored men be citizens of the United States; for within our borders and upon our ships, both of war and commerce, there may be colored men, and white men, also, who are not citizens of the United States. In treating the subject, I shall endeavor to answer your question as if it imported only this: Is a man legally incapacitated to be a citizen of the United States by the sole fact that he is a colored, and not a white man?

Who is a citizen? What constitutes a citizen of the United States? I have been often pained by the fruitless search in our law books and the records of our courts, for a clear and satisfactory definition of the phrase citizen of the United States. I find no such definition, no authoritative establishment of the meaning of the phrase, neither by a course of judicial decisions in our courts, nor by the continued and consentaneous action of the different branches of our political government. For aught I see to the contrary, the subject is now as little understood in its details and elements, and the question as open to argument and to speculative criticism, as it was at the beginning of the government. Eighty years of practical enjoyment of citizenship, under the Constitution, have not sufficed to teach us either the exact meaning of the word, or the constituent elements of the thing we prize so highly.

In most instances, within my knowledge, in which the matter of citizenship has been discussed, the argument has not turned upon the existence and the intrinsic qualities of citizenship itself, but upon the claim of some right or privilege as belonging to and inhering in the character of citizen. In this way we are easily led into errors both of fact and principle. We see individuals, who are known to be citizens, in the actual enjoyment of certain rights and privileges, and in the actual exercise of certain powers, social and political, and we, inconsiderately, and without any regard to legal and logical consequences, attribute to those individuals, and to all of their class, the enjoyment of those rights and privileges and the exercise of those powers as incidents to their citizenship, and belonging to them only in their quality of citizens.

In such cases it often happens that the rights enjoyed and the powers exercised have no relation whatever to the quality of citizen, and might be as perfectly enjoyed and exercised by known aliens. For instance, General Bernard, a distinguished soldier and devoted citizen of France, for a long time filled the office of general of engineers in the service of the United States, all the time avowing his French allegiance, and, in fact, closing his relations with the United States by resigning his commission and returning to the service of his own native country. This, and all such instances, (and they are many,) go to prove that in this country the legal capacity to hold office is not confined to citizens, and therefore that the fact of holding any office for which citizenship is not specially prescribed by law as a qualification, is no proof that the incumbent is an American citizen.

Again, with regard to the right of suffrage, that is, the right to choose officers of government, there is a very common error to the effect that the right to vote for public officers is one of the constituent elements of American citizenship, the leading faculty indeed of the citizen, the test at once of his legal right, and the sufficient proof of his membership of the body politic. No error can be greater than this, and few more injurious to the right understanding of our constitutions and the actual working of our political governments. It is not only not in law or in fact, in principle or in practice, but the reverse is conspicuously true; for I make bold to affirm that, viewing the nation as a whole, or viewing the States separately, there is no district in the nation in which a majority of the known and recognized citizens are not excluded by law from the right of suffrage. Besides those who are excluded specially on account of some personal defect, such as paupers, idiots, lunatics, and men convicted of infamous crimes, and, in some States, soldiers, all females and all minor males are also excluded. And these, in every community, make the majority; and yet, I think, no one will venture to deny that women and children, and lunatics, and even convicted felons, may be citizens of the United States.

Our code (unlike the codes of France, and perhaps some other nations) makes no provision for loss or legal deprivation of citizenship. Once a citizen (whether natus or datus, as Sir Edward Coke expresses it,) always a citizen, unless changed by the volition and act of the individual. Neither infamy nor madness nor crime can take away from the subject the quality of citizen. And our laws do, in express terms, declare women and children to be citizens. See, for one instance, the act of Congress of February 10, 1855, 10 Stat., 604.

The Constitution of the United States does not declare who are and who are not citizens, nor does it attempt to describe the constituent elements of citizenship. It leaves that quality where it found it, resting upon the fact of home-birth, and upon the laws of the several States. Even in the important matter of electing members of Congress, it does no more than provide that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States; and the electors in the several States shall have the qualifications requisite for the electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature." Here the word citizen is not mentioned, and it is a legal fact, known of course to all lawyers and publicists, that the constitutions of several of the States, in specifying the qualifications of electors, do altogether omit and exclude the word citizen and citizenship. I will refer, in proof, to but three instances:

1. The constitution of Massachusetts, adopted in 1779-'80, in article 4 of section 3, chapter 1, provides as follows: "Every male person (being twenty-one years of age, and resident of a particular town in this Commonwealth for the space of one year next preceding) having a freehold estate within the same town of the annual income of three pounds, or any estate of the value of sixty pounds, shall have the right to vote in the choice of representative or representatives for said town."

2. The constitution of North Carolina, adopted in 1776, after a bill of rights, and after reciting that "whereas allegiance and protection are, in their nature, reciprocal, and the one should of right be refused when the other is withdrawn," declares, in section eight, "that all freemen at the age of twenty-one years, who have been inhabitants of any one county within the State twelve months immediately preceding the day of any election, and shall have paid public taxes, shall be entitled to vote for members of the House of Commons for the county in which he resides."

3. The constitution of Illinois, adopted in 1818, in article two, section twenty-seven, declares that "in all elections all white male inhabitants above the age of twenty-one years, having resided in the State six months next preceding the election, shall enjoy the right of an elector; but no person shall be entitled to vote except in the county or district in which he shall actually reside at the time of the election."

These three constitutions belong to States widely separated in geographical position, varying greatly from each other in habits, manners, and pursuits, having different climates, soils, productions, and domestic institutions; and yet not one of the three has made citizenship a necessary qualification for a voter; all three of them exclude all females, but only one of them (Illinois) has excluded the black man from the right of suffrage. And it is historically true that the practice has conformed to the theory of those constitutions, respectively; for, without regard to citizenship, the colored man has not voted in Illinois, and freemen of all colors have voted in North Carolina and Massachusetts.

From all this it is manifest that American citizenship does not necessarily depend upon nor coexist with the legal capacity to hold office and the right of suffrage, either or both of them. The Constitution of the United States, as I have said, does not define citizenship; neither does it declare who may vote, nor who may hold office, except in regard to a few of the highest national functionaries. And the several States, as far as I know, in exercising that power, act independently and without any controlling authority over them, and hence it follows that there is no limit to their power in that particular but their own prudence and discretion; and therefore we are not surprised to find that these faculties of voting and holding office are not uniform in the different States, but are made to depend upon a variety of facts, purely discretionary, such as age, sex, race, color, property, residence in a particular place, and length of residence there.

On this point, then, I conclude that no person in the United States did ever exercise the right of suffrage in virtue of the naked, unassisted fact of citizenship. In every instance the right depends upon some additional fact and cumulative qualification, which may as perfectly exist without as with citizenship.

I am aware that some of our most learned lawyers and able writers have allowed themselves to speak upon this subject in loose and indeterminate language. They speak of "all the rights, privileges, and immunities guaranteed by the Constitution to the citizen" without telling us what they are. They speak of a man's citizenship as defective and imperfect, because he is supposed not to have "all the civil rights," (all the jura civilia), as expressed by one of my predecessors,) without telling what particular rights they are nor what relation they have, if any, with citizenship. And they suggest, without affirming, that there may be different grades of citizenship of higher and lower degree in point of legal virtue and efficacy; one grade "in the sense of the Constitution," and another inferior grade made by a State and not recognized by the Constitution.

In my opinion the Constitution uses the word citizen only to express the political quality of the individual in his relations to the nation; to declare that he is a member of the body politic, and bound to it by the reciprocal obligation of allegiance on the one side and protection on the other. And I have no knowledge of any other kind of political citizenship, higher or lower, statal or national; or of any other sense in which the word has been used in the Constitution, or can be used properly in the laws of the United States. The phrase "a citizen of the United States," without addition or qualification, means neither more nor less than a member of the nation. And all such are, politically and legally, equal—the child in the cradle and its father in the Senate are equally citizens of the United States. And it needs no argument to prove that every citizen of a State is, necessarily, a citizen of the United States; and to me it is equally clear that every citizen of the United States is a citizen of the particular State in which he is domiciled.

And as to voting and holding office, as that privilege is not essential to citizenship, so the deprivation of it by law is not a deprivation of citizenship. No more so in the case of a negro than in case of a white woman or child.

In common speech the word citizen, with more or less of truth and pertinency, has a variety of meanings: Sometimes it is used in contrast with soldier; sometimes with farmer or countryman; sometimes with alien or foreigner. Speaking of a particular man we ask, is he a citizen or a soldier? meaning, is he engaged in civil or military pursuits? Is he a citizen or a countryman? meaning, does he live in the city or in the country? Is he a citizen or an alien? meaning, is he a member of our body-politic or of some other nation. The first two predicates relate only to the pursuits and to the place of abode of the person. The last is always and wholly political, and concerns only the political and governmental relations of the individual. And it is only in this last sense, the political, that the word is ever used in the Constitution and statutes of the United States.

We have natural-born citizens, (Constitution, article 2, sec. 5,) not made by law or otherwise, but born. And this class is the large majority; in fact, the mass of our citizens; for all others are exceptions specially provided for by law. As they became citizens in the natural way, by birth, so they remain citizens during their natural lives, unless, by their own voluntary act, they expatriate themselves and become citizens or subjects of another nation. For we have no law (as the French have) to decitizenize a citizen, who has become such either by the natural process of birth, or by the legal process of adoption. And in this connection the Constitution says not one word, and furnishes not one hint, in relation to the color or to the ancestral race of the "natural-born citizen." Whatever may have been said, in the opinion of judges and lawyers, and in State statutes, about negroes, mulattoes, and persons of color, the Constitution is wholly silent upon that subject. The Constitution itself does not make the citizens, (it is, in fact, made by them.) It only intends and recognizes such of them as are natural—home-born—and provides for the naturalization of such of them as were alien—foreign-born—making the latter, as far as nature will allow, like the former.

And I am not aware of any provision in our laws to warrant us in presuming the existence in this country of a class of persons intermediate between citizens and aliens. In England there is such a class, clearly defined by law, and called denizens. "A denizen (says Sir William Blackstone) is an alien born, but who has obtained, ex donatione regis, letters patent to make him an English subject; a high and incommunicable branch of the royal prerogative. A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien and a natural-born subject, and partakes of both of them." (1 Sharswood's Bl. Com., 374.) In this country I know of but one legal authority tending to show the existence of such a class among us. One of my learned predecessors, Mr. Legaré, (4 Opin., 147,) supposes that there may be such a class, and that free colored persons may be ranked in it. Yet, in that same opinion, he declares that a "free man of color, a native of this country, may be admitted to the privileges of a pre-emptioner under the 10th section of the act of the 4th September, 1841." And that act declares that a pre-emptioner must be either a citizen of the United States or a person who had declared his intention to become a citizen, as required by the naturalization laws. Of course, the "colored man" must have been a citizen or he could not have entered the land under that act of Congress. If not a citizen then, by virtue of his native birth, he never could become one by force of law. For our laws extend the privileges of naturalization to such persons only as are "aliens, being free white persons," and he was neither; not alien, because natural-born in the country, and not a free white person, because, though free, confessedly "a man of color."

It occurs to me that the discussion of this great subject of national citizenship has been much embarrassed and obscured by the fact that it is beset with artificial difficulties, extrinsic to its nature, and having little or no relation to its great political and national characteristics. And these difficulties, it seems to me, flow mainly from two sources: First, the existence among us of a large class of people whose physical qualities visibly distinguish them from the mass of our people, and mark a different race, and who, for the most part, are held in bondage. This visible difference and servile connection present difficulties hard to be conquered; for they unavoidably lead to a more complicated system of government, both legislative and administrative, than would be required if all our people were of one race, and undistinguishable by outward signs. And this, without counting the effect upon the opinions, passions, and prejudices of men. Second, the common habit of many of our best and most learned men (the wise aptitude of which I have not been able to perceive) of testing the political status and governmental relation of our people by standards drawn from the laws and history of ancient Greece and Rome, without, as I think, taking sufficient account of the organic differences between their governments and ours.

A very learned writer upon the Politics of Greece (Heeren. Bancroft's translation, p. 105) informs us "that the essential character of the new political form assumed by Greece consisted in the circumstance that the free States which were formed were nothing but cities with their districts; and their constitutions were, consequently, only forms of city governments. This point of view (the learned author warns us) must never be lost sight of."

And the wise observation of the author applies to Italy as well: for the earliest free cities of Italy were but Grecian colonies, which (bringing along with them the higher civilization of their parent country, and its better notions of civil polity) by degrees diffused the light of knowledge, and consequently the love of liberty among the then barbarous people of the Italian peninsula. The Italians, profiting by the good example, founded cities of their own upon the Grecian models, and each new Italian city became an independent State. How long this condition of thing continued I know not; but it continued until Rome outgrew all the neighboring communities, and subdued them all (the Grecian colonies included) under its power. Still the city ruled, and from time to time granted to such as it would (and withheld from such as it would) the title of Roman, and the rights of Roman citizens.

In the process of time, when the dominant power of Rome had expanded over Greece and western Asia, the same civil polity was still continued. As it had been in Italy, so it was in Greece and Asia. In the countries and kingdoms subdued by the Roman arms and transformed into Roman provinces, the same system of government still prevailed.

Rome, by her pro-consuls and other governors, ruled the conquered nations with absolute sway. And the ruling power at Rome, whether republican or imperial, granted, from time to time, to communities and to individuals in the conquered east the title of Roman and the rights of Roman citizens.

A striking example of this Roman naturalization, of its controlling authority as a political law, and of its beneficent power to protect a persecuted citizen, may be found in the case of St. Paul, as it is graphically reported in the Acts of the Apostles. Paul, being at Jerusalem, was in great peril of his life from his own countrymen, the Jews, who accused him of crimes against their own law and faith, and were about to put him to death by mob violence, when he was rescued by the commander of the Roman troops and taken into a fort for security. He first explained, both to the Roman officer and to his own countrymen, who were clamoring against him, his local status and municipal relations, that he was a Jew of Tarsus, a natural-born citizen of no mean city, and that he had been brought up in Jerusalem in the strictest manner according to the law and faith of the fathers. But this did not appease the angry crowd, who were proceeding with great violence to kill him. And then "the chief captain commanded that he be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging," (that is, tortured to enforce confession.) "And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman and uncondemned? When the centurion heard that he went out and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest, for this man is a Roman. Then the chief captain came and said, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said yea, and the chief captain said, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born. Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him. And the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew he was a Roman, and because he had bound him."

Thus Paul, under circumstances of great danger and obloquy, asserted his immunity, as "a Roman uncondemned," from ignominious constraint and cruel punishment, a constraint and punishment against which, as a mere provincial subject of Rome, he had no legal protection. And thus the Roman officers instantly, and with fear, obeyed the law of their country and respected the sacred franchise of the Roman citizen.

Paul, as we know by this record, was a natural-born citizen of Tarsus, and as such, no doubt, had the municipal freedom of that city; but that would not have protected him against the thongs and the lash. How he became a Roman we learn from other historical sources. Caesar granted to the people of Tarsus (for some good service done, probably for taking his side in the war which resulted in the establishment of the empire) the title of Roman, and the freedom of Roman citizens. And, considering the chronology of events, this grant must have been older than Paul; and therefore he truly said I was free born—a free citizen of Rome, and as such exempt by law from degrading punishment.

And this immunity did not fill the measure of his rights as a citizen. As a Roman, it was his right to be tried by the supreme authority, at the capital of the empire. And when he claimed that right, and appealed from the jurisdiction of the provincial governor to the Emperor at Rome, his appeal was instantly allowed, and he was remitted to "Caesar's judgment."

I have dwelt the longer upon this case of Paul, because it is a leading case in Roman jurisprudence in the matter of the "jus Romanum." And in so far as there is any analogy between Roman and American citizenship, it is strictly applicable to us. Its authenticity is unquestionable, and by its lucid statement of facts in minute detail leaves no room to doubt the legal merits of the case. It establishes the great protective rights of the citizen, but, like our own national constitution, it is silent about his powers. It protected Paul against oppression and outrage, but said nothing about his right of suffrage or his eligibility to office.

As far as I know, Mr. Secretary, you and I have no better title to the citizenship which we enjoy than the "accident of birth"—the fact that we happened to be born in the United States. And our Constitution, in speaking of natural-born citizens, uses no affirmative language to make them such, but only recognizes and reaffirms the universal principle, common to all nations, and as old as political society, that the people born in a country do constitute the nation, and, as individuals, are natural members of the body politic.

If this be a true principle, and I do not doubt it, it follows that every person born in the country is, at the moment of birth, prima facie a citizen; and he who would deny it must take upon himself the burden of proving some great disfranchisement strong enough to override the "natural-born" right as recognized by the Constitution in terms the most simple and comprehensive, and without any reference to race or color, or any other accidental circumstance.

That nativity furnishes the rule, both of duty and of right as between the individual and the government, is a historical and political truth so old and so universally accepted that it is needless to prove it by authority. Nevertheless, for the satisfaction of those who may have doubts upon the subject, I note a few books, which, I think, cannot fail to remove all such doubts—Kent's Com., vol. 2, part 4, sec. 25; Bl. Com., book I, ch. 10, p. 365; 7 Co. Rep., Calvin's case; 4 Term Rep., p. 300, Doe vs. Jones; 3 Pet. Rep., p. 246, Shanks vs. Dupont; and see a very learned treatise, attributed to Mr. Dinney, in 2 Am. Law Reporter, 193.

In every civilized country the individual is born to duties and rights—the duty of allegiance and the right to protection; and these are correlative obligations, the one the price of the other, and they constitute the all-sufficient bond of union between the individual and his country; and the country he is born in is, prima facie, his country. In most countries the old law was broadly laid down that this natural connection between the individual and his native country was perpetual; at least, that the tie was indissoluble by the act of the subject alone.—(See Bl. Com. supra; 3 Pet. Rep. supra.)

But that law of the perpetuity of allegiance is now changed, both in Europe and America. In some countries by silent acquiescence, in others by affirmative legislation. In England, while asserting the perpetuity of natural allegiance, the King, for centuries past, has exercised the power to grant letters of denization to foreigners, making them English subjects, and the Parliament has exercised at pleasure the power of naturalization.

In France the whole subject is regulated by written law, which plainly declares who are citizens (citoyens Français) and who are only the French (Français), meaning the whole body of the French people. (See Les Codes Français, titre premier.) And the same law distinctly sets forth by what means citizenship and the quality of French may be lost and regained; and maintains fully the right of expatriation in the subject, and the power of naturalization in the nation to which he goes.

In the United States it is too late now to deny the political rights and obligations conferred and imposed by nativity: for our laws do not pretend to create or enact them, but do assume and recognize them as things known to all men, pre-existent and natural; and therefore things of which the laws must take cognizance. Acting on this guiding thought, our Constitution does no more than grant to Congress (rather than to any other department) the power "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization." And our laws made in pursuance thereof induce the made citizen with all the rights and obligations of the natural citizen. And so strongly was Congress impressed with the great legal fact that the child takes its political status in the nation where it is born, that it was found necessary to pass a law to prevent the alienage of children of our known fellow-citizens who happen to be born in foreign countries. The act of February 19, 1852, 10 Statutes, 694, provides that "persons" (not white persons) "persons heretofore born, or hereafter to be born, out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or shall be, at the time of their birth, citizens of the United States, shall be deemed and considered, and are hereby declared to be, citizens of the United States: Provided, however, That the rights of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers never resided in the United States.

"Etc. 2. And be it further enacted, That any woman who might lawfully be naturalized under the existing laws, married, or who shall be married to a citizen of the United States, shall be deemed and taken to be a citizen."

But for that act, children of our citizens who happen to be born in London, Paris, or Rome, while their parents are there on a private visit of pleasure or business, might be brought to the native home of their parents, only to find that they themselves were aliens in their father's country, incapable of inheriting their father's land, and with no right to demand the protection of their father's Government.

That is the law of birth at the common law of England, clear and unqualified; and now, both in England and America, modified only by statutes, made from time to time, to meet emergencies as they arise.

I have said that, prima facie, every person in this country is born a citizen; and that he who denies it in individual cases assumes the burden of stating the exception to the general rule, and proving the fact which works the disfranchisement. There are but a few exceptions commonly made and urged as disqualifying facts. I lay no stress upon the small and admitted class of the natural-born composed of the children of foreign ministers and the like; and

1. Slavery, and whether or no it is legally possible for a slave to be a citizen. On that point I make no question, because it is not within the scope of your inquiry, and does not concern the person to whom your inquiry relates.

2. Color.—It is strenuously insisted by some that "persons of color," though born in the country, are not capable of being citizens of the United States. As far as the Constitution is concerned, this is a naked assumption; for the Constitution contains not one word upon the subject. The exclusion, if it exist, must then rest upon some fundamental fact which, in the reason and nature of things, is so inconsistent with citizenship that the two cannot coexist in the same person. Is mere color such a fact? Let those who assert it prove that it is so. It has never been so understood nor put into practice in the nation from which we derive our language, laws, and institutions, and our very morals and modes of thought; and, as far as I know, there is not a single nation in Christendom which does not regard the new-found idea with incredulity, if not disgust. What can there be in the mere color of a man (we are speaking now not of race, but of color only) to disqualify him for bearing true and faithful allegiance to his native country, and for demanding the protection of that country? And these two, allegiance and protection, constitute the sum of the duties and rights of a "natural-born citizen of the United States."

3. Race.—There are some who, abandoning the untenable objection of color, still contend that no person descended from negroes of the African race can be a citizen of the United States. Here the object is not color but race only. The individual objected to may be of very long descent from African negroes, and may be as white as leprosy, or as the intermixture with many generations with the Caucasian race can make him; still, if he can be traced back to negroes of the African race, he cannot, they say, be a citizen of the United States! And why not? The Constitution certainly does not forbid it, but is silent about the race as it is about color.

Our nationality was created and our political Government exists by written law, and inasmuch as that law does not exclude persons of that descent, and as its terms are manifestly broad enough to include them, it follows inevitably that such persons, born in the country, must be citizens, unless the fact of African descent be so incompatible with the fact of citizenship that the two cannot exist together. If they can coexist, in nature and reason, then they do coexist in persons of the indicated class, for there is no law to the contrary. I am not able to perceive any antagonism, legal or natural, between the two facts.

But it is said that African negroes are a degraded race, and that all who are tainted with that degradation are forever disqualified for the functions of citizenship. I can hardly comprehend the thought of the absolute incompatibility of degradation and citizenship. I thought that they often went together. But if it be true with regard to negroes, it seems to me more coarsely true with regard to individuals. And if I be right in this, there are many sorrowful examples in the legislation and practice of various States in the Union to show how low the citizen may be degraded by the combined wisdom and justice of his fellow-citizens. In the early legislation of a number of States the most humiliating punishments were denounced against persons guilty of certain crimes and misdemeanors—the lash, the pillory, the cropping of the ears, and the branding of the face with an indelible mark of infamy. And yet a lower depth: in several of the States the common punishment of the crime of vagrancy was sale into bondage of public auction! And yet I have not read that such unfortunate there are yet their natural-born citizenship, nor that their descendants are doomed to perpetual exclusion and degradation.

I am inclined to think that these objections, as to color and ancestral race, arise entirely from a wrong conception of the nature and qualities of citizenship, and from the loose and unguarded phraseology too often used in the discussion of the subject. I have already given, at some length, my own views of the word and the thing—citizenship. And now I will add only a few observations, drawing your attention to certain authorities upon the subject mostly relied upon by those who support these objections.

In my opinion it is a great error, and the fruitful parent of errors, to suppose that citizens belong exclusively to republican forms of government. English subjects are as truly citizens as we are, and we are as truly subjects as they are. Imperial France, following imperial Rome in the text of her laws, calls her people citizens.—Les Codes Français, book 1, tit. 1, ch. 1, and notes. And we have a treaty with the present Emperor of the French, stipulating for reciprocal rights in favor of the citizens of the two countries respectively. 10 Stat., p. 996, art. 7.

It is an error to suppose that citizenship is ever hereditary. It never "passes by descent." It is as original in the child as it was in the parents. It is always either born with him or given to him directly by law.

In discussing this subject it is a misleading error to fail to mark the natural and characteristic distinction between political rights and political powers. The former belong to all citizens alike, and cohere in the very name and nature of citizenship. The latter participation in the powers of government by voting and exercising office, does not belong to all citizens alike, nor to any citizen, merely in virtue of citizenship. His power always depends upon extraneous facts and super-added qualifications; which facts and qualifications are common to both citizens and aliens.

In referring to the authorities commonly adduced by those who deny the citizenship of colored people, I do not pretend to cite them all, but a few only of such as I believe to be most usually relied upon. And I will not trouble you with a detailed examination of the reasoning employed in each case, for I have already stated my own views of the principles and laws involved in the question; and where they conflict with the arguments upon which the contrary opinion is founded, I still adhere to my own.

The first of these authorities of which I will treat is the opinion of my predecessor, Mr. Wirt, upon a case precisely like the present, except that in that case the "free person of color" was a Virginian, and the objections to his competency were founded mainly, if not entirely, upon Virginian law.—(See Opinions of Attorneys General, vol. 1, p. 563, date November 7, 1821.) I have examined this opinion with the greater care, because of the writer's reputation for learning and his known and varied excellencies as a man.

In that case the precise question was, "whether free persons of color are, in Virginia, citizens of the United States, within the intent and meaning of the acts regulating foreign and coasting trade, so as to be qualified to command vessels." And thus Mr. Wirt was in a manner invited to consider the question rather in a state than a national point of view; and hence we ought not to be surprised to find the whole argument for the exclusion based upon local institutions and state laws.

As a general answer to all such arguments, I have this to say: Every citizen of the United States is a component member of the nation, with rights and duties, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, which cannot be destroyed or abridged by the laws of any particular State. The laws of the State, if they conflict with the laws of the nation, are of no force. The Constitution is plain beyond cavil upon this point. Article 6: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties, &c., shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." And from this I assume that every person who is a citizen of the United States, whether by birth or naturalization, holds his great franchise by the laws of the United States, and above the control of any particular State. Citizenship of the United States is an integral thing, incapable of legal existence in fractional parts. Whoever, then, has that franchise is a whole citizen and a citizen of the whole nation, and cannot be (as the argument of my learned predecessor seems to suppose) such citizen in one State and not in another.

I fully concur in the statement that "the description, citizen of the United States, used in the Constitution, has the same meaning that it has in the several acts of Congress passed under the authority of the Constitution." And I freely declare my inability to conceive of any second or subordinate meaning of the phrase as used in all those instruments. It means in them all the simple expression of the political status of the person in connection with the nation—that he is a member of the body politic. And that is all it means, for it does not specify his rights and duties as a citizen, nor in any way refer to such "rights, privileges, and immunities" as he may happen to have, by State laws or otherwise, over and beyond what legally and naturally belong to him in his quality of citizen of the United States. State laws may and do, may must, vest in individuals great privileges, powers, and duties which do not belong to the mass of their fellow-citizens, and in doing so they consult discretion and convenience only. One citizen, who happens to be a judge, may, under proper circumstances, sentence another to be hanged, and a third, who happens to be a governor, may grant a pardon to the condemned man, who, as a citizen, is the undoubted peer of both the judge and the governor.

As to the objection (not in law, but sentiment only) that if a negro can be a citizen of the United States, he might, possibly, become President, the legal inference is true. There would be such a legal possibility. But those who make that objection are not arguing upon the Constitution as it is, but upon what, in their own minds and feelings, they think it ought to be. Moreover, they seem to forget that all limitations upon eligibility to office are less restrictions upon the rights of aspirants than upon the powers of electors. Even the legislature of the State, however unanimous, have no power to send to the Senate of the United States their wisest and best man unless he be thirty years old. And all the people of the nation, speaking with one united voice, cannot, constitutionally, make any man President who happens to be under thirty-five. This is, obviously, a restriction upon the appointing power—that is, in our popular government, a restriction upon the people themselves. As individuals, we may like it or dislike it, and flatter ourselves into the belief that we could make a wiser and better frame of government than our fathers made. Still it is our Constitution, binding upon us and upon every citizen from the moment of birth or naturalization.

The Constitution, I suppose, says what it means, and does not mean what it does not say. It says nothing about "the high characteristic privileges of a citizen of the State" (of Virginia or any other). I do not know what they were, but certainly in Virginia, for the first half of the existence of the commonwealth, the right of suffrage was not one of them. For during that period no man ever voted there because he was a free white adult male citizen. He voted on his freehold, in land; and no candidate, in soliciting his election, appealed to the people or the citizens, but to the freeholders only, for they alone could vote.

I shall not trouble you with any argument touching the list of disabilities declared by the laws of Virginia against free negroes and mulattoes, as stated in the opinion, because they are such only as the Legislature, if so minded, might have denounced as well against a portion of its own acknowledged citizens, whose weakness might necessitate submission.

It is said in the opinion that "the allegiance which the free man of color owes to the State of Virginia is no evidence of citizenship, for he owes it not in consequence of an oath of allegiance." This proposition surprises me; perhaps I do not understand it. I did verily believe that the oath of allegiance was not the cause but the sequence of citizenship, given only as a solemn guarantee for the performance of duties already incurred. But if it be true that the oath of allegiance must either create or precede citizenship, then it follows, of necessity, that there can be no natural-born citizen, as the Constitution affirms, because the child must needs be born before it can take the oath.

The opinion, supported by the arguments upon which I have commented, is in these words:

"Upon the whole, I am of the opinion that free persons of color in Virginia are not citizens of the United States, within the intent and meaning of the acts regulating foreign and coasting trade, so as to be qualified to command vessels."

As an authority this opinion is rebutted by the opinion of Attorney General Legaré, above cited.—(4 Op. A. G., 147, date March 15, 1843.) Under an act of Congress which limited the pre-emption of public land to citizens of the United States and aliens who had declared intention to become citizens, according to the naturalization laws, Mr. Legaré was of opinion that a free colored man was competent to pre-empt the land.

In that same opinion Mr. Legaré makes a just distinction between political and civil rights, which, I believe, is common to most nations. The French code expresses it very plainly, thus: "L'exercice des droits civils est indissolublement lié à la qualité de citoyen, laquelle ne s'acquiert et ne se conserve que conformément à la loi constitutionnelle."

The next authority I shall consider is a decision of the Department of State made in Mr. Marcy's time, November 4, 1855, and evidenced by a letter of that date from Mr. Thomas, Assistant Secretary, to Mr. Rice, of New York. That decision is entitled to great consideration, because upon such political questions the Secretary of State is of high authority. The case was an application for passports to travel in foreign parts, in favor of certain free blacks of some of the northern States, and the time was a few months after the passage of the act of August 18, 1856, (the first act directing the issuing of passports to individuals and restricting the issue to citizens of the United States, though the practice is much older.)

The letter, after stating the case, declares emphatically that "if this be so (i. e., if they be negroes) there can be no doubt that they are not citizens of the United States." If this stood alone there could be no doubt of the opinion of the department at that time. But it does not stand alone. The letter, after citing several authorities, and among them one from Tennessee, to which I will have occasion to refer by name, concludes with this qualifying paragraph, which leaves some doubt as to what was the real practical opinion of Mr. Secretary Marcy at that time. The letter, assuming that a passport is a certificate of citizenship, proceeds to say:

"Such being the construction of the Constitution in regard to free persons of color, it is conceived that they cannot be regarded, when beyond the jurisdiction of this government, as entitled to the full rights of citizens, but the Secretary directs me to say that though the department could not certify that such persons are citizens of the United States, yet, if satisfied of the truth of the facts, it would

* This is the letter alluded to:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, November 4, 1856.

Sir: Your letters of the 29th ultimo and 3d instant, requesting passports for eleven colored persons, have been received, and I am directed by the Secretary to inform you that the papers transmitted by you do not warrant the department in complying with your request. The question whether free negroes are citizens is not now presented for the first time, but has repeatedly arisen in the administration of both the national and State governments. In 1821 a controversy arose as to whether free persons of color were citizens of the United States, within the intent and meaning of the acts of Congress regulating foreign and coasting trade, so as to be qualified to command vessels. and Wirt, Attorney General, decided that they were not, and he moreover held that the words "citizens of the United States" were used in the acts of Congress in the same sense as in the Constitution. This view is also fully sustained in a recent opinion of the present Attorney General.

The judicial decisions of the country are to the same effect.

In Kent's Commentaries, volume 2, page 277, it is stated that in 1833, Chief Justice Daggett of Connecticut, held that free blacks are not "citizens," within the meaning of the term, as used in the Constitution of the United States; and the Supreme Court of Tennessee, in the case of the State against Chairbone, held the same doctrine.

Such being the construction of the Constitution in regard to free persons of color, it is conceived that they cannot be regarded, when beyond the jurisdiction of this Government, as entitled to the full rights of citizens; but the Secretary directs me to say that, though the department could not certify that such persons are citizens of the United States, yet, if satisfied of the truth of the facts, it would give a certificate that they were born in the United States, are free, and that the Government thereof would regard it to be its duty to protect them if wronged by a foreign government while within its jurisdiction for a legal and proper purpose.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. THOMAS, Assistant Secretary.

H. H. RICE, Esq., New York City.

give a certificate that they were born in the United States, are free, and that the government thereof would regard it to be its duty to protect them, if wronged by a foreign government, while within its jurisdiction for a legal and proper purpose."

It seems to me that the certificate proposed to be given would be, in substance and fact, a good passport, for the act of Congress prescribes no form for the passport, and requires no particular fact to appear upon its face. And I confidently believe that there is not a government in Europe which, in view of our laws of citizenship, would question the validity of a passport which declares upon its face that the bearer is a free natural-born inhabitant of the United States.

I turn now to the consideration of the Tennessee case, referred to and relied upon in the letter from the State Department—the State of Tennessee vs. Ambrose, (1 Meigs' R., 331,) adjudged in 1838. Ambrose, being a free negro emancipated in Kentucky, moved to and settled in Tennessee. He was indicted for that crime against the Tennessee statute, made to prevent the ingress of that sort of people. He demurred to the indictment upon the ground that he was a citizen of Kentucky, and as such had a right under the Constitution of the United States (art. 4, sec. 2,) to go to and abide in Tennessee in spite of the State statute. The court in which the indictment was found sustained the demurrer. The public prosecutor took the case up to the supreme court, where the judgment below was reversed, and it was held by the court that Ambrose, under the circumstances, could not be a citizen of Kentucky, and therefore could not claim the protection of the national constitution as against the Tennessee statute.

I must trouble you with a few remarks upon certain passages in the opinion of the court, which constitute the foundation of the judgment, and without which the judgment itself, having no legal basis to rest upon, ought not to have any authority as a precedent.

The court, after stating the case and citing from the Constitution, (art. 4, sec. 2,) "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States," proceeds: "the citizens here spoken of (says the supreme court of Tennessee) are those who are entitled to 'all the privileges and immunities of citizens.' But free negroes, by whatever appellation we call them, were never in any of the States entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens, and consequently were not intended to be included when this word was used in the Constitution.

"In this country," (continues the court,) "under the free government created by the Constitution, whose language we are expounding, the humblest white citizen is entitled to all 'the privileges and immunities' which the most exalted one enjoys. Hence, in speaking of the rights which a citizen of one State shall enjoy in every other State, as applicable to white men, it is very properly said that he should be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in each other State. The meaning of the language is that no privilege enjoyed by, or immunity allowed to, the most favored class of citizens in said State shall be withheld from a citizen of any other State. How can it be said that he enjoys all the privileges, when he is scarcely allowed a single right in common with the mass of the citizens of the State?

"It cannot be; and therefore either the free negro is not a citizen, in the sense of the Constitution, or, if a citizen, he is entitled to 'all the privileges and immunities' of the most favored class of citizens. But this latter consequence will be contended by no one. It must then follow that they are not citizens."

These are the foundations of the judgment in the case of Ambrose, and not only in that but in almost every similar case which I have had occasion to examine. A good deal of what I have already said is strictly applicable here, and in trying to show the fallacy of the reasoning of the court in Tennessee, I must take the risk of some needless repetition.

The leading thought, that indeed which seems to have compelled the judgment against Ambrose, is, in my opinion, a naked assumption, not supported by any word of written law, nor maintainable by logical argument. It is assumed that a person to be a citizen at all must have all the rights, privileges, and immunities which the favored one enjoys; all of the most favored class of citizens. Now, if there be grades and classes of citizens, (which I am not exactly willing to admit,) it would seem that there must be something to distinguish the grades; some difference in the rights, privileges, and immunities of the different classes. And yet the court, while asserting the existence of different classes of citizens, asserts also their equality, by declaring that "the humblest white citizen is entitled to all the 'privileges and immunities' which the most exalted one enjoys." Then what marks the difference of classes? By what line can we separate humility from exaltation, as applied to a citizen?

In fact, it seems to me that the difficulties which surround the subject are artificial, created by the habitual confounding of things different in their nature and origin, and by the persistent abuse of language. No distinction is drawn between the rights and duties as a member of society, without regard to his citizenship. The first are political merely—the last civil and social only. And the words rights, privileges, immunities are abusively used, as if they were synonymous. The word rights is generic, common, embracing whatever may be lawfully claimed. Privileges are special rights belonging to the individual or class, and not to the mass. Immunities are rights of exemption only—freedom from what otherwise would be a duty, obligation, or burden. For instance, the constitution of Tennessee (art. 4, sec. 1) declares that "all free men of color shall be exempt from military duty, in time of peace, and also from paying a free poll-tax." This is immunity.

But whether there be or be not grades and classes of citizens, higher or lower, more or less favored, is wholly immaterial to this question. For the Constitution speaks of citizens only, without any reference to their rank, grade, or class, or to the number or magnitude of their rights, privileges, and immunities—citizens simply, without an adjective to qualify, enlarge, or diminish their rights and capacities. Therefore, if there be grades and classes of citizens, still the lowest individual of the lowest possible class is a citizen, and as such fills the requirement of the Constitution.

If we must have grades and classes of citizens, higher and lower, more and less favored, it seems to me impossible to sustain the proposition of the court that the humblest and most exalted are entitled to equal privileges and immunities. A free, white, natural-born female infant is certainly a citizen, and I suppose it would be but reasonable to place her in the lowest class. And I assume that it would not be deemed unreasonable to call that class the highest, out of which the President must be chosen. If eligibility to the presidency be a privilege in the lawful candidate—a peculiar right belonging to him, and not to the mass of citizens, then there is some difference; she is not entitled to all his privileges.

Those who most indulge in the assumption that to constitute a citizen at all the person must have all the privileges and immunities which any citizen can enjoy, rarely venture to specify precisely what they mean. Generally, I think, the inference is plain that they mean suffrage and eligibility; and, in that connection, I think I have already shown that suffrage and eligibility have no necessary connection with citizenship, and that the one may, and often does, exist without the other.

Again, "immunities" are enjoyed to a very large extent by free negroes in all the slaveholding States. They are generally exempted by law from the onerous duties of jurors in the courts, and militia men in the field; and these are immunities eagerly desired by many white men in all the States.

In another part of that opinion, the court declares that the word "freemen," as used in the constitution of Tennessee, is equivalent to citizen; and yet the court denies that the phrase "freemen of color," used in the same constitution, is a proper designation of citizens! I close my remarks upon that case with an extract from the constitution of Tennessee, (which was originally made in 1795, and amended in 1835,) reminding you only that, until 1790, Tennessee was a part of North Carolina, and subject to its constitution and laws, and hence the peculiar phraseology of the extract:

"Article 4, section 1. Every free white man, of the age of twenty-one years, being a citizen of the United States and a citizen of the county wherein he may offer his vote six months next preceding the day of election, shall be entitled to vote for members of the general assembly and other civil officers for the county or district in which he resides: Provided, That no person shall be disqualified for voting, in any election, on account of color, who is now, by the laws of this State, a competent witness in a court of justice against a white man. All freemen of color shall be exempt from military duty in time of peace, and also from paying a free poll-tax."

Finally, the celebrated case of Scott vs. Sandford, 19 Howard's Reports, 393, is sometimes cited as a direct authority against the capacity of free persons of color to be citizens of the United States. That is an entire mistake. The case, as it stands of record, does not determine, nor purport to determine, that question. It was an ordinary suit for freedom, very common in our jurisprudence, and especially provided for in the legislation of most of the slaveholding States, as it is in Missouri. For convenience the form of the action usually is (and is in this case) trespass, alleging an assault and battery and false imprisonment, so as to enable the defendant, (the master,) if he choose, to make a direct issue upon the freedom or slavery of the plaintiff, which is the real point and object of the action, by pleading, in justification of the alleged trespass, that the plaintiff is a slave—his own or another man's.

Such an action Dred Scott, if entitled to freedom, might have brought in the State court, without any allegation of citizenship, and without being, in fact, a citizen. But it seems he desired to bring his action in the circuit court of the United States in Missouri; and, to enable him to do that, he had to allege citizenship, because Mr. Sandford, the defendant, was a citizen of New York, and unless the plaintiff were a citizen of Missouri (or some other State) the national court had no jurisdiction of the case.

The plaintiff having made his election to sue in the United States court, the defendant might, if he would, have pleaded in bar to the merits of the action, but he exercised his election to plead in abatement to the jurisdiction of the court; thus, that the action, if any, "accrued to the said Dred Scott out of the jurisdiction of this court, and exclusively within the jurisdiction of the courts of the State of Missouri, for that, to wit, the said plaintiff, Dred Scott, is not a citizen of the State of Missouri, as alleged in his declaration, [not because he was not born there, and born free, but] because he is a negro of African descent; his ancestors were of pure African blood, and were brought into this country and sold as negro slaves, and this the said Sandford is ready to verify. Wherefore he prays judgment whether this court can or will take further cognizance of the action aforesaid." To this plea the plaintiff demurred, and the circuit court sustained the demurrer, thereby declaring that the facts stated in the plea, and confessed by the demurrer, did not disqualify Scott for being a citizen of Missouri, and so that the United States circuit court had jurisdiction of the cause.

The circuit court having taken jurisdiction, the defendant had, of course, to plead over to the merits of the action. He did so, and issues were joined, and there was an elaborate trial of the facts, which resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the defendant. And thereupon the plaintiff brought the case up to the Supreme Court by writ of error.

The power of the Supreme Court over the proceedings and judgments of the circuit court is appellate only, and this for the sole purpose of enabling the court above to affirm what has been rightly done, and reverse what has been wrongly done in the court below. If the error of the court below consist in the illegal assumption of power to hear and determine the merits of a case not within its jurisdiction, of course the court above will correct that error, by setting aside whatever may have been done by that usurped authority. And in doing this the court above has no more power than the court below had to hear and determine the merits of the case. And to assume the power to determine a case not within the jurisdiction is as great an error in the court above as in the court below; for it is equally true, in all courts, that the jurisdiction must first be ascertained before proceeding to judgment.

In this particular case the Supreme Court did first examine and consider the plea in abatement, and did adjudge that it was a good plea, sufficient tooust the jurisdiction of the circuit court. And hence it follows, as a necessary legal consequence, that whatever was done in the circuit court after the plea in abatement, and touching the merits of the case, was simply void, because done coram non jndice.

Pleas in abatement were never favorites with the courts in England or America. Lord Coke tells us that they must be "certain to a certain intent, in every particular," and in practice they are always dealt with very strictly. When, therefore, the Supreme Court affirmed the plea in abatement in this case, I assume that it is affirmed, in manner and form, as written, and not otherwise. And this not merely because pleas in abatement are always considered stricti legis, but also, and chiefly, because the decision tends to abridge the valuable rights of persons natural-born in the country, which rights ought not to be impaired, except upon the clearest evidence of fact and law.

Taking the plea, then, strictly as it is written, the persons who are excluded by this judgment from being citizens of Missouri must be negroes, not mulattoes, nor mestizos, nor quadroons. They must be of African descent, not Asiatic, even though they come of the blackest Malays in south-eastern Asia. They must have had ancestors, (yet that may be doubtful, if born in slavery, of putative parents, who were slaves, and being slaves, incapable of contracting matrimony, and therefore every child must needs be a bastard, and so, by the common law, nullius filius, and incapable of ancestors.) His ancestors, if he had any, must have been of pure African blood, not mixed with the tawny Moor of Morocco or the dusky Arab of the desert, both of whom had their origin in Asia. They must have been brought to this country, not come voluntarily; and sold, not kept by the importer for his own use, nor given to his friends.

In this argument I raise no question upon the legal validity of the judgment in Scott vs. Sandford. I only insist that the judgment in that case is limited in law, as it is, in fact, limited on the face of the record, to the plea in abatement; and, consequently, that whatever was said in the long course of the case, as reported, (249 pages,) respecting the legal merits of the case, and respecting any supposed legal disability resulting from the mere fact of color, though entitled to all the respect which is due to the learned and upright sources from which the opinions come, was "decors the record," and of no authority as a judicial decision.

To show that, notwithstanding all that was said upon other subjects, the action of the court was strictly confined to the plea in abatement, I copy the judgment:

"Upon the whole, therefore, it is the judgment of this court that it appears by the record before us that the plaintiff in error is not a citizen of Missouri, in the sense in which that word is used in the Constitution, and that the circuit court of the United States, for that reason, had no jurisdiction in the case, and could give no judgment in it. Its judgment for the defendant must, consequently, be reversed, and a mandate issued, directing the suit to be dismissed for want of jurisdiction."

And now, upon the whole matter, I give it as my opinion that the free man of color, mentioned in your letter, if born in the United States, is a citizen of the United States, and, if otherwise qualified, is competent, according to the acts of Congress, to be master of a vessel engaged in the coasting trade.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,

EDWARD BATES,
Attorney General.

Pay of Colored Soldiers.

Attorney General Bates has decided that persons of color who were free on the 19th of April, 1861, and who were enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States between December, 1862, and 16th of June, 1864, are entitled by law to receive the same amounts of pay, bounty and clothing, as are, by the law existing at the times of their enlistment, allowed to other soldiers in the volunteer forces of the United States of like arms of the service.

THE OPINION IN FULL.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE,
July 14, 1864.

TO THE PRESIDENT:

SIR: By your communication of the 24th ultimo, you require my opinion in writing, as to what amounts of pay, bounty and clothing are allowed by law to persons of color who were free on the 19th day of April, 1861, and who have been enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States between the month of December, 1862, and the 16th of June, 1864.

I suppose that whatever doubt or difficulty may exist with regard to the amount of pay and allowances to which the soldiers to whom you refer are entitled, has mainly its origin in the several provisions of the act of July 17th, 1862, chap. 201, (12 Stat. 599,) relative to the employment and enrollment of persons of African descent in the service of the United States. The 12th section of that statute provides, "That the President be and he is hereby authorized to receive into the service of the United States, for the purpose of constructing intrenchments or performing camp service, or any other labor, or any military or naval service for which they may be found competent, persons of African descent, and such persons shall be enrolled and organized under such regulations, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws, as the President may prescribe." The 15th section of the same statute enacts, that "persons of African descent who under this law shall be employed shall receive ten dollars per month and one ration, three dollars of which monthly pay may be in clothing."

The first and main question, therefore, is, whether the persons of color referred to in your letter, who were mustered into the military service of the United States during the period of time which you indicate, are "persons of African descent," employed under the statute of July 17th, 1862, chap. 201. If they are not thus employed, their compensation should not be governed and is not regulated by the words of the 15th section of the statute, which I have just quoted.

Now I think that it is clear—too clear indeed to admit of doubt or discussion—that those persons of color who have voluntarily enlisted and have been mustered into our military service—who have been organized with appropriate officers into companies, regiments, and brigades of soldiers—and who have done and are doing in the field and in garrison the duty and service of soldiers of the United States—are not persons of African descent employed under the statute to which I have referred.

I do not find, indeed, in the act any authority to enlist persons of African descent into the service, as soldiers. It will be observed that the said twelfth section enumerates two kinds of employment for which those persons are authorized to be enrolled, namely, constructing intrenchments and performing camp service. The section then contains a more general authority—authority to receive such persons into the service for the purpose of performing “any other labor or any military or naval service for which they may be found competent.” I am bound, however, by every rule of law, respecting the construction of statutes, to construe these words of more general authority with reference to the character, nature and quality of the particular kinds of labor and service which are, in the first instance, specifically enumerated in the statute, as those for the performance of which persons of African descent are authorized to be received into the service, and, therefore, I must suppose that Congress, when it conferred authority upon the President to receive into the service of the United States persons of African descent for the purpose of performing any other labor or any military service for which they may be found competent, meant and intended that that other labor and military service should be of the same general character, nature and quality as that which it had previously in the statute, specially named and designated. “Always in statutes,” says Coke, “relation shall be made according to the matter precedent.” Dwaris says: “sometimes words and sections are governed and explained by conjoined words and clauses: nosctur a sociis.” (Dwaris on stat. 604.)

Applying these rules of construction then to the act before me, I am constrained to hold, that if the authority to enlist and muster into the military service soldiers of African descent depended upon this statute, (as it does not,) it would furnish no foundation for such authority. It is manifest that the labor and service that United States soldiers are enlisted to perform, are of an essentially different character from, and are essentially of a higher nature, order and quality than those kinds of labor and service specifically named in the statute, and for the performance of which the President is specially authorized to employ “persons of African descent.” In my late opinion in the case of the claim of Rev. Samuel Harrison for full pay as Chaplain of the 54th Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, I expressed the same view when I said that the act of July 17, 1862, chap. 201, “was not intended either to authorize the employment or to fix the pay of any persons of African descent, except those who might be needed to perform the humbler offices of labor and service for which they might be found competent.”

This view finds confirmation in a statute that received the approval of the President on the same day as the act before me—the statute of July 17, 1862, chap. 195 (12 Stat., 592)—which conferred upon the President the authority to employ as many persons of African descent as he might deem necessary and proper for the suppression of the rebellion, and gave him power to organize and use them in such manner as he might judge best for the public welfare. In these words we may find clear and ample authority for the enlistment of persons of African descent as United States soldiers. It is under this act, if under either of the acts of July 17, 1862, that colored volunteer soldiers may be said to have been employed. There is no need to resort, therefore, to the statute of July 17, 1862, chap. 201, for any authority with respect to their employment, or for any rule in regard to their compensation. Persons of African descent employed as soldiers are not embraced at all, as I have shown, by the act of July 17, 1862, chap. 201, as objects or subjects of legislation; and we must therefore look to some other law for the measure of their compensation.

I find the law for the compensation of the persons of color referred to in your letter to me in the acts of Congress in force at the dates of the enlistments of those persons, respecting the amount of pay and bounty to be given and the amount and kind of clothing to be allowed to soldiers in the volunteer service of the United States. For, after a careful and critical examination, I believe, of every statute enacted since the foundation of the present Government relative to the enlistment of soldiers in the regular and volunteer forces of the United States, I have found no law which at any time prohibited the enlistment of free colored men into either branch of the national military service. The words of Congress descriptive of the recruits competent to enter the service were, in the act of April 30, 1790, “able-bodied men not under five feet six inches in height without shoes, not under the age of eighteen nor above the age of forty-five;” in the act of March 3, 1795, “able-bodied, of at least five feet six inches in height, and not under the age of eighteen nor above the age of forty-six years;” in the act of March 2, 1799, “able-bodied and of a size and age suitable for the public service according to the directions which the President of the United States shall and may establish;” in the act of March 16, 1802, “effective able-bodied citizens of the United States, of at least five feet six inches high and between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years;” in the acts of December 24, 1811, January 11, 1812, January 20, 1813, and January 27, 1814, “effective able-bodied men;” in the act of December 10, 1814, “free, effective able-bodied men between the ages of eighteen and fifty years;” and in the act of January 12, 1847, “able-bodied men.” Some of the foregoing statutes are obsolete; others of them are still in force, and furnished, before the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, the rule by which the validity of the enlistments of persons alleged to have been minors was every day tried in the State and Federal courts. They organized the military establishments of the United States in time of peace and in time of war. They embrace the periods of all the wars, previous to the present, in which the United States has been engaged. By no one of them was or is the enlistment of free colored men into the military service of the United States, whether as volunteers or as regulars, prohibited. After the war of 1812 claims for bounty land preferred by persons of color who had enlisted and served in the army under the statutes of 24th December, 1811, January 11, 1812, and December 10, 1814, were sustained as valid by the then Attorney General, William Wirt. (1 Opin., 603.) And when I turn to more recent statutes—those which authorized the raising and regulate the organization of the whole body of the volunteer forces now in the field, and provided for the maintenance and increase of the regular forces in the service—I discover throughout them no other statutory qualifications for recruits than those established by the earliest legislation to which I have referred.

It is not needed that I should specially recite the words of those acts of Congress that provide for the pay, bounty, and clothing to be allowed to soldiers in the volunteer military service of the United States. It is enough to say that under the statutes relative to those subjects, and in force during the period of time mentioned in your communication, all volunteers competent and qualified to be members of the national forces, are entitled respectively to receive like amounts of pay, bounty, and clothing from the Government.

In view, therefore, of the foregoing considerations, I give it to you unhesitatingly, as my opinion, that the same pay, bounty, and clothing are allowed by law to the persons of color referred to in your communication, and who were enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States between the months of December, 1862, and the 16th of June, 1864, as are by the laws existing at the times of the enlistments of said persons, authorized and provided for, and allowed to, other soldiers in the volunteer forces of the United States of like arms of the service.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD BATES.

Gen. McClellan's Letters.

ON POLITICAL ADMINISTRATION, JULY 7, 1862.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
CAMP NEAR HARRISON'S LANDING, VA., July 7, 1862.

MR. PRESIDENT: You have been fully informed that the rebel army is in the front, with the purpose of overwhelming us by attacking our positions or reducing us by blocking our river communications. I cannot but regard our condition as critical, and I earnestly desire, in view of possible contingencies, to lay before your excellency, for your private consideration, my general views concerning the existing state of the rebellion, although they do not strictly relate to the situation of this army, or strictly come within the scope of my official duties. These views amount to convictions, and are deeply impressed upon my mind and heart. Our cause must never be abandoned; it is the cause of free institutions and self-government. The Constitution and the Union must be preserved, whatever may be the cost in time, treasure, and blood. If secession is successful, other dissolutions are clearly to be seen in the future. Let neither military disaster, political faction, nor foreign war shake your settled purpose to enforce the equal operation of the laws of the United States upon the people of every State.

The time has come when the government must determine upon a civil and military policy, covering the whole ground of our national trouble.

The responsibility of determining, declaring, and supporting such civil and military policy, and of directing the whole course of national affairs in regard to the rebellion, must now be assumed and exercised by you, or our cause will be lost. The Constitution gives you power, even for the present terrible exigency.

This rebellion has assumed the character of a war; as such it should be regarded, and it should be conducted upon the highest principles known to Christian civilization. It should not be a war looking to the subjugation of the people of any State, in any event. It should not be at all a war upon population, but against armed forces and political organizations. Neither confiscation of property, political executions of persons, territorial organization of States, or forcible abolition of slavery, should be contemplated for a moment.

In prosecuting the war, all private property and unarmed persons should be strictly protected, subject only to the necessity of military operations; all private property taken for military use should be paid or receipted for; pillage and waste should be treated as high crimes; all unnecessary trespass sternly prohibited, and offensive demeanor by the military towards citizens promptly rebuked. Military arrests should not be tolerated, except in places where active hostilities exist; and oaths, not required by enactments, constitutionally made, should be neither demanded nor received.

Military government should be confined to the preservation of public order and the protection of political right. Military power should not be allowed to interfere with the relations of servitude, either by supporting or impairing the authority of the master, except for repressing disorder, as in other cases. Slaves, contraband under the act of Congress, seeking military protection, should receive it. The right of the government to appropriate permanently to its own service claims to slave labor should be asserted, and the right of the owner to compensation therefor should be recognized. This principle might be extended, upon grounds of military necessity and security, to all the slaves of a particular State, thus working manumission in such State; and in Missouri, perhaps in Western Virginia also, and possibly even in Maryland, the expediency of such a measure is only a question of time. A system of policy thus constitutional, and pervaded by the influences of Christianity and freedom, would receive the support of almost all truly loyal men, would deeply impress the rebel masses and all foreign nations, and it might be humbly hoped that it would commend itself to the favor of the Almighty.

Unless the principles governing the future conduct of our struggle shall be made known and approved, the effort to obtain requisite forces will be almost hopeless. A declaration of radical views, especially upon slavery, will rapidly disintegrate our present armies. The policy of the government must be supported by concentrations of military power. The national forces should not be dispersed in expeditions, posts of occupation, and numerous armies, but should be mainly collected into masses, and brought to bear upon the armies of the Confederate States. Those armies thoroughly defeated, the political structure which they support would soon cease to exist.

In carrying out any system of policy which you may form, you will require a commander-in-chief of the army, one who possesses your confidence, understands your views, and who is competent to execute your orders, by directing the military forces of the nation to the accomplishment of the objects by you proposed. I do not ask that place for myself. I am willing to serve you in such position as you may assign me, and I will do so as faithfully as ever subordinate served superior.

I may be on the brink of eternity; and as I hope forgiveness from my Maker, I have written this letter with sincerity towards you and from love for my country.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE B. McCLELLAN,
Major General Commanding.

His Excellency A. LINCOLN, President.

IN FAVOR OF THE ELECTION OF GEORGE W. WOODWARD AS GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA.

ORANGE, NEW JERSEY, October 12, 1863.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to an article in the Philadelphia Press, asserting that I had written to the managers of a Democratic meeting at Allentown, disapproving the objects of the meeting, and that if I voted or spoke it would be in favor of Governor Curtin, and I am informed that similar assertions have been made throughout the State.

It has been my earnest endeavor heretofore to avoid participation in party politics. I had determined to adhere to this course, but it is obvious that I cannot longer maintain silence under such misrepresentations. I therefore request you to deny that I have written any such letter, or entertained any such views as those attributed to me in the Philadelphia Press, and I desire to state clearly and distinctly, that having some days ago had a full conversation with Judge Woodward, I find that our views agree, and I regard his election as Governor of Pennsylvania called for by the interests of the nation.

I understand Judge Woodward to be in favor of the prosecution of the war with all the means at the command of the loyal States, until the military power of the rebellion is destroyed. I understand him to be of the opinion that while the war is urged with all possible decision and energy, the policy directing it should be in consonance with the principles of humanity and civilization, working no injury to private rights and property not demanded by military necessity and recognized by military law among civilized nations.

Aud, finally, I understand him to agree with me in the opinion that the sole great objects of this war are the restoration of the unity of the nation, the preservation of the Constitution, and the supremacy of the laws of the country. Believing our opinions entirely agree upon these points, I would, were it in my power, give to Judge Woodward my voice and vote.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

GEORGE B. McCLELLAN.

Hon. CHARLES J. BIDDLE.

Proposed Censures of Officials.

OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

First Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN HOUSE.

July 15—Mr. VALLANDIGHAM offered the following:

Resolved, That the Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress alone the power to "raise and support armies," and to "provide and maintain a navy;" and therefore the President, in the proclamation of May 3, 1861, and the orders and action, by his authority, of the War and Navy Departments, increasing the Army and Navy, and calling for and accepting the services of volunteers for three years without warrant of law, usurped powers belonging solely to Congress, and so violated the Constitution.

2. That the right to declare a blockade as against an independent power, is a belligerent right, depending upon the existence of a state of war; and that as Congress, and Congress alone, have the power to declare or recognize the existence of war, the President has no right to order a blockade until after Congress shall have declared or recognized war with the power whose ports are to be blockaded; and further, that Congress alone can abolish or shut up the ports of entry of any State within the Union; and that, therefore, the President, in blockading and shutting up the ports of entry in certain of the States of the Union, without the authority of Congress, violated the Constitution.

3. That Congress alone have the constitutional power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus; and that until the writ has been suspended by act of Congress, it is the duty of the President, and all other officers, civil and military, to obey it; and that, therefore, the President, in suspending said writ himself, or attempting to authorize certain military officers to suspend it, or to disobey it, or in sustaining them in disobedience to it, violated the Constitution.

4. That by the Constitution "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law;" and that in ordering the drawing from the Treasury of money unappropriated or appropriated for one purpose, and applying the same to purposes for which no appropriations had been made by law, the President violated the Constitution.

5. That the search of certain telegraph offices in the month of May last, by several officers and agents of the Executive, without search warrant upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the things to be seized; and the seizure of papers and despatches in said offices was a violation of the constitutional "right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures;" and that the President, in ordering such search and seizures, violated the Constitution.

6. That neither Congress, nor the President, nor the judiciary, have any constitutional power to abridge the freedom of speech or of the press; and that the suspension of newspaper presses by military authority and force, and the arrest of citizens by military or civil authority, for the expression by speech, or through the press, of opinions upon political subjects, or subjects of any kind, is a violation of the Constitution.

7. That the arrest without civil process of persons not subject to the rules and articles of war, nor in cases arising in the land or naval forces or in the militia, when in actual service, by soldiers in the service of the United States, is a breach of the Constitution, and a violation of the constitutional liberty of the person.

On motion of Mr. LOVEJOY, these resolutions were at once laid upon the table—the House refusing to order the yeas and nays.

OF EX-PRESIDENT BUCHANAN.

Third Session, Thirty-Seventh Congress.

IN SENATE.

1862, Dec. 15.—Mr. DAVIS, of Kentucky, offered this resolution :

Resolved, That after it had become manifest that an insurrection against the United States was about to break out in several of the southern States, James Buchanan, then President, from sympathy with the conspirators and their treasonable project, failed to take necessary and proper measures to prevent it; wherefore he should receive the censure and condemnation of the Senate and the American people.

Dec 16.—Mr. SAULSBURY offered this amendment :

Resolved further, That a copy of the foregoing resolution be served upon the said James Buchanan, and that he be notified that he has liberty to defend himself before the Senate against the charges in said resolution contained, if he shall choose so to do.

Same day.—The resolution and proposed amendment were laid upon the table—yeas 38, nays 3, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Arnold, Browning, Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Field, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harlau, Harris, Henderson, Kennedy, King, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Latham, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wiley, Wilson of Massachusetts, Wilson of Missouri, Wright—38.

OF MESSRS. LONG AND HARRIS.

First Session, Thirty-Eighth Congress.

IN HOUSE.

1864, April 9.—Mr. COLFAX, the Speaker, (Mr. ROLLINS, of New Hampshire, in the Chair,) offered this preamble and resolution :

Whereas on the 8th of April, 1864, when the House of Representatives was in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ALEXANDER LONG, a Representative from the second district of Ohio, declared himself in favor of recognizing the independence and nationality of the so-called confederacy now in arms against the Union; and whereas, the said so-called confederacy, thus sought to be recognized and established on the ruins of a dissolved or destroyed Union, has as its chief officers, civil and military, those who have added perjury to their treason, and who seek to obtain success for their parricidal efforts by the killing of the loyal soldiers of the nation who are seeking to save it from destruction; and whereas the oath required of all members, and taken by the said ALEXANDER LONG on the first day of the present Congress, declares "that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States," thereby declaring that such conduct is regarded as inconsistent with membership in the Congress of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That ALEXANDER LONG, a Representative from the second district of Ohio, having, on the 8th of April, 1864, declared himself in favor of recognizing the independence and nationality of the so-called confederacy now in arms against the Union, and thereby "given aid, countenance, and encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States," is hereby expelled.

Pending which, April 9, Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, offered this resolution :

Whereas Hon. BENJAMIN G. HARRIS, a member of the House of Representatives of the United States from the State of Maryland has on this day used the following language, to wit: "The South asked you to let them go in peace. But, no; you said you would bring them into subjection. That is not done yet, and God Almighty grant that it never may be. I hope that you will never subjugate the South." And whereas such language is treasonable, and is a gross disrespect of this House: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the said BENJAMIN G. HARRIS be expelled from this House.

Which was rejected—yeas 84, nays 58, (two thirds being required :)

Mr. SCHENCK then offered this resolution :

Resolved, That BENJAMIN G. The question recurring upon the resolution offered by Mr. COLFAX—

April 14.—Mr. BROOMALL offered this amendment, as a substitute, which Mr. COLFAX accepted :

Whereas ALEXANDER LONG, a Representative from the second district of Ohio, by his open declarations in the national Capitol and publications in the city of New York, has shown himself to be in favor of a recognition of the so-called confederacy now trying to establish itself upon the ruins of our country, thereby giving aid and comfort to the enemy in that destructive purpose—aid to avowed traitors in creating an illegal government within our borders—comfort to them by assurances of their success, and affirmations of the justice of their cause; and whereas such conduct is at the same time evidence of disloyalty and inconsistent with his oath of office and his duty as a member of this body: Therefore,

Resolved, That the said ALEXANDER LONG, a Representative from the second district of Ohio, be, and he is hereby, declared to be an unworthy member of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Speaker shall read these resolutions to the said ALEXANDER LONG during the session of the House.

Mr. COX moved to lay the preamble and reso-

THE CONSPIRACY OF DISUNION.

In the slaveholding States, a considerable body of men have always been disaffected to the Union. They resisted the adoption of the National Constitution, then sought to refine away the rights and powers of the General Government, and by artful expedients, in a series of years, using the excitements growing out of passing questions, finally perverted the sentiments of large masses of men, and prepared them for revolution.

I had prepared an extensive collection of statements and facts bearing upon this point, but am obliged to omit them for want of space. The well-read in our politics can readily recur to a multitude of proofs. I append a few conspicuous points, the first of which is less well known, being from an unpublished journal by Hon. William Maclay, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, from March 4, 1789, to March 3, 1791, being the First Congress under the Constitution. This journal is the property of his relative, George W. Harris, Esq., of Harrisburg, Pa.

An early Threat of Dissolution.

FROM SENATOR MACLAY'S JOURNAL.

1789, June 9—In relation to the tariff bill, the affair of confining the East India Trade to the citizens of America had been negatived, and a committee had been appointed to report on this business. The report came in with very high duties, amounting to a prohibition. But a new phenomenon had made its appearance in the House (meaning the Senate) since Friday.

Pierce Butler, from South Carolina, had taken his seat, and flamed like a meteor. He arraigned the whole Import law, and then charged (indirectly) the whole Congress with a design of oppressing South Carolina. He cried out for encouraging the Danes and Swedes, and foreigners of every kind, to come and take away our produce. In fact, he was for a navigation act reversed.

June 11—Attended at the hall as usual.

Mr. Izard* and Mr. Butler opposed the whole of the drawbacks in every shape whatever.

Mr. Grayson,† of Virginia, warm on this subject, said we were not ripe for such a thing. We were a new nation, and had no business for any such regulations—a nation sui generis.

Mr. Lee‡ said drawbacks were right, but would be so much abused, he could not think of admitting them.

Mr. Ellsworth§ said New England rum would be exported, instead of West India, to obtain the drawback.

I thought it best to say a few words in reply to each. We were a new nation, it was true, but we were not a new people. We were composed of individuals of like manners, habits, and customs with the European nations. What, therefore, had been found useful among them, came well recommended by experience to us. Drawbacks stand as an example in this point of view to us. If the thing was right in itself, there could be no just argument drawn against the use of a thing from the abuse of it. It would be the duty of Government to guard against abuses, by prudent appointments and watchful attention to officers. That as to changing the kind of rum, I thought the collection bill would provide for this, by limiting the exportation to the original casks and packages. I said a great deal more, but really did not feel much interest either way. But the debates were very lengthy.

Butler flamed away, and THREATENED A DISSOLUTION OF THE UNION, with regard to his State, as sure as God was in the firmament. He scattered his remarks over the whole import bill, calling it partial, oppressive, &c., and solely calculated to oppress South Carolina, and yet ever and anon declaring how clear of local views and how candid and dispassionate he was. He degenerates into mere declamation. His State would live free, or die glorious.

Opinions of Jackson, Benton, Clay, and others.

Referring to the modus operandi of southern disunionists, General JACKSON'S recently-discovered letter to Rev. A. J. Crawford is curious for the keenness of its perceptions, and the accuracy of its prediction:

["Private:"]

WASHINGTON, May 1, 1833.

"MY DEAR SIR: * * * I have had a laborious task here, but nullification is dead; and its actors and courtiers will only be remembered by the people to be execrated for their wicked designs to sever and destroy the only good Government on the globe, and that prosperity and happiness we enjoy over every other portion of the world. Haman's gallows ought to be the fate of all such ambitious men who would involve their country in civil war, and all the evils in its train, that they might reign and ride on its whirlwinds and direct the storm. The free people of these United States have spoken, and consigned these wicked demagogues to their proper doom. Take care of your nullifiers; you have them among you; let them meet with the indignant frowns of every man who loves his country. The tariff, it is now known, was a mere pretext—its burden was on your coarse woollens. By the law of July, 1832, coarse woollen was reduced to five per cent. for the benefit of the South. Mr. Clay's bill takes it up and classes it with woollens at fifty per cent., reduces it gradually down to twenty per cent., and there it is to remain, and Mr. Calhoun and all the nullifiers agree to the principle. The cash duties and home valuation will be equal to fifteen per cent. more, and after the year 1842, you pay on coarse woollens thirty-five per cent. If this is not protection, I cannot understand; therefore the tariff was only the pretext, and disunion and a southern confederacy the real object. The next pretext will be the negro or slavery question.

"My health is not good, but is improving a little. Present me kindly to your lady and family, and believe me to be your friend. I will always be happy to hear from you.

"ANDREW JACKSON."

* Ralph. † William. ‡ Richard Henry, from Virginia. § Oliver, of Connecticut.

BENTON in his Thirty Years' View, says:

The regular inauguration of this slavery agitation dates from the year 1835; but it had commenced two years before, and in this way: nullification and disunion had commenced in 1830, upon complaint against protective tariff. That, being put down in 1833 under President Jackson's proclamation and energetic measures, was immediately substituted by the slavery agitation. Mr. Calhoun, when he went home from Congress in the spring of that year, told his friends that "the South could never be united against the North on the tariff question—that the sugar interest of Louisiana would keep her out—and that the basis of southern union must be shifted to the slave question." Then all the papers in his interest, and especially the one at Washington, published by Mr. Duff Green, dropped tariff agitation, and commenced upon slavery, and in two years had the agitation ripe for inauguration on the slavery question. And in tracing this agitation to its present stage, and to comprehend its rationale, it is not to be forgotten that it is a mere continuation of old tariff disunion, and preferred because more available.—Thirty Years in the Senate, vol. 2.

Mr. CLAY, in a letter to an Alabamian in 1844, (see his private correspondence, p. 490,) said:

From the developments now being made in South Carolina, it is perfectly manifest that a party exists in that State seeking a dissolution of the Union, and for that purpose employ the pretext of the rejection of Mr. Tyler's abominable treaty. South Carolina being surrounded by slave States, would, in the event of a dissolution of the Union, suffer only comparative evils; but it is otherwise with Kentucky. She has the boundary of the Ohio extending four hundred miles on three free States. What would our condition be in the event of the greatest calamity that could befall this nation?

Hon. Nathan Appleton, of Boston, member of Congress in 1832-3, in a letter dated December 15, 1860, said that when in Congress he "made up his mind that Messrs. Calhoun, Hayne, McDuffie, &c., were desirous of a separation of the slave States into a separate confederacy, as more favorable to the security of slave property."

About 1835, some South Carolinians attempted a disunion demonstration. It is thus described by Ex-Governor Francis Thomas of Maryland, in his speech in Baltimore, October 29, 1861:

Full twenty years ago, when occupying my seat in the House of Representatives, I was surprised one morning, after the assembling of the House, to observe that all the members from the slaveholding States were absent. Whilst reflecting on this strange occurrence, I was asked why I was not in attendance on the Southern caucus assembled in the room of the Committee on Claims. I replied that I had received no invitation.

I then proposed to go to the committee room, to see what was being done. When I entered I found that little cock-sparrow, Governor Pickens of South Carolina, addressing the meeting, and strutting about like a rooster around a barn-yard coop, discussing the following resolution, which he was urging on the favorable consideration of the meeting:

"Resolved, That no member of Congress representing a Southern constituency shall again take his seat until a resolution is passed satisfactory to the South on the subject of slavery."

I listened to his language, and when he had finished, I obtained the floor, asking to be permitted to take part in the discussion. I determined at once to kill the treasonable plot hatched by John C. Calhoun, the Cataline of America, by asking questions. I said to Mr. Pickens, "What next do you propose we shall do? Are we to tell the people that Republicanism is a failure? If you are for that I am not. I came here to sustain and uphold American institutions; to defend the rights of the North as well as the South; to secure harmony and good fellowship between all sections of our common country." They dared not answer these questions. The southern temper had not then been gotten up. As my questions were not answered, I moved an adjournment of the caucus sine die. Mr. Craig, of Virginia, seconded the motion, and the company was broken up. We returned to the House, and Mr. Ingersoll, of Pennsylvania, a glorious patriot then as now, introduced a resolution which temporarily calmed the excitement.

Respecting this event, the National Intelli- gencer of November 4, 1861, makes these remarks:

However busy Mr. Pickens may have been in the caucus after it met, the most active man in getting it up and pressing the southern members to go into it was Mr. R. B. Rhett, also a member from South Carolina. The occasion, or alleged cause of this withdrawal from the House into secret deliberation was an anti-slavery speech of Mr. Slade, of Vermont, which Mr. Rhett violently denounced, and proposed to the southern members to leave the House and go into conclave in one of the committee rooms, which they generally did, if not all of them. We are able to state, however, what may not have been known to Governor Thomas, that at least three besides himself of those who did attend it went there with a purpose very different from an intention to consent to any treasonable measure. These three men were Henry A. Wise, Balio Peyton, and Wm. Cost Johnson. Neither of them opened his lips in the caucus; they went to observe; and we can assure Governor Thomas that if Mr. Pickens or Mr. Calhoun (whom he names) or any one else had presented a distinct proposition looking to disunion, or revolt, or secession, he would have witnessed a scene not soon to be forgotten. The three whom we have mentioned were as brave as they were determined. Fortunately, perhaps, the man whom they went particularly to watch remained silent and passive.

EARLY HOPES OF THE REBELS.*

Mr. LAWRENCE M. KEITT, when declaiming in Charleston in November, 1860, in favor of the separate secession of that State, used this language, as reported in the Charleston Mercury:

But we have been threatened. Mr. Amos Kendall wrote a letter, in which he said to Col. Orr, that if the State went out, three hundred thousand volunteers were ready to march against her. I know little about Kendall—and the less the better. He was under General Jackson; but for him the Federal treasury seemed to have a magnetic attraction. Jackson was a pure man, but he had too many around him who made fortunes far transcending their salaries. [Applause.] And this Amos Kendall had the same good fortune under Van Buren. He (Kendall) threatened us on the one side, and John Hickman on the other. John Hickman said, defiantly, that if we went out of the Union, eighteen millions of Northern men would bring us back. Let me tell you, there are a million of Democrats in the North, who, when the Black Republicans attempt to march upon the South, will be found a wall of fire in the front. [Cries of "that's so!" and applause.]

Recently-found letters in Fredericksburg, Virginia, noticed editorially in Harpers' Weekly of May 28, 1864, show that the South calculated confidently upon the defection of large masses of men at the North. The Weekly, commenting on M. F. Maury's letters, says:

How far Maury and his fellow-conspirators were justified in their hopes of seducing New Jersey into the rebellion, may be gathered from the correspondence that took place in the spring of 1861 between Ex-Governor Price, of New Jersey, who was one of the representatives from that State in the Peace Congress, and L. W. Burnet, Esq., of Newark. Mr. Price, in answering the question what ought New Jersey to do, says: "I believe the Southern Confederation permanent. The proceeding has been taken with forethought and deliberation—it is no hurried impulse, but an irrevocable act, based upon the sacred, as was supposed, 'equality of the States'; and in my opinion every slave State will in a short period of time be found united in one confederacy. * * Before that event happens we cannot act, however much we may suffer in our material interests. It is in that contingency, then, that I answer the second part of your question—'what position for New Jersey will best accord with her interests, honor, and the patriotic instincts of her people?' I say emphatically she would go with the South from every wise, prudential, and patriotic reason." Ex-Governor Price proceeds to say that he is confident the States of Pennsylvania and New York will "choose also to cast their lot with the South," and after them the western and northwestern States.

† January 16, 1861—A meeting of Democrats was held in National Hall, Philadelphia, Charles Macalester presiding, at which Robert P. Lane offered this, among other resolutions which were put to the meeting, and declared adopted, and which, read in the light of this revelation, appear to

LETTER OF EX-PRESIDENT FRANKLIN PIERCE TO JEFFERSON DAVIS, OF JANUARY 6, 1860, FOUND IN DAVIS'S MISSISSIPPI HOME, WHEN TAKEN BY OUR TROOPS:

CLARENDON HOTEL, January 6, 1860.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I wrote you an unsatisfactory note a day or two since. I have just had a pleasant interview with Mr. Shepley, whose courage and fidelity are equal to his learning and talents. He says he would rather fight the battle with you as the standard-bearer in 1860 than under the auspices of any other leader. The feeling and judgment of Mr. S. in this relation is, I am confident, rapidly gaining ground in New England. Our people are looking for "the coming man," one who is raised by all the elements of his character above the atmosphere ordinarily breathed by politicians, a man really fitted for this exigency by his ability, courage, broad statesmanship, and patriotism. Colonel Seymour (Thos. H.) arrived here this morning, and expressed his views in this relation in almost the identical language used by Mr. Shepley. It is true that, in the present state of things at Washington and throughout the country, no man can predict what changes two or three months may bring forth. Let me suggest that, in the running debates in Congress, full justice seems to me not to have been done to the Democracy of the North. I do not believe that our friends at the South have any just idea of the state of feeling, hurrying at this moment to the pitch of intense exasperation, between those who respect their political obligations and those who have apparently no impelling power but that which fanatical passion on the subject of domestic slavery imparts. Without discussing the question of right, of abstract power to secede, I have never believed that actual disruption of the Union can occur without blood; and if, through the madness of northern abolitionism, that dire calamity must come, the fighting will not be along Mason's and Dixon's line merely. It [will] be within our own borders, in our own streets, between the two classes of citizens to whom I have referred. Those who defy law and scout constitutional obligations will, if we ever reach the arbitrament of arms, find occupation enough at home. Nothing but the state of Mrs. Pierce's health would induce me to leave the country now, although it is quite likely that my presence at home would be of little service. I have tried to inpress upon our people, especially in New Hampshire and Connecticut, where the only elections are to take place during the coming spring, that while our Union meetings are all in the right direction, and well enough for the present, they will not be worth the paper upon which their resolutions are written unless we can overthrow political abolitionism at the polls and repeal the unconstitutional and obnoxious laws which, in the cause of "personal liberty," have been placed upon our statute-books. I shall look with deep interest, and not without hope, for a decided change in this relation.

Ever and truly, your friend,

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

HON. JEFF. DAVIS,
Washington, D. C.

The Disunion Programme.

From the National Intelligencer of Friday, January 11, 1861:

The subjoined communication, disclosing the designs of those who have undertaken to lead the movement now threatening a permanent dissolution of the Union, comes to us from a distinguished citizen of the South,* who for-disclose a plan of which ex-Governor Price was likely aware:

Twelfth. That in the deliberate judgment of the Democracy of Philadelphia, and, so far as we know it, of Pennsylvania, the dissolution of the Union by the separation of the whole South, a result we shall most sincerely lament, may release this Commonwealth to a large extent from the bonds which now connect her with the Confederacy, except so far as for temporary convenience she chooses to submit to them, and would authorize and require her citizens, through a convention, to be assembled for that purpose, to determine with whom her lot should be cast, whether with the North and the East, whose fanaticism has precipitated this misery upon us, or with our brethren of the South, whose wrongs we feel as our own; or whether Pennsylvania should stand by herself, as a distinct community, ready when occasion offers to bind together the broken Union, and resume her place of loyalty and devotion.

* Understood to be Hon. Lemuel D. Evans, Representative from Texas in the 34th Congress, from March 4, 1855, to March 3, 1857.

merly represented his State with great distinction in the popular branch of Congress. Temporarily sojourning in this city he has become authentically informed of the facts recited in the subjoined letter, which he communicates to us under a sense of duty, and for the accuracy of which he makes himself responsible. Nothing but assurances coming from such an intelligent, reliable source could induce us to accept the authenticity of these startling statements, which so deeply concern not only the welfare but the honor of the Southern people. To them we submit, without present comment, the programme to which they are expected to yield their implicit adhesion, without any scruples of conscience as without any regard to their own safety.

WASHINGTON, January 9, 1861.

I charge that on last Saturday night a caucus was held in this city by the Southern Secession Senators from Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas. It was then and there resolved in effect to assume to themselves the political power of the South, and, to control all political and military operations for the present, they telegraphed to complete the plan of seizing forts, arsenals, and custom-houses, and advised the conventions now in session, and soon to assemble, to pass ordinances for immediate secession; but, in order to thwart any operations of the Government here, the Conventions of the seceding States are to retain their representations in the Senate and the House.

They also advised, ordered, or directed the assembling of a Convention of delegates from the seceding States at Montgomery on the 13th of February. This can of course only be done by the revolutionary Conventions usurping the powers of the people and sending delegates over whom they will lose all control in the establishment of a Provisional Government, which is the plan of the dictators.

This caucus also resolved to take the most effectual means to dragoon the Legislatures of Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, and Virginia into following the seceding States. Maryland is also to be influenced by such appeals to popular passion as have led to the revolutionary steps which promise a conflict with the State and Federal Governments in Texas.

They have possessed themselves of all the avenues of information in the South—the telegraph, the press, and the general control of the postmasters. They also confidently rely upon defections in the army and navy.

The spectacle here presented is startling to contemplate. Senators entrusted with the representative sovereignty of the States, and sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, while yet acting as the privy councillors of the President, and anxiously looked to by their constituents to effect some practical plan of adjustment, deliberately conceive a conspiracy for the overthrow of the Government through the military organizations, the dangerous secret order, the Knights of the Golden Circle, "Committees of Safety," Southern leagues, and other agencies at their command; they have instituted as thorough a military and civil despotism as ever cursed a maddened country.

It is not difficult to foresee the form of government which a convention thus hurriedly thrown together at Montgomery will irrevocably fasten upon a deluded and unsuspecting people. It must essentially be a monarchy founded upon military principles, or it cannot endure. Those who usurp power never fail to forge strong chains.

It may be too late to sound the alarm. Nothing may be able to arrest the action of revolutionary tribunals whose decrees are principally in "secret sessions." But I call upon the people to pause and reflect before they are forced to surrender every principle of liberty, or to fight those who are becoming their masters rather than their servants.

EATON.

As confirming the intelligence furnished by our informant we may cite the following extract from the Washington correspondence of yesterday's Baltimore Sun:

"The leaders of the Southern movement are consulting as to the best mode of consolidating their interests into a Confederacy under a Provisional Government. The plan is to make Senator Hunter, of Virginia, Provisional President, and Jefferson Davis Commander-in-Chief of the army of defence. Mr. Hunter possesses in a more eminent degree the philosophical characteristics of Jefferson than any other statesman now living. Colonel Davis is a graduate of West Point, was distinguished for gallantry at Buena Vista, and served as Secretary of War under President Pierce, and is not second to General Scott in military science or courage."

The Charleston Mercury of January 7, 1860, published the following telegraphic dispatch:

[From our own Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The Senators from those of the Southern States which have called Conventions of their people met in caucus last night, and adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That we recommend to our respective States immediate secession.

"Resolved, That we recommend the holding of a General Convention of the said States, to be held in the city of Montgomery, Alabama, at some period not later than the 15th day of February, 1861."

These resolutions were telegraphed this evening to the Conventions of Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida. A third resolution is also known to have been adopted, but it is of a confidential character, not to be divulged at present. There was a good deal of discussion in the caucus on the question of whether the seceding States ought to continue their delegations in Congress till the 4th of March, to prevent unfriendly legislation, or whether the Representatives of the seceding States should all resign together, and leave a clear field to the Opposition to pass such bills, looking to coercion, as they may see fit. It is believed that the opinion that they should remain prevailed.

CERTAIN "SECRET" DOCUMENTS.

LETTER FROM U. S. SENATOR YULEE OF FLORIDA.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR: On the other side is a copy of resolutions adopted at a consultation of the Senators from the seceding States—in which Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, Mississippi, and Florida were present.

The idea of the meeting was that the States should go out at once, and provide for the early organization of a Confederate Government, not later than 15th February. This time is allowed to enable Louisiana and Texas to participate. It seemed to be the opinion that if we left here, force, loan, and volunteer bills might be passed, which would put Mr. LINCOLN in immediate condition for hostilities; whereas, by remaining in our places until the 4th of March, it is thought we can keep the hands of Mr. Buchanan tied, and disable the Republicans from effecting any legislation which will strengthen the hands of the incoming Administration.

The resolutions will be sent by the delegation to the President of the Convention. I have not been able to find Mr. Mallory this morning. Hawkins* is in Connecticut. I have therefore thought it best to send you this copy of the resolutions.

In haste, yours truly,
JOSEPH FINEGAN, Esq.,

D. L. YULEE.

"Sovereignty Convention," Tallahassee, Fla.

The following were the resolutions referred to:

Resolved 1. That in our opinion each of the Southern States should, as soon as may be, secede from the Union.

Resolved 2. That provision should be made for a convention to organize a Confederacy of the seceding States, the convention to meet not later than the 15th of February, at the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That in view of the hostile legislation that is threatened against the seceding States, and which may be consummated before the 4th of March, we ask instructions whether the delegations are to remain in Congress until that date for the purpose of defeating such legislation.

Resolved, That a committee be and are hereby appointed, consisting of Messrs. Davis, Eldell, and Mallory, to carry out the objects of this meeting.

The preceding letter was found in Fernandina, Florida, upon the capture of that city in the winter of 1862, and the original letter was forwarded to the editor of the N. Y. Times by its correspondent who accompanied the expedition. The Times of Saturday, March 15, 1862, comments on this development:

The telegraphic columns of the Times of January 7, 1861, contained the following Washington despatch: "The Southern Senators last night (Jan. 5) held a conference, and telegraphed to the conventions of their respective States to advise immediate secession." Now, the present letter is a report by Mr. Yulee, who was present at this "consultation," as he calls it, of the resolutions adopted on this occasion, transmitted to the said Finegan, who, by the way, was a member of the "Sovereign Convention" of Florida, then sitting in the town of Tallahassee.

It will thus be seen that this remarkable letter, which breathes throughout the spirit of the conspirator, in reality lets us into one of the most important of the numerous secret conclaves which the plotters of treason then held in the capital. It was then, as it appears, that they determined to strike the blow and precipitate their States into secession. But at the same time they resolved that it would be imprudent for them openly to withdraw, as in that case Congress might pass "force, loan, and volunteer bills, which would put Mr. Lincoln in immediate condition for hostilities." No, no! that would not do. (So much patriotic virtue they half suspected, half feared was left in the country.) On the contrary, "by remaining in our places until the 4th of March it is thought we can keep the hands of Mr. Buchanan tied, and disable the Republicans from effecting any legislation which will strengthen the hands of the incoming Administration." Ah! what a tragic background, full of things unutterable, is there there!

It appears, however, that events were faster than they, and instead of being able to retain their seats up to the 4th of March, they were able to remain but a very few weeks. Mr. Davis withdrew on the 21st of January—just a fortnight after this "consultation." But for the rest, mark how faithfully the programme here drawn up by this knot of traitors in secret session was realized. Each of the named States represented by this cabal did, "as soon as may be, secede from the Union"—the Mississippi Convention passing its ordinance on the heels of the receipt of these resolutions, on the 9th of January; Florida and Alabama on the 11th; Louisiana on the 26th, and Texas on the 1st of February; while the "organization of the Confederate Government" took place at the very time appointed, Davis being inaugurated on the 18th of February.

And here is another plot of the traitors brought to light. These very men, on withdrawing from the Senate, urged that they were doing so in obedience to the command of their respective States. As Mr. Davis put it, in his parting speech, "the ordinance of secession having passed the Convention of his State, he felt obliged to obey the summons, and retire from all official connection with the Federal Government." This letter of Mr. Yulee's clearly reveals that they had themselves pushed their State Conventions to the adoption of the very measure which they had the hardihood to put forward as an imperious "summons" which they could not disobey. It is thus that treason did its work.

Mr. James L. Pugh, member of Congress from Alabama, in a letter, Nov. 24, 1860—"made public his reasons for going to Washington," and taking his seat in Congress. He says: "The sole object of my visit is to promote the cause of secession."

Douglas's Farewell Words.

IN CHICAGO May 1, 1861.

The election of Mr. Lincoln is a mere pretext. The present secession movement is the result of an enormous conspiracy formed more than a year since—formed by leaders in the Southern Confederacy more than twelve months ago. They use the slavery question as a means to aid the accomplishment of their ends. They desired the election of a northern candidate by a sectional vote, in order to show that the two sections cannot live together. When the history of the two years from the Leecompton question down to the Presidential election shall be written, it will be shown that the scheme was deliberately made to break up this Union.

They desired a northern Republican to be elected by a purely northern vote, and then assign this fact as a reason why the sections cannot live together. If the disunion candidate in the late Presidential contest had carried the united South, their scheme was, the northern candidate successful, to seize the Capital last spring, and by a united South and divided North, hold it. Their scheme was defeated, in the defeat of the disunion candidates in several of the southern States.

But this is no time for a detail of causes. The conspiracy is now known; armies have been raised, war is leaved to accomplish it. There are only two sides to the question. Every man must be for the United States or against it. There can be no neutrals in this war; only patriots or traitors! (Cheer after cheer.)

Extract from a note from Col. Trimble to Howard, President of the Board, found among the papers:

"The display of military will be a sorry one as to the strength of the military of the city, and calculated to dishearten our own citizens, and if represented abroad will rather invite and encourage attempts from the north to defy us and pass through the city, whereas without this display many will think that the military force of the city is much stronger than it really is."

Order passed authorizing Col. Trimble to permit steamboats to leave for the eastern shore, to and below the Sassafras river, upon condition that in going and returning they shall not stop at Annapolis.

LETTER FROM GENERAL STEWART TO THE BOARD.

HEADQUARTERS, 1st LIGHT DIVISION, M. V.
BALTIMORE, 2d May, 1861.

TO THE BOARD OF POLICE OF THE CITY OF BALTIMORE:

GENTS: I have the pleasure to lay before you the official dispatches of Governor Letcher, of 24th April, addressed to me, and several other communications between myself and Major General Kenton Harper, commanding at Harper's Ferry, as well as Brigadier General Cooke, commanding at Alexandria, all showing that the 5,000 flint lock guns furnished by the State of Virginia are for the use of Maryland, and are destined to be delivered to my order.

Understanding that 2,000 of these arms, which arrived two or three days ago from Harper's Ferry, consigned to Mr. W. T. Walters, (but contrary to the instructions of Major General Harper, as he assures me in a dispatch,) are now in a warehouse at the corner of Second and Gay streets, occupied by your Board or by the city authorities, I, as the officer of the State of Maryland, commanding here, and agent of the State, to whom the arms were destined, require that the whole be delivered to my order, it being understood that I assume the responsibility of receiving those arms on account of the State of Maryland. You are aware that upon special application to me on behalf of the companies of Calvert county, I agreed to delivery of 120 of those arms."

Extract from the reply of the Commissioners (C. Howard) to General Stewart—same date.

"And you having also understood that a gentleman now in Frederick has full power to control or alter the destination of them, we were unwilling to exercise any authority over them. I showed you a copy of my letter to that gentleman from whom I have yet no reply."

* This was afterwards captured en route for Harper's Ferry.

† The argument of the rebels then was that otherwise Government would suddenly buy up and remove all the supplies.

Letter referred to, Letter Book, page 116, to Senator Mason, dated April 30, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR: Since I had the pleasure of seeing you I have had a good deal of annoyance in consequence of the irregular manner in which some of our townsmen obtained in your State some arms. I do not question their motives, but it was unfortunate that we had no information of what had been done by them until we learned it from you. Can you inform me whether these arms mentioned by General Harper are a part of the original quantity mentioned by you, and of which I understand you have full power to control the destination?

If so, do you desire General Stewart, as a military officer of the State, to receive them for its use?

(Signed)

CHARLES HOWARD.

GOVERNOR LETCHER'S LETTER TO GENERAL STEWART.

DEAR SIR: I called this morning to see you, having received a dispatch from J. S. Barbour, Esq., Alexandria, giving information respecting matters in Baltimore. I have issued an order to General Harper to send 1,000 stand of arms to General Stewart. Stirring times in your State.

Truly,

JOHN LETCHER.

THE ORDINANCE APPROPRIATING $500,000.

This ordinance (No. 22) was approved April 20, 1861, and a portion of the money expended. The following report, made April 4th, 1862, shows how:

The Joint Select Committee, to whom was referred the resolution for the appointment of a committee "to examine and dispose of all papers and vouchers relating to the expenditure of money under the provisions of the ordinance for the preservation of the peace of the city, approved April 20th, 1861, to inquire and report what has become of the articles then purchased and in whose possession they now are, and also what disposition shall be made of the balance of the funds now in the city treasury," have discharged the duty imposed upon them, and submit to the Councils the following report, with accompanying resolutions:

The duties imposed upon the committee were three-fold; first, to examine and dispose of all papers and vouchers relating to the expenditure of money, under the provisions of the ordinance specified; secondly, to inquire and report what has become of the articles thus purchased, and in whose possession they now are; and thirdly, to decide what disposition shall be made of the balance of the funds now in the city treasury.

On the first head, your committee have to report that no "papers" have come under their cognizance, except a note addressed by Col. Henry A. Thompson to the Mayor, which accompanied a statement of his agency, in the capacity of Quartermaster General, in the disbursement of $38,000 of the money in question, and in which he claims to have saved a considerable sum for the city treasury, by efforts to prevent lavish expenditure, and by annulling numerous contracts and returning many articles already delivered.

Your committee regard it as a cause of profound regret, that such an agency had not been earlier in action; but it is due to the gentleman referred to, to say, that he appears to have performed the difficult duties confided to him, with fidelity and discretion. Acknowledgments are also due to Col. Thompson, for a courteous note, tendering any assistance in his power, in the examination of the "vouchers," so far as his agency was concerned; but no occasion has arisen for making use of the proffered aid.

The "vouchers," as placed in the hands of your committee by the city Register, have been carefully examined, and found to be in due form, authenticated by the parties having control of affairs at that period, and accounting for the expenditure of the gross amount reported, allowing for interest and the balance on hand. Each account has been singly inspected, the objects of expenditure have been classified, and present the results stated below.

Having served the purposes of your committee in affording the points of information it was necessary to obtain, no other disposition of them seems necessary than to restore them to the custody of the city officer, in whose charge they properly belong, as vouchers for disbursements under the ordinance.

The labors of your committee under the second head of instructions, "to inquire and report what has become of the articles then purchased, and in whose possession they now are," have resulted in the following classified summary of expenditures for different objects:

SUMMARY.

Arms, ammunition, &c.....	$24,174 74

The articles purchased include fixtures for cannon, carbines, rifles, muskets, pistols, swords, spears, drums, canister and grape shot, bullets, lead, powder, cartridges, caps and other kindred materials, the precise number and quantities of which, as nearly as could be ascertained, are given in the two following schedules:

The expenditures for "Blankets, Mattresses, &c.," were $2,825 57; and the articles purchased were as follows:

BLANKETS, MATTRESSES, ETC.

- 445 blankets, from Whitely, Stone & Co., and others.
540 straps, do do do do
425 flannel shirts, from John H. Rea, and others.
225 mattresses, from C. S. Frey & Co., A. Pollack, and others.
240 pillows, do do do do
400 caps, from White & Rosenberg.
1 desk, 10 chairs, 1 washstand, by S. S. Lee.

For "Surgical Instruments, &c.," the expenditures, considering the formidable nature of the preparations, offensive and defensive, were moderate, reaching only the sum of £99 37; and of this amount a portion is for damage to instruments returned. The list of these articles is here given :

SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS AND MEDICINES.

- 3 tourniquets, ordered by Dr. Robinson.
6 terna culums, do do
2 bullet forceps, do do
Sponges, Wadding, Muslin, Spirits, &c.

Having thus ascertained what articles had been purchased, your committee proceeded "to inquire what has become of them, and in whose possession they now are." This investigation was attended with considerable difficulty, owing to the various changes which have taken place since the period of the purchases: the abdication of the former Police Commissioners, the absence of the Mayor, the substitution of the United States Provost Marshal and his police force, and the seizure, by way of precaution, by the United States, of arms and military materials stored in different parts of the city. Many articles and equipments have undoubtedly disappeared; but your committee are enabled to present the following list of arms and other articles, furnished by Mr. James L. McPhail, Deputy Provost Marshal, which will account for a portion of the articles. Identification of those purchased was, of course, impossible:

- 38 rifles, found at the old City Hall.
 3 single barrel shot guns.
 1 double do do
 27 single do do
 2 double do do
 2 rifles.
 49 Hall's carbines.
 7 U. S. do
 2 Hall's rifles.
 1 percussion musket.
 1 ship gun.
 2 six pound field pieces, mounted.
 2 field pieces, complete.
 20 rounds of canister shot.
 26 do grape do
 1½ tons do do
 1 lot of 24 and 32 lb. shot.
 10 mattresses.
 33 pillows.
 37 blankets.
 6 sheets.
 25 pillow-cases.
 5 beds.
 9 doz. boxes Hicks's hat caps.

Of the above articles, (your committee are informed by Mr. McPhail,) the beds and bedding were distributed to the several stallion-houses, they having been found, on taking possession, to be generally destitute of such articles, and those found being in bad repair and very dirty. Besides the bedding thus appropriated, a considerable number of mattresses, some tin ware, &c., were transferred, with the approbation of the mayor, to the warden of the jail, for use at that institution, where they were much needed. A portion of the arms purchased by the parties who had control of affairs during the period of the "crisis" are still at Fort McHenry, where they were placed after seizure by the United States authorities. According to a return made to the mayor on the 12th of August, 1861, by Samuel W. Bowen, Captain of the Middle District Station, the following arms, taken by order of General Butler from the corner of Gay and Second streets, were then at Fort McHenry:

- 1 box accoutrements.
115 boxes pikes.

Of the above, issues to a considerable extent have been made by the United States authorities, and some have been returned to Denson & Buck. Your committee are obliged to Deputy Marshal McPail for the following statement of arms at present to be found at Fort McHenry:

- 60 boxes of pikes, containing 60 each.
300 carbines.
5 guns, 7 carriages, 13 rammers.

It is understood that these articles, and such others belonging to the city as may be found in possession, will be restored by the Government of the United States as soon as their restoration is deemed compatible with a proper regard for its own protection.

A few words more are necessary, in explanation of the remaining items of the summary.

Of the amount charged to the "Marine and Navy," the principal portion is made up of sums expended on the hire and alterations of steam-tugs Hercules and Tiger, charges for use of the Potomac, George's Creek, and other steamers, amounting to $1,500 53, and $55 paid for the purchase of a boat and cars. The balance was principally expended in the payment of officers and "harbor police." The only articles known to be remaining from this department are a boat and oars, said to have been left in the care of John Henderson, Esq., and two spy-glasses in the possession of the city register.

In the charges for "carpenters, bricklayers, materials," &c., is included a considerable sum, say about $1,250, for reconstruction of the bridge at Canton. Considerable quantities of bricks and lumber are also included, mostly used in the erection or repair of a "powder-house," of the locality of which your Committee are not informed. Wherever situated, if not retained in use, the second-hand materials may be of some value to the city.

The payments for "rations," "pay-rolls," "horse and hack hire," "hauling," "armorics," "advertising," &c., amounting in the aggregate to $23,106 35, represent so much outlay, from which the city reaps no tangible return.

The amounts of $8,518 19 for "workmen on parks," and $2,000 for "indigent widows, sewing-women," &c., were withdrawn from the fund by special resolutions of the council and expended for the benevolent purposes designated.

The charge for "interest," is a necessary result of the loan, authorized by the ordinance of April 20th, 1861.

The remaining item is the "cash in bank"—and this brings your committee to the third and last clause of the duties assigned them, viz: "to decide what disposition shall be made of the remaining funds now in the City Treasury."

On this point your committee are unanimously of the opinion that the balance should be returned, pro rata, to the several banks from which the whole amount was borrowed, thus canceling so much of the city's indebtedness, and stopping the payment or accumulation of interest.

In accordance with which statements and views, your committee respectfully recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

S. F. STREETER,
WM. SULLIVAN,
JOHN DUKEHART,
First Branch.
JOSEPH ROBB,
WM. SWINDELL,
ASA HIGGINS,
Second Branch.

Resolved, By both Branches of the City Council of Baltimore, that the papers and vouchers relating to expenditures under Ordinance No. 22, approved April 20th, 1861, be restored to the custody of the City Register.

Resolved furthermore, That the Mayor be and is hereby authorized and requested to have collected, at the earliest possible moment, the arms and military materials belonging to the city, in the custody of the U. S. Marshal, or elsewhere, and, reserving such as, in his judgment, may be necessary for public use, to dispose of the balance, and place the proceeds in the City Treasury.

Resolved, By the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, that the Register be and he is hereby authorized and directed to repay, pro rata, to the several banks, the balance remaining on hand from the sum borrowed of them, under authority of ordinance No. 22, approved April 20th, 1861, "to appropriate $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the defence of the city against any danger that may arise out of the present crisis."

These resolutions passed both branches.

PROTEST AGAINST THE WAR, AND RECOGNITION OF REBEL INDEPENDENCE DEMANDED.

IN HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

May 9—Mr. WALLIS, from the Committee on Federal Relations, reported these resolutions:

Whereas, in the judgment of the General Assembly of Maryland, the war now waged by the Government of the United States upon the people of the Confederate States is unconstitutional in its origin, purposes and conduct; repugnant to civilization and sound policy; subversive of the free principles upon which the Federal Union was founded, and certain to result in the hopeless and bloody overthrow of our existing institutions; and whereas, the people of Maryland, while recognizing the obligations of their State, as a member of the Union, to submit in good faith to the exercise of all the legal and constitutional powers of the General Government, and join as one man in fighting its authorized battles, do reverence nevertheless, the great American principle of self-government and sympathize deeply with their Southern brethren in the noble and manly determination to uphold and defend the same; and whereas not merely on their own account, turn away from their own soil the calamities of civil war, but for the blessed sake of humanity, and to arrest the wanton shedding of fraternal blood, in a miserable contest which can bring nothing with it but sorrow, shame, and desolation, the people of Maryland are enlisted with their whole hearts, upon the side of reconciliation and peace; Now therefore, it is hereby Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the State of Maryland owes it to her own self-respect and her respect for the Constitution, not less than to her deepest and most honorable sympathies, to register this, her solemn protest, against the war which the Federal Government has declared upon the Confederate States of the South, and our sister and neighbor Virginia, and to announce her resolute determination to have no part or lot, directly or indirectly, in its prosecution.

2. That the State of Maryland earnestly and anxiously desires the restoration of peace between the belligerent sections of the country; and the President, authorities and people of the Confederate States having over and over officially and unofficially, declared, that they seek only peace and self-defence and to be let alone, and that they are willing to throw down the sword, the instant the sword now drawn against them shall be sheathed, the Senators and Delegates of Maryland do fervently beseech and implore the President of the United States, to accept the olive branch which is thus held out to him, and in the name of God and of humanity, to cease this unholy and most wretched and unprofitable strife, at least until the assembling of the Congress at Washington shall have given time for the prevalence of cooler and better counsels.

3. That the State of Maryland desires the peaceful and immediate recognition of the independence of the Confederate States, and hereby gives her cordial consent thereunto as a member of the Union—entertaining the profound conviction that the willing return of the Southern people to their former federal relations is a thing beyond hope, and that the attempt to coerce them will only add slaughter and hate to impossibility.

4. That the present military occupation of Maryland, being for purposes which, in the opinion of this Legislature, are in flagrant violation of the Constitution, the General Assembly of the State, in the name of her people, does hereby protest against the same, against the arbitrary restrictions and illegalities with which it is attended, calling upon all good citizens at the same time, in the most earnest and authoritative manner, to abstain from all violent and unlawful interference of every sort, with the troops in transit through our territory or quartered among us, and patiently and peacefully to leave to time and reason the ultimate and certain re-establishment and vindication of the right.

5. That under existing circumstances it is inexpedient to call a Sovereign Convention of the State at this time, or to take any measures for the immediate organization for arming of the militia.

6. That when the Legislature adjourn, it adjourn to meet at —, on the — day of — next.

The report was accepted, and 10,000 copies ordered to be printed—yeas 50, nays 11.

May 10—They were considered, and Mr. McCleary moved these as a substitute:

Whereas, it is right and proper, that the General Assembly of Maryland should give such expression of opinion as will call forth the united voice of the whole people of Maryland in the present emergency; and the border States, with the exception of Maryland, have already, through their legislatures or conventions, defined their positions and course of action: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, The present position of Maryland in the Union, is that of strict neutrality, and will remain unchanged so long as Washington continues the seat of Government: Provided, the United States affords ample protection to slaves and other property.

Resolved, That when the seat of the United States Government ceases to be at Washington, and a division of the country takes place, the people shall have the free right and choice of deciding which section they will be attached to, by a free expression and decision of the popular will at the ballot-box.

Whereas, the report is in circulation and has found its way into the public prints impugning the loyalty of the Hon. Williamson R. W. Cobb, member elect of this House from the State of Alabama, and tending to show that he is in complicity with and giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the Confederate States, and therefore unfit to be a representative of a loyal constituency; Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker to inquire into such reports, and to collect and report upon the testimony bearing upon the loyalty or disloyalty of said member, and report the same to this House, with such recommendation as to its further action in the premises as to said committee shall seem proper; and that Mr. Cobb be notified by the committee, if practicable, of the sitting of the committee, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. Cobb has since come within our lines, and, at the present session, November 17, was expelled from the House.

WASHINGTON, February 22, 1864.

The Convention was called to order by the Chairman of the Executive Committee, Senator Morgan, of New York, who said:

MEMBERS OF THE CONVENTION: It is a little more than eight years since it was resolved to form a national party to be conducted upon the principles and policy which had been established and maintained by those illustrious statesmen, George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. A Convention was held in Philadelphia, under the shade of the trees that surrounded the Hall of Independence, and candidates—Freemont and Dayton—were chosen to uphold our cause. But the State of Pennsylvania gave its electoral vote to James Buchanan, and the election of 1856 was lost.

Nothing daunted by defeat, it was immediately determined "to fight on this line," not only "all summer," [applause], but four summers and four winters; and in 1860 the party banner was again unfurled, with the names of Abraham Lincoln [applause] and Hannibal Hamlin inscribed thereon. This time it was successful, but with success came rebellion; and with rebellion of course came war; and war, terrible civil war, has continued with varying success up to nearly the period when it is necessary, under our Constitution, to prepare for another Presidential election. It is for this highly responsible purpose that you are to-day assembled. It is not my duty nor my purpose to indicate any general course of action for this Convention; but I trust I may be permitted to say that, in view of the dread realities of the past, and of what is passing at this moment—and of the fact that the bones of our soldiers lie bleaching in every State of this Union, and with the knowledge of the further fact that this has all been caused by slavery, the party of which you, gentlemen, are the delegated and honored representatives, will fall short of accomplishing its great mission, unless, among its other resolves, it shall declare for such an amendment of the Constitution as will positively prohibit African slavery in the United States. [Prolonged applause, followed by three cheers.]

In behalf of the National Committee, I now propose for temporary President of this Convention, Robert J. Breckinridge, of Kentucky [applause], and appoint Governor Randall, of Wisconsin, and Governor King, of New York, as a committee to conduct the President pro tem. to the chair.

On being introduced, Dr. Breckinridge, who was most enthusiastically received, said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: You cannot be more sensible than I am that the part which I have to perform here to-day is merely a matter of form; and acting upon the principles of my whole life, I was inclined, when the suggestion was made to me from various quarters, that it was in the mind of many members of the Convention to confer this distinction upon me, to earnestly decline to accept; because I have never sought honors—I have never sought distinction. I have been a working man, and nothing else. But certain considerations led me to change my mind. [Applause.]

There is a class of men in the country, far too small for the good of the country—those men who merely by their example, by their pen, by their voice, try to do good—and all the more in perilous times—without regard to the reward that may come. It was given to many such men to understand, by the distinction conferred upon one of the humblest of their class, that they were men whom the country would cherish, and who would not be forgotten.

There is another motive relative to yourselves and to the country at large. It is good for you, it is good for every nation and every people, every State and every party, to cherish all generous impulses, to follow all noble instincts; and there are none more noble, none more generous than to purge yourselves of all self-seekers and betrayers, and to confer official distinctions, if it be only in mere forms, upon those who are worthy to be trusted, and ask nothing more. [Applause.]

Now according to my convictions of propriety, having said this, I should say nothing more. [Cries of "go on."] But it has been intimated to me from many quarters, and in a way which I cannot disregard, that I should disappoint the wishes of my friends, and perhaps the just expectations of the Convention, if I did not say briefly, and yet as precisely as I could, say somewhat upon the great matters which have brought us here. Therefore, in a very few words, and as plainly as I can, I will endeavor to draw your attention to one and another of these great matters in which we are all engaged.

In the first place, nothing can be more plain than the fact that you are here as the representatives of a great nation—voluntary representatives chosen without forms of law, but as really representing the feelings, the principles, and if you choose, the prejudices of the American people, as if it were written in laws and already passed by votes—for the man that you will nominate here for the Presidency of the United States, and ruler of a great people in a great crisis, is just as certain I suppose to become that ruler as anything under heaven is certain before it is done. [Prolonged cheering.] And, moreover, you will allow me to say, though perhaps it is hardly strictly proper that I should—but as far as I know your opinions I suppose it is just as certain now before you utter it whose name you will utter, and which will be responded to from one end to the other of this nation, as it will be after it has been uttered and recorded by your secretary. Does any man doubt that this Convention intends to say that Abraham Lincoln shall be the nominee? [Great applause.] What I wish, however, to call your attention to is the grandeur of the mission upon which you are met, and therefore the dignity and solemnity, earnestness and conscientiousness with which, representing one of the greatest and certainly one of the first people of the world, you ought to discharge these duties. [Applause.]

Now, besides the nomination of President and Vice President, in regard to which second office I will say nothing, because I know there is more or less difference of opinion among you; but besides these nominations, you have other most solemn duties to perform. You have to organize this party thoroughly throughout the United States. You have to put it in whatever form your wisdom will suggest that will unite all your wisdom, energy, and determination to gain the victory which I have already said was in our power. More than that, you have to lay down with clearness and precision the principles on which you intend to carry on this great political contest and prosecute the war which is underneath them, and the glory of the country which lies before us if we succeed. Plainly—not in a double sense—briefly—not in a treatise—with the dignity and precision of a great people to utter, by its representatives, the political principles by which they intend to live, and for the sake of which they are willing to die. So that all men everywhere may understand precisely what we mean, and lay that furrow so deeply and clearly that while every man who is worthy to associate with freemen may see it and pass over it, every man who is unworthy may be either unable to pass it or may be driven far from us. We want none but those who are like us to be with us. [Applause.]

Now, among these principles, if you will allow me to say it, the first and most distinct is, that we do not intend to permit this nation to be destroyed. [Applause.] We are a nation—no doubt a peculiar one—a nation formed of States, and no nation except as these States form it. And these States are no States except as they are States in that nation. They had no more right to repudiate the nation than the nation has to repudiate them. None of them had even the shadow of a right to do this, and God helping us, we will vindicate that truth so that it shall never be disputed any more in this world. [Applause.] It is a fearful alternative that is set before us, but there are great compensations for it. Those of you who have attended to this subject know, or ought to know, that from the foundation of the present Government, before and since our present Constitution was formed, there have always been parties that had no faith in our Government. The men that formed it were doubtful of its success, and the men that opposed its formation did not desire its success. And I am bold to say, without detaining you on this subject, that with all the outcry about our violations of the Constitution, this present living generation and this present Union party are more thoroughly devoted to that Constitution than any generation that has ever lived under it. [Applause.] While I say that, and solemnly believe it, and believe it is capable of the strongest proof, I may also add that it is a great error which is being propagated in our land, to say that our national life depends merely upon the sustaining of that Constitution. Our fathers made it, and we love it.

But if it suits us to change it we can do so. [Applause.] And when it suits us to change it we will change it. [Applause.] If it were torn into ten thousand pieces the nation would be as much a nation as it was before the Constitution was made—a nation always that declared its independence as a united people, and lived as a united people until now—a nation independent of all particular institutions under which they lived, and capable of modelling them precisely as their interests require. We ought to have it distinctly understood by friends and enemies that while we love that instrument we will maintain it, and will, with undoubted certainty, put to death friend or foe who undertakes to trample it under foot; yet, beyond a doubt, we will reserve the right to alter it to suit ourselves from time to time and from generation to generation. [Applause.] One more idea on that subject. We have incorporated in that instrument the right of revolution, which gives us, without a doubt, the right to change it. It never existed before the American States, and by the right to change there is no need of rebellion, insurrection, or civil war, except upon a denial of the fundamental principles of all free governments—that the major part must rule; and there is no other method of carrying on society, except that the will of the majority shall be the will of the whole—or that the will of the minority shall be the will of the whole. So that, in one word, to deny the principles I have tried to state is to make a dogmatic assertion that the only form of government that is possible with perfect liberty and acknowledged by God is a pure and absolute despotism. The principles therefore which I am trying to state before you are principles which, if they be not true, freedom is impossible, and no government but one of pure force can exist or ought to endure among men. But the idea which I wished to carry out, as the remedy for these troubles and sorrows, is this: Dreadful as they are, this fearful truth runs through the whole history of mankind, that whatever else may be done to give stability to authority, whatever else may be done to give perpetuity to institutions—however wise, however glorious, practicable, and just may be the philosophy of it—it has been found that the only enduring, the only imperishable cement of all free institutions, has been the blood of traitors. No Government has ever been built upon imperishable foundations which foundations were not laid in the blood of traitors. It is a fearful truth, but we had as well avow it at once, and every blow you strike, and every rebel you kill, every battle you win, dreadful as it is to do it, you are adding, it may be, a year—it may be ten years—it may be a century—it may be ten centuries to the life of the Government and the freedom of your children. [Great applause.]

Now, passing over that idea—passing over many other things which it would be right for me to say, did the time serve and were this the occasion, let me add—you are a Union party. [Applause.] Your origin has been referred to as having occurred eight years ago. In one sense it is true. But you are far older than that. I see before me not only primitive Republicans and primitive Abolitionists, but I see also primitive Democrats and primitive Whigs—primitive Americans, and, if you will allow me to say so, I myself am here, who all my life have been in a party to myself. [Laughter and applause.] As a Union party I will follow you to the ends of the earth and to the gates of death. [Applause.] But as an Abolition party—as a Republican party—as a Whig party—as a Democratic party—as an American party, I will not follow you one foot. [Applause.] But it is true of the mass of the American people, however you may divide and scatter while this war lasts, while the country is in peril, while you call yourselves as you do in the call of the Convention, the Union party—you are for the preservation of the Union and the destruction of this rebellion, root and branch. And in my judgment, one of the greatest errors that has been committed by our administration of the Federal Government, the Chief of which we are about to nominate for another term of office—one of the errors has been to believe that we have succeeded where we have not succeeded, and to act in a manner which is precisely as if we had succeeded. You will not, you cannot, succeed until you have utterly broken up the military power of these people. [Applause.]

I will not detain you upon these incidental points, one of which has been made prominent in the remarks of the excellent Chairman of the National Committee. I do not know that I would be willing to go so far as probably he would. But I cordially agree with him in this—I think, considering what has been done about slavery, taking the thing as it now stands, overlooking altogether, either in the way of condemnation or in the way of approval, any act that has brought us to the point where we are, but believing in my conscience and with all my heart, that what has brought us where we are in the matter of slavery, is the original sin and folly of treason and secession, because you remember that the Chicago Convention itself was understood to say, and I believe it virtually did explicitly say, that they would not touch slavery in the States, leaving it therefore altogether out of the question how we came where we are, on that particular point, we are prepared to go further than the original Republicans themselves were prepared to go. We are prepared to demand not only that the whole territory of the United States shall not be made slave, but that the General Government of the American people shall do one of two things—and it appears to me that there is nothing else that can be done—either to use the whole power of the Government, both the war power and the peace power, to put slavery as nearly as possible back where it was—for, although that would be a fearful state of society, it is better than anarchy; or else to use the whole power of the Government, both of war and peace, and all the practical power that the people of the United States will give them to exterminate and extinguish slavery. [Prolonged applause.]

I have no hesitation in saying for myself that if I were a pro-slavery man, if I believed this institution was an ordinance of God, and was given to man, I would unhesitatingly join those who demand that the Government should be put back where it was. But I am not a pro-slavery man—I never was; I unite myself with those who believe it is contrary to the brightest interests of all men and of all governments, contrary to the spirit of the Christian religion, and incompatible with the natural rights of man. I join myself with those who say away with it forever; [applause]; and I fervently pray God that the day may come when throughout the whole land every man may be as free as you are, and as capable of enjoying regulated liberty. [Prolonged applause.]

I will not detain you any longer. One single word you will allow me to say in behalf of the State from which I come, one of the smallest of the thousands of Israel. We know very well that our eleven votes are of no consequence in the Presidential election. We know very well that in our present unhappy condition, it is by no means certain that we are here to-day representing the party that will cast the majority of the votes in that unhappy State. I know very well that the sentiments which I am uttering will cause me great odium in the State in which I was born, which I love, where the bones of two generations of my ancestors and some of my children are, and where very soon I shall lay my own. I know very well that my colleagues will incur odium if they indorse what I say, and they, too, know it. But we have put our faces toward the way in which we intend to go, and we will go in it to the end. If we are to perish, we will perish in that way. All I have to say to you is, help us if you can; if you cannot, believe in your hearts that we have died like men.

Rev. J. McKendree Reiley, of the Methodist Episcopal church, offered a prayer, when those States which are represented in Congress were called for lists of delegates.

At the evening session of Tuesday the permanent organization was made, with Hon. WILLIAM DENNISON, of Ohio, as President. On taking the chair, he said:

I thank you for the honor you have conferred upon me, and while I shall bring to the discharge of the duties of the chair little experience in parliamentary rules, it will be my pleasure, as my duty, to spare no effort in contributing, to the extent of my ability, to the facilitating of the business of the Convention, and securing such results from your deliberations as will meet the loyal expectations of the country.

We meet here as representatives of the true friends of the Government and of impartial liberty—of that large portion of the people who gratefully appreciate the unmatched blessings which flow from our institutions well administered, and reject any form of human enslavement, not in punishment of crime, as no less incompatible with the rights of humanity than with the genius and the peaceful workings of republican government. [Prolonged applause.]

In no sense do we meet as members or representatives of either of the old political parties which bound the people, or as the champions of any principle or doctrine peculiar to either. The extraordinary condition of the country since the outbreak of the rebellion has, from necessity, taken from the issues of these parties their practical significance, and compelled the formation of substantially new political organizations; hence the origin of the Union party—if party it can be called—of which this Convention is for the purpose of its assembling, the accredited representative, and the only test of membership in which is an unreserved, unconditional loyalty to the Government and the Union.

Let me congratulate you upon the favorable auspices of your meeting. While the deepest anxiety is felt by all patriotic men as to the result of the war unjustifiably forced upon the Government by the bad, ambitious men and their deceived followers in the rebellious States, and the country is filled with distress and mourning over the loss of so many of our brave men who have fallen in battle, or died in hospitals from wounds received in defence of the constitutional authorities of the Government, we yet have, in what has been accomplished towards the suppression of the rebellion and the extinguishment of its cause—in the heroic deeds of our noble armies and gallant navy—in the renewal of the patriotism of the country that almost seemed to be paralyzed under the influence of our national prosperity—in the unprecedented generosity of the people, awakened by the wants of the Government and the necessities of its defenders—much, very much of the highest felicitation, and for which the country is grateful to Almighty God. [Applause.]

And may I not add to these causes of congratulation the formation of the political organization of which this Convention is a representative, which has so nobly sustained the Government in its efforts to put down the rebellion, and to the complete accomplishment of which its energies are consecrated; the patriotic harmony that has marked our assembling and will characterize all our proceedings, and presenting that harmony which will display itself in the unanimous nomination for the Presidency of the United States of the wise and good man whose unselfish devotion to the country, in the administration of the Government, has secured to him not only the admiration, but the warmest affection of every friend of constitutional liberty? [Applause.]

I need not remind you of the very grave responsibilities that devolve upon you as members of this convention. The loyal people of the country have authorized and expect you to renew on their part the pledge of their faith to support the Government, in the most vigorous prosecution of the war, to the complete suppression of the rebellion, regardless of the time or the resources required to that end, and they equally expect and call upon you to declare the cause and the support of the rebellion to be slavery, which, as well for its treasonable offences against the Government as for its incompatibility with the rights of humanity and the permanent peace of the country, must, with the termination of the war, and as much speedier as possible, be made to cease forever in every State and Territory of the Union. But I must not refer to other subjects of interest that will challenge your attention.

Let me repeat my thanks for your expressions of confidence in me in having selected me to preside over your deliberations. [Applause.]

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CREDENTIALS.

Mr. PRESTON KING, of New York, submitted the report of the majority committee; which was substantially as follows:

1st. That the delegations from the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Oregon, California, Kansas, and West Virginia were all regular, and are admitted to seats with all the rights and privileges of members, except one district of Pennsylvania, which had elected four instead of two members. The committee admit the two who received the largest number of votes as delegates, and the other two as alternates.

2d. That there being two delegations from the State of Missouri, claiming seats, the committee recommend that those styling themselves the Radical Union Delegation be awarded the seats. [Applause and cheering.]

3d. That the delegates from Virginia, Tennessee, Louisiana, and Arkansas be admitted to all the privileges of the floor, except that of voting.

4th. That the delegations from the Territories and the District of Columbia be admitted to seats and all the privileges except that of voting.

5th. That the persons presenting themselves as delegates from the State of South Carolina are not entitled to the rights of delegates on the floor.

Mr. W. E. STEVENSON, of Virginia, and Mr. HIRAM SMITH, of Oregon, made a minority report, and recommended that the delegates from the States of Virginia, Louisiana, Arkansas, Kansas, Tennessee, and Florida, and from all the Territories, be admitted, with the right to vote.

Mr. A. H. INSLEY, of Kansas, made a report arguing that, especially in the cases of the Territories of Nebraska, Colorado, and Nevada, the delegates be admitted with the right to vote.

That part of the report of the majority relating to the uncontested seats was then adopted.

Mr. KING, of New York, offered a substitute covering three points in report of the majority:

1st. He proposed to admit both of the Missouri delegations, and that where they agree they cast the vote to which the State is entitled; where they disagree, the vote of the State shall not be cast.

2d. He proposed to give all the delegates admitted all the rights and privileges of delegates, without exception; but that the District of Columbia and the Territories should have but two votes each, and that no State, District, or Territory should cast more votes than it has delegates present in the Convention.

A division of the question was called,

When Mr. KING's amendment relative to Missouri was lost; and the report of the committee, on that point, was adopted, by States, and as follows:

The portions of the majority report, as thus amended, were then agreed to.

The Delegates from Nebraska, Colorado, and Nevada, were then admitted with the right to vote.

And the balance of the report—admitting the Delegates from Virginia and Florida, without the right to vote, rejecting the Delegates from South Carolina, and admitting the Delegates from the remaining Territories without the right to vote, was adopted.

This PLATFORM was then adopted unanimously, as reported by Mr. Raymond, of New York, Chairman of the Committee:

1. Resolved, That it is the highest duty of every American citizen to maintain against all their enemies the integrity of the Union and the paramount authority of the Constitution and laws of the United States; and that, laying aside all differences of political opinion, we pledge ourselves, as Union men, animated by a common sentiment and aiming at a common object, to do everything in our power to aid the Government in quelling by force of arms the Rebellion now raging against its authority, and in bringing to the punishment due to their crimes the Rebels and traitors arrayed against it. [Prolonged applause.]

2. Resolved, That we approve the determination of the Government of the United States not to compromise with Rebels, or to offer them any terms of peace, except such as may be based upon an unconditional surrender of their hostility and a return to their just allegiance to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and that we call upon the Government to maintain this position, and to prosecute the war with the utmost possible vigor to the complete suppression of the Rebellion, in full reliance upon the self-sacrificing patriotism, the heroic valor and the undying devotion of the American people to their country and its free institutions. [Applause.]

3. Resolved, That as Slavery was the cause, and now constitutes the strength, of this Rebellion, and as it must be, always and everywhere, hostile to the principles of Republican Government, justice and the national safety demand its utter and complete extirpation from the soil of the Republic [applause];—and that while we uphold and maintain the acts and proclamations by which the Government, in its own defence, has aimed a death-blow at this gigantic evil, we are in favor, furthermore, of such an amendment to the Constitution, to be made by the people in conformity with its provisions, as shall terminate and forever prohibit the existence of Slavery within the limits or the jurisdiction of the United States. [Tremendous applause, the delegates rising and waving their hats.]

4. Resolved, That the thanks of the American people are due to the soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy [applause], who have periled their lives in defence of their country and in vindication of the honor of its flag; that the nation owes to them some permanent recognition of their patriotism and their valor, and ample and permanent provision for those of their survivors who have received disabling and honorable wounds in the service of the country; and that the memories of these who have fallen in its defence shall be held in grateful and everlasting remembrance. [Loud applause and cheers.]

5. Resolved, That we approve and applaud the practical wisdom, the unselfish patriotism and the unswerving fidelity to the Constitution and the principles of American liberty, with which Abraham Lincoln has discharged, under circumstances of unparalleled difficulty, the great duties and responsibilities of the Presidential office; that we approve and endorse, as demanded by the emergency and essential to the preservation of the nation and as within the provisions of the Constitution, the measures and acts which he has adopted to defend the nation against its open and secret foes; that we approve, especially, the Proclamation of Emancipation, and the employment as Union soldiers of men heretofore held in slavery, [applause]; and that we have full confidence in his determination to carry these and all other Constitutional measures essential to the salvation of the country into full and complete effect. [Vociferous applause.]

6. Resolved, That we deem it essential to the general welfare that harmony should prevail in the National Councils, and we regard as worthy of public confidence and official trust those only who cordially endorse the principles proclaimed in these resolutions, and which should characterize the administration of the Government. [Applause.]

7. Resolved, That the Government owes to all men employed in its armics, without regard to distinction of color, the full protection of the laws of war, [applause], and that any violation of these laws, or of the usages of civilized nations in time of war, by the Rebels now in arms, should be made the subject of prompt and full redress. [Prolonged applause.]

8. Resolved, That foreign immigration, which in the past has added so much to the wealth, development of resources and increase of power to this nation, the asylum of the oppressed of all nations, should be fostered and encouraged by a liberal and just policy. [Applause.]

9. Resolved, That we are in favor of a speedy construction of the Railroad to the Pacific coast. [Applause.]

10. Resolved, That the National faith, pledged for the redemption of the public debt, must be kept inviolate, and that for this purpose we recommend economy and rigid responsibility in the public expenditures, and a vigorous and just system of taxation; and that it is the duty of every loyal State to sustain the credit and promote the use of the National currency. [Applause.]

11. Resolved, That we approve the position taken by the Government that the people of the United States can never regard with indifference the attempt of any European Power to overthrow by force or to supplant by fraud the institutions of any Republican Government on the Western Continent—[prolonged applause]—and that they will view with extreme jealousy, as menacing to the peace and independence of their own country, the efforts of any such power to obtain new footholds for Monarchical Governments, sustained by foreign military force, in near proximity to the United States. [Long-continued applause.]

RE-NOMINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

The vote was taken by States, when all were found to have voted for Mr. LINCOLN, except Missouri—for General Grant.

Before the announcement of the result, Mr. HUME, of Missouri, moved that the nomination of ABRAHAM LINCOLN be declared unanimous. His delegation had been instructed to vote for General Grant, but he was now in favor of declaring the nomination already made to be unanimous.

The motion was agreed to amidst a furor of applause.

The president then announced the result, stating that ABRAHAM LINCOLN, of Illinois, was the unanimous choice of the Union National party of the country for the next Presidency.

The PRESIDENT. Andrew Johnson, having received a majority of all the votes, is declared duly nominated as the candidate of the National Union Party for Vice President of the United States.

On motion of Mr. TREMAIN, of New York, the nomination of Andrew Johnson was declared unanimous.

After the transaction of some routine business, the convention adjourned.

THE PRESIDENT'S RECEPTION OF THE NOMINATION.

Thursday, June 9—The committee to ratify the nominees called upon the President, when the following proceedings took place:

Governor Dennison, president of the convention and chairman of said committee, addressed the President as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: The National Union Convention, which closed its sittings at Baltimore yesterday, appointed a committee consisting of one from each State, with myself as its chairman, to inform you of your unanimous nomination by that convention for election to the office of President of the United States. That committee, I have the honor of now informing you, is present. On its behalf, I have also the honor of presenting you with a copy of the resolutions or platform which were adopted by that convention, as expressive of its sense, and of the sense of the loyal people of the country which it represents; of the principles and the policy that should characterize the administration of the Government in the present condition of the country. I need not say to you, sir, that the convention, in thus unanimously nominating you for re-election, but gave utterance to the almost universal voice of the loyal people of the country. To doubt of your triumphant election would be little short of abandoning the hope of the final suppression of the rebellion, and the restoration of the authority of the Government over the insurgent States.

Neither the convention nor those represented by that body entertained any doubt as to the final result. Under your administration, sustained by that loyal people and by our noble army and gallant navy, neither did the convention nor do this committee doubt the speedy suppression of this most wicked and unprovoked rebellion. [A copy of the resolutions were here handed to the President.]

I should add, Mr. President, it would be the pleasure of the committee to communicate to you, within a few days, through one of its most accomplished members, Mr. CURTIS, of New York, by letter, more at length the circumstances under which you have been placed in nomination for the Presidency.

THE PRESIDENT'S RESPONSE.

The President, taking the resolutions from his pocket where he had placed them, and unfolding the same, said :

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE : I will neither conceal my gratification nor restrain the expression of my gratitude that the Union people through their convention, in the continued effort to save and advance the nation, have deemed me not unworthy to remain in my present position.

I know no reason to doubt that I shall accept the nomination tendered ; and yet, perhaps, I should not declare definitely before reading and considering what is called the platform.

I will say now, however, I approve the declaration in favor of so amending the Constitution as to prohibit slavery throughout the nation. When the people in revolt, with a hundred days of explicit notice that they could within those days resume their allegiance without the overthrow of their institutions, and that they could not resume it afterwards, elected to stand out, such amendment to the Constitution as is now proposed became a fitting and necessary conclusion to the final success of the Union cause. Such alone can meet and cover all cavils. Now, the unconditional Union men, North and South, perceive its importance, and embrace it. In the joint names of Liberty and Union, let us labor to give it legal form and practical effect.

Same day, a delegation of the National Union League called upon the President, to congratulate him upon his re-nomination, to whom he made this reply :

GENTLEMEN : I can only say in response to the kind remarks of your chairman, as I suppose, that I am very grateful for the renewed confidence which has been accorded to me both by the Convention and by the National League. I am not insensible at all to the personal compliment there is in this, and yet I do not allow myself to believe that any but a small portion of it is to be appropriated as a personal compliment. That really the Convention and the Union League assembled with a higher view—that of taking care of the interests of the country for the present and the great future—and that the part I am entitled to appropriate as a compliment is only that part which I may lay hold of as being the opinion of the Convention and of the League, that I am not entirely unworthy to be entrusted with the place which I have occupied for the last three years. But I do not allow myself to suppose that either the Convention or the League have concluded to decide that I am either the greatest or best man in America, but rather they have concluded that it is not best to swap horses while crossing the river, and have further concluded that I am not so poor a horse that they might not make a botch of it in trying to swap. [Laughter and applause.]

To a delegation from Ohio he said :

SPEECH OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

GENTLEMEN : I am very much obliged to you for this compliment. I have just been saying, and as I have just said it, I will repeat it : The hardest of all speeches which I have to answer is a serenade. I never know what to say on such occasions. I suppose that you have done me this kindness in connection with the action of the Baltimore Convention, which has recently taken place, and with which, of course, I am very well satisfied. [Laughter and applause.] What we want still more than Baltimore Conventions or Presidential elections is success under General Grant. [Cries of "Good," and applause.] I propose that you constantly bear in mind that the support you owe to the brave officers and soldiers in the field is of the very first importance, and we should therefore bend all our energies to that point. Now, without detaining you any longer, I propose that you help me to close up what I am now saying with three rousing cheers for General Grant and the officers and soldiers under his command.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S ACCEPTANCE.

NEW YORK, June 14, 1864.

Hon. ABRAHAM LINCOLN :

SIR : The National Union Convention, which assembled in Baltimore on June 7, 1864, has instructed us to inform you that you were nominated with enthusiastic unanimity for the Presidency of the United States for four years from the 4th of March next.

The resolutions of the Convention, which we have already had the honor of placing in your hands, are a full and clear statement of the principles which inspired its action, and which, as we believe, the great body of Union men in the country heartily approve. Whether those resolutions express the national gratitude to our soldiers and sailors ; or the national scorn of compromise with Rebels, and consequent dishonor ; or the patriotic duty of union and success, whether they approve the Proclamation of Emancipation, the constitutional amendment, the employment of former slaves as Union soldiers, or the solemn obligation of the Government promptly to redress the wrongs of every soldier of the Union, of whatever color or race ; whether they declare the inviolability of the pledged faith of the nation, or offer the national hospitality to the oppressed of every land, or urge the union by railroad of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans ; whether they recommend public economy and vigorous taxation, or assert the fixed popular opposition to the establishment by armed force of foreign monarchies in the immediate neighborhood of the United States, or declare that those only are worthy of official trust who approve unreservedly the views and policy indicated in the resolutions—they were equally hailed with the heartiness of profound conviction.

Believing with you, sir, that this is the people's war for the maintenance of a Government which you have justly described as "of the people, by the people, for the people," we are very sure that you will be glad to know, not only from the resolutions themselves, but from the singular harmony and enthusiasm with which they were adopted, how warm is the popular welcome of every measure in the prosecution of the war, which is as vigorous, unmistakable, and unflinching as the national purpose itself. No right, for instance, is so precious and sacred to the American heart as that of personal liberty. Its violation is regarded with just, instant, and universal jealousy. Yet in this hour of peril every faithful citizen concedes that, for the sake of national existence and the common welfare, individual liberty may, as the Constitution provides in the case of rebellion, be sometimes summarily constrained, asking only with painful anxiety that in every instance, and to the least detail, that absolutely necessary power shall not be hastily or unwisely exercised.

We believe, sir, that the honest will of the Union men of the country was never more truly represented than in this Convention. Their purpose we believe to be the overthrow of armed rebels in the field, and the security of permanent peace and union by liberty and justice under the Constitution. That these results are to be achieved amid cruel perplexities, they are fully aware. That they are to be reached only by cordial unanimity of counsel, is undeniable. That good men may sometimes differ as to the means and the time, they know. That in the conduct of all human affairs the highest duty is to determine, in the angry conflict of passion, how much good may be practically accomplished, is their sincere persuasion. They have watched your official course, therefore, with unflinching attention ; and amid the bitter taunts of eager friends and the fierce denunciation of enemies, now moving too fast for some, now too slowly for others, they have seen you throughout this tremendous contest patient, sagacious, faithful, just ; leaning upon the heart of the great mass of the people, and satisfied to be moved by its mighty pulsations.

It is for this reason that, long before the Convention met, the popular instinct had plainly indicated you as its candidate ; and the Convention, therefore, merely recorded the popular will. Your character and career prove your unswerving fidelity to the cardinal principles of American Liberty and of the American Constitution. In the name of that Liberty and Constitution, sir, we earnestly request your acceptance of this nomination. Reverently commending our beloved country, and you, its Chief Magistrate, with all its brave sons who, on sea and land, are faithfully defending the good old American cause of equal rights, to the blessing of Almighty God,

We are, sir, very respectfully, your friends and fellow-citizens,

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, June 27, 1864.

Hon. WILLIAM DENNISON and others, a Committee of the National Union Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 14th instant formally notifying me that I have been nominated by the convention you represent for the Presidency of the United States for four years from the 4th of March next, has been received. The nomination is gratefully accepted, as the resolutions of the convention, called the platform, are heartily approved.

While the resolution in regard to the supplanting of republican government upon the western continent is fully concurred in, there might be misunderstanding were I not to say that the position of the Government in relation to the action of France in Mexico as assumed through the State department and indorsed by the Convention, among the measures and acts of the Executive, will be faithfully maintained so long as the state of facts shall leave that position pertinent and applicable.

I am especially gratified that the soldier and the seaman were not forgotten by the Convention, as they forever must and will be remembered by the grateful country for whose salvation they devote their lives.

Thanking you for the kind and complimentary terms in which you have communicated the nomination and other proceedings of the convention, I subscribe myself,

Your obedient servant,

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

HON. ANDREW JOHNSON'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 2, 1864.

Hon. WM. DENNISON, Chairman, and others, Committee of the National Union Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your communication of the 9th ult., informing me of my nomination for the Vice Presidency of the United States, by the National Union Convention, held at Baltimore, and enclosing a copy of the resolutions adopted by that body, was not received until the 25th ult.

A reply on my part had been previously made to the action of the Convention in presenting my name, in a speech delivered in this city, on the evening succeeding the day of the adjournment of the Convention, in which I indicated my acceptance of the distinguished honor conferred by that body, and defined the grounds upon which that acceptance was based, substantially saying what I now have to say. From the comments made upon that speech by the various presses of the country to which my attention has been directed, I considered it to be regarded as a full acceptance.

In view, however, of the desire expressed in your communication, I will more fully allude to a few points that have been heretofore presented. My opinions on the leading questions at present agitating and distracting the public mind, and especially in reference to the rebellion now being waged against the Government and authority of the United States, I presume, are generally understood. Before the southern people assumed a belligerent attitude, (and frequently since,) I took occasion most frankly to declare the views I then entertained in relation to the wicked purposes of the southern politicians. They have since undergone but little, if any change. Time and subsequent events have rather confirmed than diminished my confidence in their correctness.

At the beginning of this great struggle I entertained the same opinion of it I do now, and in my place in the Senate I denounced it as treason, worthy the punishment of death, and warned the Government and people of the impending danger. But my voice was not heard or counsel heeded until it was too late to avert the storm. It still continued to gather over us without molestation from the authorities at Washington, until at length it broke with all its fury upon the country. And now, if we would save the government from being overwhelmed by it, we must meet it in the true spirit of patriotism, and bring traitors to the punishment due their crime, and by force of arms crush out and subdue the last vestige of rebel authority in every State. I felt then as now that the destruction of the government was deliberately determined upon by wicked and designing conspirators, whose lives and fortunes were pledged to carry it out, and that no compromise, short of an unconditional recognition of the independence of the southern States, could have been or could now be proposed which they would accept. The clamor for "southern rights," as the rebel journals were pleased to designate their rallying cry, was not to secure their assumed rights in the Union and under the Constitution, but to disrupt the government and establish an independent organization based upon slavery, which they could at all times control.

The separation of the Government has for years been the cherished purpose of the southern leaders. Baffled, in 1832, by the stern, patriotic heroism of Andrew Jackson, they sulkily acquiesced, only to mature their diabolical schemes, and await the recurrence of a more favorable opportunity to execute them. Then the pretext was the tariff, and Jackson, after foiling their schemes of nullification and disunion, with prophetic perspicacity, warned the country against the renewal of their efforts to dismember the Government.

In a letter dated May 1, 1833, to the Rev. A. J. Crawford, after demonstrating the heartless insincerity of the southern nullifiers, he said:

"Therefore the tariff was only a pretext, and disunion and a southern confederacy the real object. The next pretext will be the negro, or slavery question."

Time has fully verified this prediction, and we have now not only "the negro, or slavery question," as the pretext, but the real cause of the rebellion, and both must go down together. It is vain to attempt to reconstruct the Union with the distracting element of slavery in it. Experience has demonstrated its incompatibility with free and republican governments, and it would be unwise and unjust longer to continue it as one of the institutions of the country. While it remained subordinate to the Constitution and laws of the United States I yielded to it my support, but when it became rebellious and attempted to rise above the Government, and control its action, I threw my humble influence against it.

The authority of the Government is supreme, and will admit of no rivalry. No institution can rise above it, whether it be slavery or any other organized power. In our happy form of government all must be subordinate to the will of the people, when reflected through the Constitution and laws made pursuant thereto—State or Federal. This great principle lies at the foundation of every government, and cannot be disregarded without the destruction of the government itself. In the support and practice of correct principles we can never reach wrong results, and by rigorously adhering to this great fundamental truth the end will be the preservation of the Union and the overthrow of an institution which has made war upon and attempted the destruction of the government itself.

The mode by which this great change—the emancipation of the slave—can be effected, is properly found in the power to amend the Constitution of the United States. This plan is effectual, and of no doubtful authority; and while it does not contravene the timely exercise of the war power by the President in his emancipation proclamation, it comes stamped with the authority of the people themselves, acting in accordance with the written rule of the supreme law of the land, and must, therefore, give more general satisfaction and quietude to the distracted public mind.

By recurring to the principles contained in the resolutions so unanimously adopted by the Convention, I find that they substantially accord with my public acts and opinions heretofore made known and expressed, and are, therefore, most cordially indorsed and approved; and the nomination, having been conferred without any solicitation on my part, it is with the greater pleasure accepted.

In accepting the nomination I might here close, but I cannot forego the opportunity of saying to my old friends of the Democratic party proper, with whom I have so long and pleasantly been associated, that the hour has now come when that great party can justly vindicate its devotion to true democratic policy and measures of expediency. The war is a war of great principles. It involves the supremacy and life of the Government itself. If the rebellion triumphs free government North and South fails. If, on the other hand, the Government is successful, as I do not doubt, its destiny is fixed, its basis permanent and enduring, and its career of honor and glory just begun. In a great contest like this for the existence of free government the path of duty is patriotism and principle. Minor considerations and questions of administrative policy should give way to the higher duty of first preserving the Government, and then there will be time enough to wrangle over the men and measures pertaining to its administration.

This is not the hour for strife and division among ourselves. Such differences of opinion only encourage the enemy, prolong the war, and waste the country. Unity of action and concentration of power should be our watchword and rallying cry. This accomplished, the time will rapidly approach when their armies in the field—the great power of the rebellion—will be broken and crushed by our gallant officers and brave soldiers, and ere long they will return to their homes and firesides to resume again the avocations of peace, with the proud consciousness that they have aided in the noble work of re-establishing upon a surer and more permanent basis the great temple of American freedom.

I am, gentlemen, with sentiments of high regard, yours truly,

ANDREW JOHNSON.

The National Union League—The Platform Adopted.

BALTIMORE, June 8, 1864.

The following are the resolutions passed by the Grand National Council of the Union League of America, assembled at the New Assembly Rooms in this city. The injunction of secrecy has been removed:

1. Resolved, That we will support the Administration in the vigorous prosecution of the war to the complete and final suppression of the rebellion, and to this we pledge all our energies and efforts.

2. Resolved, That slavery, being the cause of the rebellion and the bond of union among traitors, ought to be abolished without delay, and it is the sense of this organization that slavery, in all its forms, should be prohibited by an amendment to the Federal Constitution.

3. Resolved, That we hereby approve of the principles involved in the policy known as the Monroe doctrine.

4. Resolved, That the confiscation acts of Congress should be promptly and vigorously enforced, and that homesteads on the lands confiscated under it should be granted to our soldiers and others who have been made indigent by the acts of traitors and rebels.

5. Resolved, That every person who bears arms in defence of the national flag, is entitled, without distinction of color or nationality, to the protection of the government he defends, to the full extent of that government's power.

6. Resolved, That we hereby tender our thanks to the soldiers of the army and the sailors of the navy.

The Cleveland Convention.

May 31—A convention of about three hundred and fifty persons, as reported, met in Cleveland, pursuant to sundry calls:

A CALL TO THE RADICAL MEN OF THE NATION.

Whereas a Convention has been called by certain parties favorable to changing the present Administration, and for the purpose of "counseling concerning the approaching Presidential election," to meet in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, on Tuesday, the 31st of the present month; and whereas we are glad to learn that such a convention is to assemble, and having confidence that the objects of those issuing the call are in unison with those of the radical men of the country;

Therefore, the undersigned, having been appointed by the "Central Fremont Club" of the city of New York, for that purpose, do hereby invite their radical fellow-citizens in every State, county, and town throughout the country to meet them in the above-named Convention, on the said Tuesday, the 31st of this month, in order, then and there, to recommend the nomination of John C. Fremont for the Presidency of the United States, and to assist in organizing for his election.

The imbecile and vacillating policy of the present Administration in the conduct of the war, being just weak enough to waste its men and means to provoke the enemy, but not strong enough to conquer the rebellion—and its treachery to justice, freedom, and genuine democratic principles in its plan of reconstruction, whereby the honor and dignity of the nation have been sacrificed to conciliate the still existing and arrogant slave power, and to further the ends of an unscrupulous partisan ambition—call in thunder tones upon the lovers of justice and their country to come to the rescue of the imperiled nationality and the cause of impartial and universal freedom, threatened with betrayal and overthrow.

The way to victory and salvation is plain. Justice must be throned in the seats of national legislation, and guide the executive will. The things demanded, and which we ask you to join us to render sure, are, the immediate extinction of slavery throughout the whole United States by Congressional action, the absolute equality of all men before the law, without regard to race or color, and such a plan of reconstruction as shall conform entirely to the policy of freedom for all, placing the political power alone in the hands of the loyal, and executing with vigor the law for confiscating the property of the rebels.

Come, then, in formidable numbers, and let us take counsel together, in this crisis of the nation's calamity, and, with one united effort, endeavor to redeem the country from slavery and war, that it may be consecrated to FREEDOM and PEACE FOREVER MORE. Men of God! Men of humanity! Lovers of justice! Patriots and freemen! One and all, rally!

Most respectfully, your fellow-citizens.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

After having labored ineffectually to defer as far as was in our power the critical moment when the attention of the people must inevitably be fixed upon the selection of a candidate for the Chief Magistracy of the country; after having interrogated our conscience and consulted our duty as citizens, obeying at once the sentiment of a mature conviction and a profound affection for the common country, we feel ourselves impelled, on our own responsibility, to declare to the people that the time has come for all independent men, jealous of their liberties and of the national greatness, to confer together and unite to resist the swelling invasion of an open, shameless, and unrestrained patronage which threatens to engulf under its destructive wave the rights of the people, the liberty and dignity of the nation.

Deeply impressed with the conviction that, in a time of revolution, when the public attention is turned exclusively to the success of armies, and is consequently less vigilant of the public liberties, the patronage derived from the organization of an army of a million of men, and an administration of affairs which seeks to control the remotest parts of the country in favor of its supreme chief, constitute a danger seriously threatening to the stability of republican institutions, we declare that the principle of one term, which has now acquired nearly the force of law by the consecration of time, ought to be inflexibly adhered to in the approaching election.

We further declare that we do not recognize in the Baltimore Convention the essential conditions of a truly National Convention. Its proximity to the centre of all the interested influences of administration, its distance from the centre of the country, its mode of convocation, the corrupting practices to which it has been and inevitably will be subjected, do not permit the people to assemble there with any expectation of being able to deliberate at full liberty. Convinced, as we are, that in presence of the critical circumstances in which the nation is placed, it is only in the energy and good sense of the people that the general safety can be found, satisfied that the only way to consult it is to indicate a central position to which every one may go without too much expenditure of means and time, and where the assembled people, far from all administrative influence, may consult freely and deliberate peaceably with the presence of the greatest possible number of men whose known principles guarantee their sincere and enlightened devotion to the rights of the people and to the preservation of the true basis of republican government—we earnestly invite our fellow-citizens to unite at Cleveland, Ohio, on Tuesday, the 31st of May next, for consultation and concert of action in respect to the approaching Presidential election.

LETTER FROM MRS. STANTON.

MAY 14, 1864.

TO THE CENTRAL FREMONT CLUB:

GENTLEMEN: To your call "to the radical men of the nation," taking it for granted you use "men" in its largest sense, I desire to append my name, and for the following reasons:

1. This is the only call ever issued for a political convention, demanding the right of suffrage for the black man—that safeguard of civil liberty, without which emancipation is a mockery.

2. When a body of men thus consecrate themselves to "freedom and peace," and declare their high resolve to found a republic on the eternal principles of justice, they have lifted politics into the sphere of morals and religion, and made it the duty of all true men and women to unite with them in building up the New Nation.

Yours respectfully,

E. CADY STANTON.

LETTER FROM WENDELL PHILLIPS.

Boston, April 21.

JUDGE STALLO:

DEAR SIR: Since you asked my judgment as to the course to be taken in nominating a candidate for the Presidency, I have been requested to sign a call for a convention for that purpose, to meet at Cleveland, in May next. Let me tell you the national policy I advocate:

Subdue the South as rapidly as possible. The moment territory comes under our flag reconstruct States thus: Confiscate and divide the lands of rebels; extend the right of suffrage broadly as possible to whites and blacks; let the Federal Constitution prohibit slavery throughout the Union, and forbid the States to make any distinction among their citizens on account of color or race.

I shall make every effort to have this policy pursued. Believing that the present Administration repudiates it and is carrying us to a point where we shall be obliged either to acknowledge the Southern Confederacy or to reconstruct the Union on terms grossly unjust, intolerable to the masses, and sure soon to result in another war, I earnestly advise an unplanned and independent convention, like that proposed, to consider public affairs and nominate for the Presidency a statesman and a patriot.

Yours, faithfully,

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

The Convention was called to order by Edward Gilbert, of New York, on whose motion Ex-Governor William F. Johnston, of Pennsylvania, was chosen temporary Chairman. Mr. B. H. Brooks, of California, and Mr. Walfie, of the District of Columbia, were chosen Secretaries. A Committee on Credentials was proposed but not created. It was subsequently reported that the following States were represented:

Ohio, Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, Iowa, Missouri, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Wisconsin, Tennessee, Maine, Indiana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, and the District of Columbia.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported officers, with General John Cochrane, of New York, as President.

Gen. Cochrane, on returning his thanks to the Convention, said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: The formal routine of duty for the presiding officer, prescribes that he return set thanks for the honor conferred upon him. I am not disposed to follow in this path. The formality is too heartless for the solemnity and importance of the occasion. I assume my duties with cheerfulness and I trust that in this grand army of freedom I may well perform my humble part, and that that duty may be so performed that we may command the universal applause of all men. [Cheers.] I see before me representatives of the West, on which depends so much of the interests and destinies of the country—of the great central region of the country—its support and sustenance. I look further to the East and see before me the companions of my early life, assembled now by a common motive from the devious paths in which the exigencies of politics had lead them—the War Democrats of the State of New York. [Applause.] For them party possesses no claims when it is not identified with principle. There are also those here, who while they wait anxiously the tidings from the shattered cohorts under the banner of freedom, still turn affectionately to a Fatherland on the other side of the raging sea. [Applause.] We meet with such emotions suggested by the melancholy vista of the past—such reflections upon the scenes of the present. We have come together regarding party as nothing—country as everything.

Our national existence is at issue. Three years ago the question of national life fell like a thunderbolt at the feet of the people and they sprang to arms, with a wild shout in which all factions, all party, went down. Everywhere was heard the steady tramp of armed men and the patriotism and power of the North has swept on until the hour is almost striking when time shall proclaim the rebels defeated and the Union triumphant. [Applause.] In this hour men should review the past and speculate as to the dangers and vicissitudes of the future. For this purpose you assemble here—intending to support the army in the field, and at the same time to organize a great civil army, to fight for principles, and to save for all generations the precious legacy obtained for us by the sacrifices of the soldiers of the Union. [Applause.] The rebellion, it must be suppressed—The Union, it must be preserved. [Great applause.] But we shall allow no criticism of the Government which represents us all, shall cast no impediment in the way of our Union soldiers, shall entertain no thought unworthy of American citizens.

The speaker then referred to the various discussions of the past. Since 1787 slavery has been the root of every political party of the country. The convention had assembled from all positions on this question, and now occupied one common ground. All are now united in demanding that slavery be destroyed and its last vestige wiped out. [Cheers.]

In this connection the speaker referred to the War Democrats of New York—virtual and virtuous—denying that the convention at Syracuse represented them, and denouncing that convention as a medley party of trading, scurvy politicians. He solemnly declared before high heaven that, since the war broke out, he had never belonged to party, that his feet had not been soiled by its touch, that he never crossed its lines, that he would never till the war was over consent to be "cabinied, cribbed, confined" by party influences. As he had gone up and down the Hudson, he had indeed heard echoes from these "convocations of most political worms," and they had all been tuned to the key of "roast beef and cabbage on a treacher."

But he had been betrayed into prolixity by the interest of the occasion. Before closing he wished to speak of one other thing. All men on this continent are free and equal, and our Government must regard the private rights of civilians. If private rights are not respected, public liberty dies. We contend for individual rights, and whoever attacks them wounds the vital parts of the Republic. Not even the plea of necessity allows any one to trample upon them. To be sure these rights depend on circumstances, and may be superseded by martial law. Till that is proclaimed they must not be infringed. Law is the reflex of order, which is the principle of the universe and God himself. When it is stricken down all things fall with it.

Most sacred is the noble old liberty of the press. Over that, in far Europe the struggle for freedom has been most sternly and pertinaciously waged. Let a free people guard with jealous care the liberty of the press, and declare the administration who would strike at it as guilty of treason and little less than traitors. [Applause.]

Gen. Cochrane referred to his early belief that America was the light-house of the world—the asylum of the oppressed. He had heard that the light had been extinguished. He demanded that America should remain the sanctuary of freedom, the asylum of the oppressed throughout the world. The refugee from other lands must be held innocent until, in accordance with law, you pronounce him guilty. [Applause.]

The speaker closed with a brief reference to the Monroe doctrine, and an enthusiastic assertion of his belief in the speedy triumph of our arms, which was rapturously applauded.

After the adoption of the platform, nominations were made.

JOHN C. FREMONT was nominated for President by acclamation.

Gen. JOHN COCHRANE was nominated for Vice President, with but few voices in the negative.

The following letters were addressed to the Convention: that of Wendell Phillips, read in Convention, is reported to have been warmly applauded:

FROM WENDELL PHILLIPS.

Boston, May 27, 1864.

DEAR SIR: I deeply regret that it is out of my power to attend the Cleveland Convention. Allow me to suggest one or two things which I hoped to urge on its attention.

Without denying what the friends of the Administration claim—that it has done something toward crushing the rebellion—my charge against it is that it has not done half that it should and could have done toward that end, had it used the means in its hands with an earnest and single purpose to close the strife thoroughly and forever. It has thought more of conciliating rebels than of subduing them. It has avowedly forbore the use of lawful and efficient means (to wit, the abolition of slavery) until it was thought indispensable, and even then has used it in a half-hearted, halting way, wishing to save the feelings of rebels.

We have three tools with which to crush the rebellion—men, money, and the emancipation of the negro. We were warned to be quick and sharp in the use of these, because every year the war lasted hardened the South from a rebellion into a nation, and doubled the danger of foreign interference. Slavery has been our great trouble in the past, and, as every man saw, was our great danger in the future. Statesmanship, said, therefore, seize at once the God-given opportunity to end it, at the same time that you, in the quickest, shortest, and cheapest manner, annihilate the rebellion.

For three years the Administration has lavished money without stint, and drenched the land in blood, and it has not yet thoroughly and heartily struck at the slave system. Confessing that the use of this means is indispensable, the Administration has used it just enough to irritate the rebels and not enough to save the State. In sixty days after the rebellion broke out the Administration suspended habeas corpus on the plea of military necessity—justly. For three years it has poured out the treasure and blood of the country like water. Meanwhile slavery was too sacred to be used; that was saved lest the feelings of the rebels should be hurt. The Administration weighed treasure, blood, and civil liberty against slavery, and, up to the present moment, has decided to exhaust them all before it uses freedom, heartily, as a means of battle.

Mr. Lincoln's friends tell us that if he is re-elected he is re-elected to pursue the same policy and obey the same Cab-

net. What will be the result of another four years of such policy? Unless the South is recognized the war will continue; the taxation needed to sustain our immense debt, doubled by that time, will grind the laboring man of the North down to the level of the pauper labor of Europe; and we shall have a Government accustomed to despotic power for eight years—a fearful peril to democratic institutions.

Mr. Lincoln's model of reconstruction is the experiment in Louisiana, which puts all power into the hands of the unchanged white race, soured by defeat, hating the laboring classes, plotting constantly for aristocratic institutions. To reconstruct the rebel States on that model is only continuing the war in the Senate Chamber after we have closed it in the field. Such reconstruction, leaving the South with its labor and capital at war, puts the whole payment of the debt on the industrious North, and in that way it will hang on us for a century. Such reconstruction makes the freedom of the negro a sham, and perpetuates slavery under a softer name. Such reconstruction, leaving the seeds of discontent and division in the South in the places of power, tempts and facilitates another rebellion, at the instigation or with the aid of French-Mexico. Such reconstruction dooms us to a second or third-rate place among nations, and provokes foreign insult and aggression.

There is no plan of reconstruction possible within twenty years, unless we admit the black to citizenship and the ballot, and use him, with the white, as the basis of States. There is not in the rebel States sufficient white basis to build on. If we refuse this method we must subdue the South and hold it as territory until this generation of white men have passed away, and their sons, with other feelings, have taken their places, and northern capital, energy, and immigration have forced their way into the South. Should we adopt that plan, and wait for those changes, twenty years must elapse before we can venture to rebuild States. Meanwhile a large and expensive army, and the use of despotic power by a Government holding half its territory and citizens as subjects, make every thoughtful man tremble for the fate of free government.

A quick and thorough reorganization of States on a democratic basis—every man and race equal before the law—is the only sure way to save the Union. I urge it not for the black man's sake alone, but for ours—for the nation's sake. Against such recognition of the blacks Mr. Lincoln stands pledged by prejudice and avowal. Men say, if we elect him he may change his views. Possibly. But three years have been a long time for a man's education in such hours as these. The nation cannot afford more. At any rate, the Constitution gives this summer an opportunity to make President a man fully educated. I prefer that course.

The Administration, therefore, I regard as a civil and military failure, and its avowed policy ruinous to the North in every point of view. Mr. Lincoln may wish the end—peace and freedom—but he is wholly unwilling to use the means which can secure that end. If Mr. Lincoln is re-elected I do not expect to see the Union reconstructed in my day, unless on terms more disastrous to liberty than even disunion would be. If I turn to General Fremont, I see a man whose first act was to use the freedom of the negro as his weapon, I see one whose thorough loyalty to democratic institutions, without regard to race, whose earnest and decisive character, whose clear-sighted statesmanship and rare military ability justify my confidence that in his hands all will be done to save the State that foresight, skill, decision, and statesmanship can do.

I think the Convention should incorporate in its platform the demand for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting slavery everywhere within the Republic, and forbidding the States to make any distinction among their citizens on account of color or race. I think it should demand a reconstruction of States as speedily as possible on the basis of every loyal man, white or black, sharing the land and the ballot. But if some of these points are not covered I shall still support its action with all my heart if it puts the name of Fremont or Butler on its flag. Fremont is my first choice, but I can support either of them; and this is an hour of such peril to the Republic that I think men should surrender all party and personal partiality, and support any man able and willing to save the State.

If the Baltimore Convention shall nominate Mr. Lincoln, then I hope we shall fling our candidate's name, the long-honored one of J. C. Fremont, to the breeze, and appeal to the patriotism and common sense of the people to save us from another such three years as we have seen. If, on the contrary, the Baltimore convention shall give us the name of any man whom the Radicals of the Loyal States can trust, I hope we shall be able to arrange some plan which will unite all on a common basis and carry our principles into the Government.

Wishing you all success, and prepared to second your effort to remove the Administration, I am, yours &c.,

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

EDWARD GILBERT, Esq., New York.

FROM LUCIUS ROBINSON.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, ALBANY, May 28.

To Hon. A. J. COLVIN:

My official duties and the illness of my deputy will prevent me from attending the meeting called for consultation at Cleveland, the 31st instant. I trust that you will be there with your judicious advice.

There was never a time when the safety and welfare of the country more imperatively demanded careful deliberation, with wise and resolute action. We have lived through three years of war, and have survived many bad mistakes, simply because the popular mind has been intensely fixed upon the single purpose of suppressing the rebellion at all hazards and at every cost. This one idea has had such controlling power, and the masses have followed so steadily, that it has served as a substitute for proper governmental leadership. But it is evident that the time is near at hand when the re-establishment of order, the removal of the cause of the rebellion and the repairing of the terrible desolation it has produced, will require at the head of the Government the very highest qualities of leadership. How can we hope to live as a nation through the crisis before us with a weak Executive and Cabinet in a state of discord and anarchy? Will not the country be in imminent danger of falling into the same condition when it ceases to be held together by the pressure of war? It appears to me that a firm assertion of sound principles and the election of the greatest men, regardless of former party organizations, are essential to the safety of the nation.

Whether a nomination should be made at Cleveland or not can best be determined after meeting and consulting with those who will assemble there; but if it shall be decided to nominate I have no hesitation in saying that I believe the hopes of the people throughout the country are resting upon General Grant as the candidate. He has displayed the qualities which give all men confidence. He has shown himself possessed of great ability and skill, the most indomitable courage and most unselfish devotion to the cause of his country. Victory has attended him wherever he has gone. One year ago all confidence in the Administration was lost. The brilliant victories which have since been won by Gen. Grant have so far restored it as to encourage the Administration to attempt to re-elect itself on the strength of his achievements. But in my judgment we should let him who has won the honors wear them, and should entrust power to one who has shown that he knows how to wield it; we shall then have a leader at the head of affairs in whom all loyal men will have confidence, against whom there will be no prejudices, and whom all will aid with alacrity.

Yours,

LUCIUS ROBINSON.

FROM FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

ROCHESTER, May 23, 1864.

SIR: I mean the complete abolition of every vestige, form, modification of slavery in every part of the United States, perfect equality for the black man in every State before the law, in the jury-box, at the ballot-box, and on the battlefield; ample and salutary retaliation for every instance of enslavement or slaughter of prisoners of any color. I mean that in the distribution of offices and honors under this Government no discrimination shall be made in favor of or against any class of citizens, whether black or white, of native or foreign birth. And supposing that the Convention which is to meet at Cleveland means the same thing, I cheerfully give my name as one of the signers of the call.

Yours, respectfully,

FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

E. GILBERT, Esq.

THE PLATFORM.

Mr. Carroll, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions,* reported the following resolutions:

First. That the Federal Union shall be preserved.

* During the Convention, Mr. Langer, of Iowa, offered these resolutions, which, on the suggestion of the Chair, were referred to the committee:

Resolved, That the members of this Convention, or of any Convention arising from this, to nominate or participate in the nomination of a candidate for the next Presidential term, and the Presidential electors of this party, pledge themselves upon their honor not to accept offices of trust, honor, or profit from the Administration in power during the next Presidential term, and not to be connected directly or indirectly with any contract or business transaction in the power of the Administration.

Resolved, To make it obligatory on the Presidential candidate of this party, if successful, to act accordingly.

Resolved, That this is not to be construed to prevent any member from becoming an active combatant in the Navy and Army of the United States, in such capacity as his respective State may elect to employ him."

Second. That the Constitution and laws of the United States must be observed and obeyed.

Third. That the rebellion must be suppressed by force of arms, and without compromise.

Fourth. That the rights of free speech, free press, and the habeas corpus be held inviolate, save in districts where martial law has been proclaimed.

Fifth. That the rebellion has destroyed slavery, and the Federal Constitution should be amended to prohibit its re-establishment, and to secure to all men absolute equality before the law.

Sixth. That integrity and economy are demanded at all times in the administration of the Government; and that in time of war the want of them is criminal.

Seventh. That the right of asylum, except for crime and subject to law, is a recognized principle of American liberty; that any violation of it cannot be overlooked, and must not go unrebuked.

Eighth. That the national policy known as the "Monroe doctrine" has become a recognized principle, and that the establishment of an anti-republican Government on this continent by any foreign power cannot be tolerated.

Ninth. That the gratitude and support of the nation are due to the faithful soldiers and the earnest leaders of the Union army and navy for their heroic achievements and deathless valor in defence of our imperiled country and of civil liberty.

Tenth. That the one-term policy for the Presidency, adopted by the people, is strengthened by the force of the existing crisis, and should be maintained by constitutional amendments.

Eleventh. That the Constitution should be so amended that the President and Vice President shall be elected by a direct vote of the people.

Twelfth. That the question of the reconstruction of the rebellious States belongs to the people, through their representatives in Congress, and not to the Executive.

Thirteenth. That the confiscation of the lands of the rebels, and their distribution among the soldiers and actual settlers, is a measure of justice.

Mr. Carroll stated that the committee were unanimous on all the resolutions, save one—the last. As a matter of expediency it was thought not advisable to recommend it, but the majority of the committee had instructed him to report it for the consideration of the Convention.

At this juncture, Mr. Gilbert announced the receipt of a letter from Wendell Phillips, which was warmly applauded while being read by the secretary.

Mr. Ransom of New Jersey, moved that the question on the resolutions be taken separately.

It was then decided to take up the resolutions separately. The first, second, third, and fourth were adopted without dissent.

Mr. Goodell moved to amend the fifth by declaring that slavery shall die, instead of saying that it is dead; for, said the mover, although it is legally dead, the fact is that there are over three millions of people now enslaved in the southern States. He moved to substitute these words:

"That the rebellion must be suppressed by the destruction of its motive cause, slavery."

This was lost after a debate, and the resolution was adopted.

The remainder were then adopted.

LETTERS OF ACCEPTANCE.

FROM GENERAL FREMONT.

NEW YORK, June 4, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: In answer to the letter which I have had the honor to receive from you, on the part of the representatives of the people assembled at Cleveland, the 31st of May, I desire to express my thanks for the confidence which led them to offer me the honorable and difficult position of their candidate in the approaching Presidential election.

Very honorable, because in offering it to me you act in the name of a great number of citizens who seek above all things the good of their country, and who have no sort of selfish interest in view. Very difficult, because in accepting the candidacy you propose to me, I am exposed to the reproach of creating a schism in the party with which I have been identified.

Had Mr. Lincoln remained faithful to the principles he was elected to defend, no schism could have been created, and no contest could have been possible. This is not an ordinary election. It is a contest for the right even to have candidates, and not merely, as usual, for the choice among them. Now, for the first time since '76, the question of constitutional liberty has been brought directly before the people for their serious consideration and vote. The ordinary rights secured under the Constitution and the laws of the country have been violated and extraordinary powers have been usurped by the Executive. It is directly before the people now to say whether or not the principles established by the Revolution are worth maintaining.

If, as we have been taught to believe, those guarantees for liberty which made the distinctive name and glory of our country, are in truth inviolably sacred, then here must be a protest against the arbitrary violation which had not even the excuse of a necessity. The schism is made by those who force the choice between a shameful silence or a protest against wrong. In such considerations originated the Cleveland Convention. It was among its objects to arouse the attention of the people to such facts, and to bring them to realize that, while we are saturating Southern soil with the best blood of the country in the name of liberty, we have really parted with it at home.

To-day we have in the country the abuses of a military dictation without its unity of action and vigor of execution—an Administration marked at home by disregard of constitutional rights, by its violation of personal liberty and the liberty of the press, and as a crowning shame, by its abandonment of the right of asylum, a right especially dear to all free nations abroad. Its course has been characterized by a feebleness and want of principle which has misled European powers and driven them to a belief that only commercial interests and personal aims are concerned, and that no great principles are involved in the issue. The admirable conduct of the people, their readiness to make every sacrifice demanded of them, their forbearance and silence under the suspension of everything that could be suspended, their many acts of heroism and sacrifices, were all rendered fruitless by the incapacity, or to speak more exactly, by the personal ends for which the war was managed. This incapacity and selfishness naturally produced such results as led the European powers, and logically enough, to the conviction that the North, with its greatly superior population, its immense resources, and its credit, will never be able to recover the South. Sympathies which would have been with us from the outset of this war were turned against us, and in this way the Administration has done the country a double wrong abroad. It created hostility, or at best indifference, among those who would have been its friends if the real intentions of the people could have been better known, while, at the same time, it neglected no occasion for making the most humiliating concessions.

Against this disastrous condition of affairs the Cleveland Convention was a protest.

The principles which form the basis of its platform have my unqualified and cordial approbation, but I cannot so heartily concur in all the measures which you propose. I do not believe that confiscation extended to the property of all rebels, is practicable, and if it were so, I do not think it a measure of sound policy. It is, in fact, a question belonging to the people themselves to decide, and is a proper occasion for the exercise of their original and sovereign authority. As a war measure, in the beginning of a revolt which might be quelled by prompt severity, I understand the policy of confiscation, but not as a final measure of reconstruction after the suppression of an insurrection.

In the adjustments which are to follow peace no considerations of vengeance can consistently be admitted.

The object of the war is to make permanently secure the peace and happiness of the whole country, and there was but a single element in the way of its attainment. This element of slavery may be considered practically destroyed in the country, and it needs only your proposed amendment of the Constitution, to make its extinction complete.

With this extinction of slavery the party divisions created by it have also disappeared. And if in the history of the country there has ever been a time when the American people, without regard to one or another of the political divisions, were called upon to give solemnly their voice in a matter which involved the safety of the United States, it is assuredly the present time.

If the Convention at Baltimore will nominate any man whose past life justifies a well-grounded confidence in his fidelity to our cardinal principles, there is no reason why there should be any division among the really patriotic men of the country. To any such I shall be most happy to give a cordial and active support.

My own decided preference is to aid in this way, and not to be myself a candidate. But if Mr. Lincoln should be nominated—as I believe it would be fatal to the country to indorse a policy and renew a power which has cost us the lives of thousands of men, and needlessly put the country on the road to bankruptcy—there will remain no other alternative but to organize against him every element of conscientious opposition with the view to prevent the misfortune of his re-election.

In this contingency, I accept the nomination at Cleveland, and, as a preliminary step, I have resigned my commission in the army. This was a sacrifice it gave me pain to make. But I had for a long time fruitlessly endeavored to obtain service. I make this sacrifice now only to regain liberty of speech, and to leave nothing in the way of discharging to my utmost ability the task you have set for me.

With my earnest and sincere thanks for your expressions of confidence and regard, and for the many honorable terms in which you acquaint me with the actions of the Convention, I am, gentlemen,

Very respectfully and truly yours,

J. C. FREMONT.

To Worthington G. Snethen of Maryland, Edward Gilbert of New York, Casper Butz of Illinois, Charles E. Moss of Missouri, N. P. Sawyer of Pennsylvania, a Committee, &c.

FROM GENERAL COCHRANE.

NEW YORK, June 4, 1861.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your note informing me officially of my nomination by the Radical Democracy at Cleveland, on the 31st ultimo, as their candidate for Vice President of the United States, on the ticket with John C. Fremont as their candidate for President.

I have been accustomed to regard simply as a duty performed what you are pleased to represent as personally meritorious, and to regret the physical disability which alone withdrew me from the immediate scene of war.

I concur in the action and agree with the principles of the Convention. Where by its twelfth resolution the question of reconstruction is referred to the constitutional action of the people, it wisely committed to them an issue peculiarly within the province of the future, and not yet sufficiently emerged from war, to warrant positive opinion.

While I have ever supposed confiscation and use of the property of an enemy in arms to be a laudable exercise of an established and essential rule of civilized war, I am pleased to observe that the Convention, when asserting the justice of the principle, intended to remit its exercise to the discretion of the people, hereafter manifested through their representatives in Congress, when considering the paramount question of reconstruction. This was judicious; for, indeed, so blended must be the various methods—sequestration, confiscation, military absorption and occupation—that shall hereafter co-operate to evolve order from confusion, and to restore the Government, that it is difficult, if not impossible, now, when affirming the principle, to provide for its application.

I have the honor, gentlemen, to accept the nomination for the Vice President of the United States, which you have tendered to me under the direction of the Convention.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN COCHRANE.

To the COMMITTEE.

Speech of Colonel Cochrane.

DELIVERED TO HIS REGIMENT, FIRST UNITED STATES CHASSEURS, NOVEMBER 13, 1861.

It having been announced that Colonel John Cochrane would speak to his regiment, at their camp, on the occasion of their first appearance in new uniforms, on the afternoon of Friday, the 13th of November, instant, a large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen was congregated to hear him. A staging had been improvised beneath a spreading oak, where, conspicuous among the audience, sat the Secretary of War, dignified and composed. In front, in enclosing line, stood the imposing regiment—the first United States Chasseurs, steady, exact, and attentive. Within the square a regimental band uttered harmonious music, while the reddening rays of the descending sun enveloped the audience, soldiers, Secretary, and orator, in rosy rays, that imparted a soft beauty to the scene, and conveyed the pleasing illusion attendant upon dramatic effect. The Colonel then advanced, and notified his hearers that one of the companies of the regiment had selected this as a fitting opportunity to present to one of their lieutenants (Morton) a small token of their admiration and esteem. The preliminary ceremony was agreeably and satisfactorily finished. It was then that Colonel Cochrane arose, and, justly inspired by the scene and the circumstances which produced it, spoke as follows:

Soldiers of the First United States Chasseurs:

[Bravo Colonel.] I have a word to say to you to-day. You have engaged in an arduous struggle. You have prosecuted it; you intend to prosecute it; you have stood unflinchingly before the enemy; you have proved yourselves patriotic, able, and tried soldiers, and you are entitled to the meed of praise. 1, your commander, this day feel that it is a proud duty to extend to you the hand of approbation, and to declare that you are worthy of your country.

Soldiers, you have undergone labor; you have faced the enemy; you have stood without retreating before their fire; you have borne the inclemencies of the season, and you are ready to advance with that grand army of which you are a part. Your country opens its arms, and receives you to its bosom. It will always praise and applaud you. Its commanders stand at the head of the column, and, with you behind them, they are not to be deterred. But the command is forthcoming—forward, march! toward the enemy. Take his possessions, for they are yours; they are yours to occupy; they are yours to enjoy; you are no marauders, you are no plunderers of property not your own, but you are the avengers of the law; you are the right arm of the Constitution; under your flag march patriotism and order, and republican institutions; in your train follow peace, prosperity and liberty; you are the servants of these high potentates, and the arm through which they strike is the arm of the worthy public servant who stands behind me on this occasion, the Secretary of War.

Soldiers, you have been called to the field, not as marauders and mercenaries, but as the defenders of our high faith, defenders of our glorious reputation, defenders of our honor and renown, around which cluster the memories of the past, and whose feats and performances will yet distinguish the future. You are led forward by a commander under whom to serve it is a pride for the highest among us. He enjoys the confidence of the people, and his reputation already renders powerless the arms of your enemies. By him we have won victories in the South, and by these victories we have assurances of triumph yet to come. Beaufort is ours—Charleston may be ours—the whole country now disintegrated may shortly be united by the force of those arms of which you are a part, and the Union once more signify to the world the intent of that glorious motto, E Pluribus Unum. Then no longer shall be heard that fell doctrine of secession, which would tear us asunder, and distract, part from part, this glorious Union; but we shall all be as we have been, one and inseparable, under the flag of our glorious nationality, won by our fathers, and preserved by you. [Applause.] Here is assembled upon the banks of the Potomac an army the like of which the world has never seen. The motive which has gathered that army together never before was presented to the eye of history. It was congregated by no despotic order; it was the voluntary wish, the motive power, of every man composing it—the power of men rushing, as with one purpose, to reinstate the flag of our Union and save the Republic. That, soldiers, is your mission; and you have a commander who with lightning speed will lead you to conquest, and with equal speed will transmit the glory of your labors to the remotest corners of our country. And now permit me, though the shades of night are falling upon us, to indulge in a few words as to the cause of the war, and the means by which it is to be brought to a successful termination. The material aid I have already averted to; the motive power remains to be commented upon. On the one side you have the Confederate army; on the other side you have the grand Union—the Federal army. Now, the difference between these two words, in their common acceptance, is the cause for which these two armies are fighting. It is Secession against Federation, Federation against Secession. Nationality against disunion; confusion against order; anarchy against a good, free, and liberal Government—a Government made equally by the Fathers of the South and the Fathers of the North. We are in a revolutionary period. The South contends for the right of revolution. We admit the right; but, while we admit it, we invoke the sole empire which may be invoked on such occasions—the empire of the sword, the empire of force, the ultima ratio, that last effort to which men appeal when they have differences otherwise irreconcilable.

They—the South—have resorted to arms, and they have compelled us to the same resort; and if they claim that it is a war of self-preservation on their part, it is equally a war of self-preservation on ours; and if we are in controversy for very existence, then I contend that all the resources, all the means within ourselves, individually, collectively, and nationally, must be resorted to and adopted. [Applause.] But some friend—a doubter—exclaims: "Would you disrupt and tear asunder the Constitution?" Where is the Constitution? Would you tread and trample upon that sacred instrument, and no longer acknowledge its binding force, no longer be bound by its compromises and decrees? I answer, no. The Constitution, by the necessity of the controversy, is cast behind the arena of the strife. May it rest there safe, until the present strife being over it shall be restored to its original purity and force. Like the silyl leaves when lost, the remainder become more valuable in our eyes, and in the midst of the carnage we will clasp to our bosoms that instrument whose worth has never been transcended by human efforts. Soldiers, to what means shall we resort for our existence? This war is devoted not merely to victory and its mighty honors, not merely to the triumph which moves in glorious procession along our streets. But it is a war which moves towards the protection of our homes, the safety of our families, the continuation of our domestic altars, and the protection of our firesides. In such a war we are justified, are bound to resort to every force within our power. Having opened the port of Beaufort, we shall be able to export millions of cotton bales, and from these we may supply the sinews of war. Do you say that we should not seize the cotton? No; you are clear upon that point. Suppose the munitions of war are within our reach, would we not be guilty of shameful neglect, if we availed not ourselves of the opportunity to use them? Suppose the enemy's slaves were arrayed against you, would you, from any squeamishness, refrain from pointing against them the hostile gun, and prostrating them in death? No; that is your object and purport; and if you would seize their property, open their ports, and even destroy their lives, I ask you whether you would not use their slaves? Whether you would not arm their slaves [great applause] and carry them in battalions against their masters? [Renewed and tumultuous applause.] If necessary to save this Government, I would plunge their whole country black and white, into one indiscriminate sea of blood, so that we should in the end have a Government which would be the viceregent of God. Let us have no more of this dilettante system, but let us work with a will and a purpose that cannot be mistaken. Let us not put aside from too great a delicacy of motives. Soldiers, you know no such reasoning as this. You have arms in your hands, and those arms are placed there for the purpose of exterminating an enemy unless he submits to law, order, and the Constitution. If he will not submit, explode every thing that comes in your way. Set fire to the cotton. Explode the cotton. Take property wherever you may find it. Take the slave and bestow him upon the non-slaveholder if you please. [Great applause.] Do to them as they would do to us. Raise up a party of interest against the absent slaveholder, distract their counsels, and if this should not be sufficient, take the slave by the hand, place a musket in it, and in God's name bid him strike for the liberty of the human race. [Immense applause.] Now, is this emancipation? Is this abolitionism? I do not regard it as either. It no more partakes of Abolitionism than a spaniel partakes of the nature of the lion. Abolitionism is to free the slaves. It is to make war upon the South for that purpose. It is to place them above their masters in the social scale. It is to assert the great abstract principles of equality among men. But to take the slave and make him an implement of war in overcoming your enemy, that is a military scheme. It is a military necessity, and the commander who does not this, or something equivalent to it, is unworthy of the position he holds, and equally unworthy of your confidence. Emancipation! Are we engaged in a war of emancipation? If so, who commenced the war? Not we. And if we did not commence the war, we cannot be charged with its consequences. Where had its origin? It had its origin in the South. It was and has been a war of the South against the free institutions of the North. Let me illustrate. Are we to free their slaves? We do not intend it. Do you recollect the resolution which was passed the last session of Congress, which distinctly declares that it never was intended by anybody in this wide land to free the slave. "Compromise," too, has been talked of this matter. Why did they not compromise? Because it was not their object. I say this fearlessly, for I infer it from scenes in which I was an actor.

At Charleston, I remember, that when satisfied that Mr. Douglas could not, while they remained in the convention, be nominated for the Presidency, they nevertheless withdrew. It was, if my remembrance is not at fault, near the midnight hour, at the prominent headquarters of the southern array, that Messrs. Yancey and Percy Walker entered the room. Those present had previously concluded, upon careful calculations, that the South abiding by the convention, Judge Douglas could not receive two thirds of the vote of the convention. This conclusion was communicated to these gentlemen, who, as I understand, having reviewed the calculations, and expressed their reliance upon them, declared, when leaving, their determination to remain in the convention. It was at the opening of the convention on the very next morning, that Mr. Walker sent to the chair the act of secession of Alabama therefrom. The morning deed declared marvelously, when contrasted with the midnight profession, that the act of secession was but a foregone conclusion, necessary to precipitate the only issue to which they desired to be a party.

Nothing could be satisfactory to these, except that arms should be resorted to, and the fate of revolution abided by. I declare, therefore, that the war is not of our originating, but it has been forced upon us by a crafty enemy—an enemy resolved to do or die; to destroy our free Government, or perish in the attempt. And what is their object? Why, their object is to tear down this proud, noble, and beneficent Government, to establish a reign of terror, anarchy; and confiscation, in the land; to implant upon this our soil the hideous doctrine of the right of secession, so that when one State secedes another may secede, and still another, and still another, so that within forty-eight hours, by the light of their reason and the exactness of their judgment, you may establish on this continent thirty-four independent governments. Thirty-four, did I say? Why, no, not thirty-four merely, but every county and every city, and every village and hamlet; nay, every person who suffers from indigestion at the dinner table may claim the same right; and thus, soldiers, we shall have the confusion and disorder which will plunge into dismay and ruin the best and most benevolent government in the world. Now, what is our object? It is simply to arrest the sway of this fell spirit of secession. It is to maintain our Government, to establish and vindicate law and order, without which neither happiness nor prosperity can exist. You are engaged, too, by the strength of your arms, to protect our commerce with other nations, and when victory crowns your devotion to your country's cause—as it assuredly will—you will be proudly pointed at as the champions of American rights, as men who have maintained their dearest principles, and as those who, from this time forward, shall live in the most grateful remembrance of the living, and whose names shall descend with marks of imperishable honor to the remotest posterity. But, soldiers, to accomplish all this, not merely arms are necessary, not merely men to carry them, but that powerful and overwhelming spirit which constitutes and makes us men, that spirit which lifts us above the creeping things of the earth, and brings near the Deity, in accomplishing his work on earth. Oh, then, let us not think that the "battle is to the strong"—let us not merely depend on discipline and order, but with that fervidness of soul which inspired our fathers at Bunker Hill, and Saratoga, and Yorktown, come forward and give effect to all that is valuable in the name of patriotism, and honor, and religion.

Never, no never, will you succeed until that spirit is once more manifested and developed which actuated the soldiers of Cromwell, who, on the field, invoked the Lord their God to arise. So let it be with us. We must be at least one with Him in spirit. Let us, like Cromwell, invoke the Almighty blessing, and, clothed with the panoply of patriotism and religion, strike for our homes and our country. [Immense cheering.] Let us—oh, let us—without reference to any differences of the past, keep our eyes steadfastly on the great object to be achieved, the nationality and independence of this country, the salvation of civilization from the insults and assaults of barbarism; and then, but not till then, will you be worthy to be recognized as a distinguished portion of our great American army. [Long continued cheering from the whole regiment.]

Upon the conclusion of Colonel Cochrane's speech, loud and repeated calls being made for the Secretary of War, Mr. Cameron came before the regiment, and said:

Soldiers: It is too late for me to make you a speech to-night, but I will say that I heartily approve every sentiment uttered by your noble commander. The doctrines which he has laid down I approve of as if they were my own words. They are my sentiments—sentiments which will not only lead you to victory, but which will in the end reconstruct this our glorious Federal Constitution. It is idle to talk about treating with these rebels upon their own terms. We must meet them as our enemies, treat them as enemies, and punish them as enemies, until they shall learn to behave themselves. Every means which God has placed in our hands it is our duty to use for the purpose of protecting ourselves. I am glad of the opportunity to say here, what I have already said elsewhere, in these few words, that I approve the doctrines this evening enunciated by Colonel Cochrane. [Loud and prolonged cheering.]

APPENDIX.

Democratic National Convention.

1864, August 29—The body met at 12 o'clock, in Chicago, Ill., and was called to order by the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, August Belmont, who said :

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: We are assembled here to-day, at the National Democratic Convention, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency of the United States. This task, at all times a most important and arduous one, has, by the sad events of our civil war, assumed an importance and responsibility of the most fearful nature. Never, since the formation of our government, has there been an assemblage, the proceedings of which were fraught with more momentous and vital results, than those which must flow from your action. Towards you, gentlemen, are directed at this moment the anxious fears and doubts, not only of millions of American citizens, but also of every lover of civil liberty throughout the world. [Cheers.] In your hands rests, under the ruling of an all-wise Providence, the future of this Republic. Four years of misrule by a sectional, fanatical and corrupt party, have brought our country to the very verge of ruin. The past and present are sufficient warnings of the disastrous consequences which would befall us if Mr. Lincoln's re-election should be made possible by our want of patriotism and unity. The inevitable results of such a calamity must be the utter disintegration of our whole political and social system amidst bloodshed and anarchy, with the great problems of liberal progress and self-government jeopardized for generations to come.

The American people have at last awakened to the conviction that a change of policy and administration can alone stay our downward course; and they will rush to the support of your candidate and platform, provided you will offer to their suffrage a tried patriot, who has proved his devotion to the Union and the Constitution, and provided that you pledge him and yourselves to maintain that hallowed inheritance by every effort and sacrifice in your power. [Loud applause.] Let us, at the very outset of our proceedings, bear in mind that the dissensions of the last democratic convention were one of the principal causes which gave the reins of government into the hands of our opponents; and let us beware not to fall again into the same fatal error. We must bring at the altar of our country the sacrifice of our prejudices, opinions and convictions—however dear and long cherished they may be—from the moment they threaten the harmony and unity of action so indispensable to our success. We are here not as war democrats, nor as peace democrats, but as citizens of the great Republic, which we will strive to bring back to its former greatness and prosperity, without one single star taken from the brilliant constellation that once encircled its youthful brow. [Cheers.] Let peace and disinterested patriotism, tempered by moderation and forbearance, preside over our deliberations; and, under the blessings of the Almighty, the sacred cause of the Union, the constitution and the laws, must prevail against fanaticism and treason. [Loud cheering.]

Mr. Belmont named as temporary chairman Ex-Governor William Bigler, of Pennsylvania, who said :

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: I am greatly honored in your selection of me to preside over the preliminary deliberations of this body. My acknowledgments for this high compliment, and for the kind greetings just extended to me by this vast concourse of my fellow citizens, will be best manifested by a proper discharge of the duties of the position to which you have called me.

It is not expected, nor would it be befitting in one assuming the temporary Presidency of the convention, that he should enter upon any general discussion of the many interesting topics suggested by the unhappy condition of our country. A brief allusion to the occasion and purposes of our assembling is all that will be necessary. No similar body ever assembled in America with mightier objects before it, or to which such a vast proportion of the American people looked with such profound solicitude for measures to promote the welfare of the country and advance their individual happiness.

The termination of democratic rule in this country was the end of peaceful relations between the States and the people. The elevation of a sectional party to authority at Washington, the culmination of a long indulged and acrimonious war of crimination and re-crimination between extreme men of the North and South, was promptly followed by dissolution and civil war. And in the progress of that war the very bulwarks of civil liberty have been imperiled and the whole fabric brought to the very verge of destruction. And now, at the end of more than three years of a war unparalleled in modern times, for its magnitude and for its barbarous desolations—after more than two millions of men have been called into the field, on our side alone, after the land has been literally drenched in fraternal blood, and wailings and lamentations are heard in every corner of our common country, the hopes of the Union, our cherished object, are in nowise improved. The men now in authority, because of the feud which they have so long maintained with violent and unwise men of the South, and because of a blind fanaticism about an institution of some of the States, in relation to which they have no duties to perform and no responsibilities to bear, are rendered incapable of adopting the proper means to rescue our country—our whole country—from its present lamentable condition. Then, gentlemen, it is apparent that the first indispensable step to the accomplishment of this great work is the overthrow, by the ballot, of the present administration, and the inauguration of another in its stead, which shall directly and zealously, but temperately and justly, wield all the influence and power of the government to bring about a speedy settlement of the national troubles on the principles of the constitution and on terms honorable and just to all sections, North and South, East and West; one which shall stand unflinchingly by civil and religious liberty; one which, instead of relying solely on its own peculiar dogmas and doctrines and the ravages of the sword, shall refer the national troubles to the people, the fountain of political authority, and to the States under the forms of the constitution; one which shall have no conditions precedent to the restoration of the Union, but which shall diligently seek that result as the consummation of permanent peace amongst the States and renewed fraternity amongst the people.

Gentlemen, we have been commissioned by the people to come here and initiate steps to accomplish these great objects; to select an agent and the agencies in this good work. That the task will be well performed I have unflinching faith; and that the people may sanction and God may bless these means to the desired end, is my sincere prayer.

Rev. Dr. Robert H. Clarkson, of the Episcopal Church, offered a prayer, after which the names of delegates were called, and Committees appointed on Credentials, Organization, and Resolutions. The latter was thus composed :

Committee on Resolutions—Maine, John W. Dana; New Hampshire, Edwin Pease; Massachusetts, George Lunt; Connecticut, Charles R. Ingersoll; Vermont, T. P. Redfield; Rhode Island, Charles S. Bradley; New York, Samuel J. Tilden; New Jersey, Abraham Browning; Pennsylvania, William A. Wallace; Delaware, Charles Brown; Maryland, Thomas G. Pratt; Kentucky, Thomas N. Lindsey and James Guthrie; Ohio, Clement L. Vallandigham; Indiana, James M. Hanna; Illinois, S. S. Marshall; Michigan, Augustus C. Baldwin; Missouri, William A. Hall; Minnesota, E. O. Hamlin; Wisconsin, George B. Smith; Iowa,

And to it were referred the resolutions offered in open convention, as follows:

By Washington Hunt, of New York:

Resolved, That in the future, as in the past, we will adhere with unswerving fidelity to the Union and the Constitution, and insist on maintaining our national unity as the only solid foundation of our strength, security and happiness as a people, and as a framework of government, equally conducive to the welfare and prosperity of all the States both Northern and Southern; and, with a view to terminate the pending conflict and restore the blessings of peace, we are in favor of an armistice, and of earnest, honorable efforts to adjust the terms of settlement and Union on the basis of the constitution of the United States; and, for the final solution of all differences, we would recommend a convention of the States to review the constitution, and adopt such amendments and modifications as may seem necessary, more fully to insure to each State the enjoyment of all its rights and the undisturbed control of its domestic concerns, according to the original intent and purpose of the Federal compact.

By Thomas L. Price, of Missouri:

Resolved, That, in this great crisis of our national history, the freedom and purity of the elective franchise—that sacred right of freemen secured to us by the blood of our fathers, and the guaranties of the constitution, must be maintained against all assaults, intimidation, or interference; and we hereby pledge, each to the other, and all of us to our common country, our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honors, to make common cause with the people of any and every State where the same may be assailed or trampled upon; to the end that the constitutional expression of the popular will and the inestimable right of self-government may be secured for ourselves and our posterity.

By Alexander Long, of Ohio:

Resolved, That a committee, to be composed of one member from each State represented in this Convention, to be selected by the respective delegations thereof, be appointed for the purpose of proceeding forthwith to the city of Washington, and, on behalf of this Convention and the people, to ask Mr. Lincoln to suspend the operation of the pending draft for 500,000 more men until the people shall have an opportunity through the ballot box in a free election—uninfluenced in any manner by military orders or military interference—of deciding the question, now fairly presented to them, of war or peace, at the approaching election in November; and that said committee be and they are hereby instructed to urge upon Mr. Lincoln, by whatever argument they can employ, to stay the flow of fraternal blood, at least so far as the pending draft will continue to augment it, until the people, the source of all power, shall have an opportunity of expressing their will for or against the further prosecution of the war in the choice of candidates for the Presidency.

By Hamilton Alricks, of Pennsylvania:

We, the representatives of the democratic party of the United States of America, in National Convention assembled, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the high offices of President and Vice President, to be voted for at the ensuing election, point with pride and satisfaction to the past history of our common country, her great and marvelous prosperity, under democratic administration. Therefore, in order to restore and preserve the integrity of our once happy Union, re-establish justice and domestic tranquility throughout our borders, promote the general welfare, and secure the return of the blessings of liberty vouchsafed to us by our forefathers, we here renew and declare our unalterable attachment to the Union, and that it must be preserved in its integrity. Believing that the desirable object can be obtained if we profit by the wisdom of our forefathers, we here adopt as our sure and broad platform the constitution of the United States in its length and breadth, and pledge our candidates to maintain, preserve, protect, and defend the same.

Resolved, That we cannot view with indifference the open repudiation and violation of the Monroe doctrine, the establishment of an empire on the ruins of a neighboring republic; and that we view with greater alarm and distrust the fearful strides of the general administration at our national capital towards despotism, in their repeated interference with State rights, with the liberty of speech, of the press, and the right of private property; wherefore, we call on all true and incorruptible patriots to lay aside their partisan prejudices, to look our bleeding country's troubles in the face, calmly to consider the fearful waste of blood and treasure through the unwise acts and misguided policy of the present national administration, and assist in changing our rulers, that we may rescue our beloved country and the liberties of the people from certain ruin.

Resolved, That we will use all honorable means known to civilized nations to bring to a speedy termination the unhappy difficulties that disturb our country.

August 30—The permanent organization was made, with Governor Horatio Seymour, of New York, as President. On taking the chair, he said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: I thank you for the high honor you have conferred upon me in making me President of this body. The importance of the occasion has already been expressed in fitting words by your temporary chairman. I have not language to tell with what anxious solicitude the people of this country watch our proceedings. The prayers of men and women in ten thousand homes go up to heaven that we may be so guided in our deliberations that our action may conduce to the restoration of our Union, to the return of peace, and the maintenance of liberty in this land. [Cheers.]

It is not for me to forecast your action—it is not for me to say what methods may be adopted to relieve this afflicted country of ours. But while I may not speak on that subject, I can, with propriety, allude to the sentiments which animate you all. There is no man here who does not love the Union. [Cheers.] There is no man here who does not desire peace. [Cheers.] There is no man here who is not resolved to uphold the great principles of constitutional freedom. [Applause.]

I know that the utmost importance attaches to all your proceedings. I know it is of vital consequence that you should select such men, as your candidates, as enjoy the confidence of the American people. But beyond platforms and beyond candidates, there are other considerations of still greater significance and importance. When you wish to know what the policy of party will be, you must strive to learn the passions and sentiments which animate that party. Four years ago, in this city, there was an assemblage of citizens from the different parts of our country, who met here for the purpose of placing in nomination a candidate for the Presidency. They put forth declarations that they would not interfere with the rights of the States of this Union. They did not intend to destroy our country—they did not mean to break down its institutions. But unhappily they were influenced by sectional prejudices, by fanaticism, by bigotry, and by intolerance; and we have found in the course of the last four years that their animating sentiments have overruled their declarations and their promises, and swept them on, step by step, until they have been carried on to actions from which at the outset they would have shrunk away with horror. Even now, when war has desolated our land, has laid its heavy burthens upon labor, when bankruptcy and ruin overhang us, they will not have Union except upon conditions unknown to our constitution; they will not let the shedding of blood cease, even for a little time, to see if Christian charity, or the wisdom of statesmanship may not work out a method to save our country. Nay, more than this, they will not listen to a proposal for peace which does not offer that which this government has no right to ask.

This administration cannot now save this Union if it would. It has, by its proclamations, by vindictive legislation, by displays of hate and passion, placed obstacles in its own pathway which it cannot overcome, and has hampered its own freedom of action by unconstitutional acts. It cannot be said that the failure of its policy is due to the want of courage and devotion on the part of our armies. [Cheers.] Never in the world's history have soldiers given up their lives more freely than have those of the armies which have battled for the flag of our Union in the Southern States. The world will hold that they have done all that arms can do; and had wise statesmanship secured the fruits of their victories, to-day there would have been peace in our land. [Much applause.] But while our soldiers have desperately struggled to carry our banner southward to the Gulf of Mexico, even now the government declares that rebellious discontent has worked northward to the shores of the great lakes. The guaranteed right of the people to bear arms has been suspended by the edict of a General up to the very borders of Canada; so that American servitude is put in bold contrast with British liberty.* This

* Supposed to refer to this order:

HEADQUARTERS NORTHERN DEPARTMENT,
COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1864.

[SPECIAL ORDER NO. 53.]

During the ensuing sixty days no fire arms, powder, or ammunition of any kind will be received, transported, or delivered by any railroad, express, or other forwarding company within the States comprised within the limits of this department—viz: Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan administration thus declares to the world it has now no faith in the people of States whose votes placed it in power; and it also admits by such edict that these people have no faith in this administration. While those in power, without remorse, sacrifice the blood and treasure of our people, they will not give up their own passions for the public good. This Union is not held asunder by military ambition. If our political troubles could be referred to the peaceful arbitrament of the contending armies in the field, our Union would be restored, the rights of States would be guaranteed, the sacredness of homes and persons again respected, and an insulted judiciary would again administer the laws of the land. Let not the ruin of our country be charged to our soldiers. It is not due to their teachings or their fanaticism. In my constant official intercourse with them, I have never heard uttered one sentiment of hatred towards the people of the South. Beyond all men they value the blessings of peace and the virtues of mercy, of gentleness and of charity; while many who stay at home cry havoc, and demand that no mercy shall be shown. The bigotry of fanatics and the intrigues of placemen have made the bloody pages of the history of the past three years.

But if the administration cannot save this Union, we can. [Loud applause.] Mr. Lincoln values many things above the Union: we put it first of all. [Continued cheering.] He thinks a proclamation worth more than peace; we think the blood of our people more precious than the edicts of the President. [Cheers.] There are no hindrances in our pathways to Union and to peace. We demand no conditions for the restoration of our Union; we are shackled with no hates, no prejudices, no passions. We wish for fraternal relationship with the people of the South. [Applause.] We demand for them what we demand for ourselves—the full recognition of the rights of States. We mean that every star on our nation's banner shall shine with an equal lustre.

In the coming election men must decide with which of the two parties, into which our people are divided, they will act. If they wish for the Union they will act with that party which does now and always did love and reverence that Union. If they wish for peace, they will act with those who sought to avert this war, and who now seek to restore good will and harmony among all sections of our country. If they care for their rights as persons and the sacredness of their homes, they will act with those who have stood up to resist arbitrary arrests, despotic legislation, and the overthrow of the judiciary. [Loud and continued applause.] If, upon the other hand, they are willing to continue the present policy of government and condition of affairs, let them act with that organization which made the present condition of our country. And there are many good men who will be led to do this by their passions and prejudices; and our land swarms with placemen who will hold upon power and plunder with a deadly grasp. But as for us, we are resolved that the party who have made the history of our country, since their advent to power, seem like some unnatural and terrible dream shall be overthrown. [Applause.] Four years ago it had its birth upon this spot. Let us see, by our action, that it shall die here where it was born. [Loud and continued cheering.]

In the political contest in which we are now engaged, we do not seek partisan advantages. We are battling for the rights of those who belong to all political organizations. We mean that their rights of speech shall be unimpaired, although that right may be used to denounce us. We intend that rights of conscience shall be protected, although mistaken views of duty may turn the temples of religion into theatres for partisan denunciation. We mean that home rights and the sacredness of the fireside shall be respected by those in authority, no matter what political views may be held by those who sit beneath their roof-

—without a permit from these headquarters; from Gen. A. P. Hovey, Indianapolis, Indiana; Gen. H. E. Paine, Springfield, Illinois; or Lieut. Col. B. H. Hill, Detroit, Michigan, unless shipped by or delivered to an authorized officer of the United States Government.

Dealers in these articles, or others having them in their possession, will in no event be permitted to sell or deliver them during that time.

It is the duty of all military commanders and all provost marshals and their assistants to see that this order is enforced, and to seize all such articles as may be clandestinely sold, shipped, or delivered in evasion of it. Such property will at once be reported to these headquarters for the decision of the commander as to its disposition.

Forwarding, selling, or delivering such articles during this time, if now in transitu, excepting that they may be forwarded by such railroads as now have them in possession for safe keeping, will be considered an evasion of this order. The facts of such forwarding will be reported to these headquarters.

By command of Major-General Heintzelman:

C. H. POTTER, A. A. General.

trees. When the democratic party shall have gained power, we shall not be less, but more tenacious upon these subjects. We have forbore much because those who are now charged with the conduct of public affairs knew but little about the principles of our government. We were unwilling to present an appearance of fictitious opposition. But when we shall have gained power, that official who shall violate one principle of law, one single right of the humblest man in our land, shall be punished by the full rigor of the law; it matters not if he sits in the Presidential chair or holds a humbler office under our government. [Cheers.]

We have had upon this floor a touching and significant proof of the folly of this administration, who have driven from its support those upon whom it chiefly leaned at the outset of this rebellion; when their hopes, even for their own personal safety, hung upon the noble men of the border States, [loud and continued cheering,] who, under circumstances most trying, severed family relations and ancient associations, to uphold the flag of our Union. Many of these men are members of this convention. They bear impressed upon their countenances and manifest in their persons the high and generous purposes which animate them; and yet it is true—great God, that it should be true!—that they are stung with a sense of the injustice and ingratitude of low and unworthy men, who have insulted and wronged them, their families and their rights, by vindictive legislation or through the agency of miserable dishonored subordinates. [Cheers.]

Gentlemen, I trust that our proceedings will be marked by harmony. I believe we shall all be animated by the greatness of this occasion. It may be—in all probability it is true—that the future destinies of our country hang upon our action. Let this consideration inspire us with a spirit of harmony. God of our fathers bless us now; lift us above all personal consideration; fill us with a just sense of the great responsibilities which rest upon us, and give again to our land its Union, its peace, and its liberty.

[Enthusiastic and long continued cheering followed the conclusion of Gov. Seymour's remarks. The entire assemblage participated, and thousands of voices united in pouring forth round after round of tumultuous applause. When the enthusiasm had only partially subsided.]

The President came forward, and addressing the assemblage, said: I wish to say one word to the audience here assembled. The delegates who compose this convention have come up from different parts of the Union for the purpose of acting upon your most important interests. We are most happy that you should be the witnesses of our proceedings, but one thing you must bear in mind: That you are not members of this body, and, while our hearts will be cheered to find that patriotic sentiments are received as patriotic sentiments should be by the American people, you must not undertake to attempt to influence the deliberations of the Convention, or allow your feelings to take such form of expression as are unbecoming in the presence of those upon whom rest the responsibilities of the occasion. [Cheers, followed by loud calls for Vallandigham, mingled with applause and hisses.]

was then adopted, as reported by Mr. Guthrie, Chairman of the Committee:

Resolved, That in the future, as in the past, we will adhere with unswerving fidelity to the Union under the Constitution as the only solid foundation of our strength, security and happiness as a people, and as a framework of government equally conducive to the welfare and prosperity of all the States, both northern and southern.

Resolved, That this convention does explicitly declare, as the sense of the American people, that after four years of failure to restore the Union by the experiment of war, during which, under the pretense of a military necessity, or war power higher than the Constitution, the Constitution itself has been disregarded in every part, and public liberty and private right alike trodden down and the material prosperity of the country essentially impaired—justice, humanity, liberty and the public welfare demand that immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities, with a view to an ultimate convention of the States, or other peaceable means, to the end that at the earliest practicable moment peace may be restored on the basis of the Federal Union of the States.

Resolved, That the direct interference of the military authorities of the United States in the recent elections held in Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri and Delaware, was a shameful violation of the Constitution; and a repetition of such acts in the approaching election will be held as revolutionary, and resisted with all the means and power under our control.

Resolved, That the aim and object of the Democratic party is to preserve the Federal Union and the rights of the States unimpaired; and they hereby declare that they consider that the administrative usurpation of extraordinary and dangerous powers not granted by the constitution; the subversion of the civil by military law in States not in insurrection; the arbitrary military arrest, imprisonment, trial and sentence of American citizens in States where civil law exists in full force; the suppression of freedom of speech and of the press; the denial of the right of asylum; the open and avowed disregard of State rights; the employment of unusual test-oaths, and the interference with and denial of the right of the people to bear arms in their defence, is calculated to prevent a restoration of the Union and the perpetuation of a government depriving its just powers from the consent of the governed.

Resolved, That the shameful disregard of the administration to its duty in respect to our fellow-citizens who now are, and long have been, prisoners of war in a suffering condition, deserves the severest reprobation, on the score alike of public policy and common humanity.

Resolved, That the sympathy of the Democratic party is heartily and earnestly extended to the soldiery of our army and sailors of our navy, who are, and have been in the field and on the sea, under the flag of their country; and, in the event of its attaining power, they will receive all the care, protection, and regard that the brave soldiers and sailors of the Republic have so nobly earned.

NOMINATIONS OF GEO B. McCLELLAN AND GEORGE H. PENDLETON.

Mr. John P. Stockton, of New Jersey, in behalf of the delegation of that State, nominated General George B. McClellan.

Mr. S. S. Cox, of Ohio, seconded the nomination.

Mr. Sansbury, of Delaware, nominated Governor Powell, of Kentucky. Mr. Powell returned his thanks to the gentleman, but he firmly believed the crisis demanded the candidate of the party should come from a non-slaveholding State. Believing so, he begged the gentleman and his colleague from the gallant State of Delaware to withdraw his name.

Mr. Stuart, on behalf of a portion of the Ohio delegation, nominated Thomas H. Seymour.

Mr. Wickliffe, on behalf of a portion of the delegation from Kentucky, nominated Franklin Pierce, but subsequently withdrew it.

The day was spent in debate upon the merits of the candidates.

August 31—The vote for President was taken. The first ballot, as taken, stood: McClellan, 174; Thomas H. Seymour, 38; Horatio Seymour, 12; Charles O'Connor, $\frac{1}{2}$; Blank, $\frac{1}{2}$. As revised and finally declared, it was: McClellan, 202 $\frac{1}{2}$; Thos. H. Seymour, 23 $\frac{1}{2}$, as follows:

Maine—seven for McClellan.
New Hampshire—five for McClellan.
Vermont—five for McClellan.
Massachusetts—twelve for McClellan.
Rhode Island—four for McClellan.
Connecticut—nine for McClellan.
New York—thirty-three for McClellan.
New Jersey—seven for McClellan.
Pennsylvania—twenty-six for McClellan.
Delaware—two for Thomas H. Seymour.
Maryland—seven for Thomas H. Seymour.
Kentucky—eleven for McClellan.
Ohio—fifteen for McClellan, six for Thomas H. Seymour.
Indiana—nine and a half for McClellan, and three and a half for Thomas H. Seymour.
Illinois—sixteen for McClellan.
Michigan—eight for McClellan.
Missouri—seven for McClellan, four for Thomas H. Seymour.

Minnesota—four for McClellan.
Wisconsin—eight for McClellan.
Iowa—eight for McClellan.
Kansas—three for McClellan.
California—five for McClellan.
Oregon—three for McClellan.

Mr. Vallandigham moved that the nomination of George B. McClellan be made the unanimous sense of the Convention, which was seconded by Mr. Keon.

Governor Powell briefly addressed the Convention, pledging his most earnest efforts for the success of the ticket. Judge Allen, of Ohio, and others, made brief speeches, and the question was then taken on making the nomination unanimous, which was declared carried amid deafening applause.

Mr. Wickliffe offered a resolution to the effect that Kentucky expects the first act of McClellan, when inaugurated in March next, will be to open Abraham Lincoln's prison doors and let the captives free.

The Convention then proceeded to vote for Vice President.

The first ballot resulted as follows:

James Guthrie, 65 $\frac{1}{2}$; George H. Pendleton, 55 $\frac{1}{2}$; Daniel W. Voorhees, 13; George W. Cass, 26; Augustus C. Dodge, 9; J. H. Catton, 16; L. W. Powell, 32 $\frac{1}{2}$; John S. Phelps, 8; blank, $\frac{1}{2}$.

On the second ballot New York threw its whole vote for Mr. Pendleton, its chairman stating that its former vote for Guthrie was against his wishes. The other candidates were then withdrawn, and Mr. Pendleton, of Ohio, was unanimously nominated, who then took the stand, and said:

MR. PRESIDENT, AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: I have received with profound sensibility this mark of the confidence and kindness of the Democracy of the United States. I can say no more than this now. You will consider said all that is proper for me to say upon an occasion of this kind. I can only promise, in future, to endeavor, with the same fidelity that I have tried to exercise in the past—in entire devotion to those principles which lie at the very foundation of our government, and which are the basis of the Federal Constitution and of the rights of the States and of the liberties of the individual citizens—[immense applause]—shall endeavor to be faithful to those principles which lie at the very bottom of the organization of the democratic party. And I hope, ay, my friends, animated with the fervent hope that if, by the selection of proper men, we can give a true and faithful application to those principles, we will again build up the shattered fabric of our government and hand it to the next generation as we received it from the past—the most beautiful structure of government which the world has ever seen. I again tender to you, gentlemen, my grateful acknowledgments for the compliment you have done me, and leave the floor. [Loud and long-continued cheers.]

After a vote of thanks to the officers of the Convention, with nine cheers for the ticket, the Convention adjourned, subject to the call of the National Committee, in pursuance of this action, taken early in the session:

Mr. Wickliffe said the delegates from the West were of the opinion that circumstances may occur between now and the 4th of March next which will make it proper for the Democracy of the country to meet in convention again, and he therefore moved the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Convention shall not be dissolved by adjournment at the close of its business, but shall remain as organized, subject to be called at any time and place that the Executive National Committee shall designate.

Gen. McClellan's Acceptance.

LETTER ACCEPTING THE NOMINATION.

ORANGE, N. J., September 8, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of my nomination, by the Democratic National Convention recently assembled at Chicago, as their candidate at the next election for President of the United States.

It is unnecessary for me to say to you that this nomination comes to me unsought. I am happy to know that when the nomination was made, the record of my public life was kept in view.

The effect of long and varied service in the army during war and peace, has been to strengthen and make indelible in my mind and heart the love and reverence for the Union, Constitution, laws, and flag of our country impressed upon me in early youth. These feelings have thus far guided the course of my life, and must continue to do so to its end.

The existence of more than one government over the region which once owned our flag is incompatible with the peace, the power, and the happiness of the people.

The preservation of our Union was the sole avowed object for which the war was commenced. It should have been conducted for that object only, and in accordance with those principles which I took occasion to declare when in active service.

Thus conducted, the work of reconciliation would have been easy, and we might have reaped the benefits of our many victories on land and sea.

The Union was originally formed by the exercise of a spirit of conciliation and compromise. To restore and preserve it the same spirit must prevail in our councils and in the hearts of the people. The re-establishment of the Union in all its integrity is and must continue to be the indispensable condition in any settlement. So soon as it is clear, or even probable, that our present adversaries are ready for peace, upon the basis of the Union, we should exhaust all the resources of statesmanship practiced by civilized nations and taught by the traditions of the American people, consistent with the honor and interests of the country, to secure such peace, re-establish the Union, and guarantee for the future the constitutional rights of every State. The Union is the one condition of peace—we ask no more.

Let me add, what I doubt not was, although unexpressed, the sentiment of the Convention, as it is of the people they represent, that when any one State is willing to return to the Union, it should be received at once, with a full guaranty of all its constitutional rights.

If a frank, earnest, and persistent effort to obtain these objects should fail, the responsibility for ulterior consequences will fall upon those who remain in arms against the Union. But the Union must be preserved at all hazards.

I could not look in the face of my gallant comrades of the army and navy, who have survived so many bloody battles, and tell them that their labors and the sacrifice of so many of our slain and wounded brethren had been in vain; that we had abandoned that Union for which we have so often periled our lives. A vast majority of our people, whether in the army and navy or at home, would, as I would, hail with unbounded joy the permanent restoration of peace, on the basis of the Union under the Constitution, without the effusion of another drop of blood. But no peace can be permanent without Union.

As to the other subjects presented in the resolutions of the Convention, I need only say that I should seek in the Constitution of the United States, and the laws framed in accordance therewith, the rule of my duty and the limitations of executive power; endeavor to restore economy in public expenditure, re-establish the supremacy of law, and, by the operation of a more vigorous nationality, resume our commanding position among the nations of the earth.

The condition of our finances, the depreciation of the paper money, and the burdens thereby imposed on labor and capital, show the necessity of a return to a sound financial system; whilst the rights of citizens and the rights of States, and the binding authority of law over President, army, and people, are subjects of not less vital importance in war than in peace. Believing that the views here expressed are those of the Convention and the people you represent, I accept the nomination.*

I realize the weight of the responsibility to be borne, should the people ratify your choice. Conscious of my own weakness, I can only seek fervently the guidance of the Ruler of the Universe, and relying on His all-powerful aid, do my best to restore union and peace to a suffering people, and to establish and guard their liberties and rights.

I am, gentlemen, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN.

Hon. HORATIO SEYMOUR and others, Committee.

LETTER OF GENERAL M'CLELLAN.

ORANGE, October 13, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: In consequence of an absence of several days from home, your letter of the 8th did not meet my eye until to-day.

I accept with pride the honorary membership of the Legion you have done me the honor to call by my name. No greater compliment could have been paid to me than this association of my name with a society composed of my comrades in the present war. My love and gratitude for them have remained unchanged during our long separation, and I have watched with the most intense interest their noble and persistent gallantry in the many battles they have fought under the commanders who have succeeded me in the Army of the Potomac. You and they may rest satisfied that I remain the same man that I was when I had the honor to command the Army of the Potomac, and that I shall never willingly disappoint their confidence.

With my sincere thanks for the compliment you have paid me, and my earnest wishes for the prosperity of my former comrades, and of our country, I am, very respectfully and truly, your friend,

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN.

Speeches and Letters of Mr. Pendleton.

HIS SPEECH AT DAYTON.

[From the Dayton (Ohio) Empire, Sept. 17.]

We had last night another of those magnificent demonstrations, now so common everywhere, showing conclusively with what force the tide of public sentiment is moving against Abraham Lincoln and in favor of the Democracy. Mr. Pendleton came to the city yesterday evening after the Empire had gone to press, and consequently too late to make any notice of his arrival. Nevertheless, the news spread rapidly, a band was engaged, and a serenade appointed at eight o'clock. As Mr. Pendleton was the guest of Mr. Vallandigham, a crowd soon began to assemble in front of Mr. Vallandigham's residence, which was augmented to thousands by the arrival of an immense procession, headed by the band.

Mr. Pendleton being loudly called, came forward and spoke as follows:

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I thank you for this very flattering compliment: I thank you for this manifestation of the hospitality of Dayton, which has become proverbial throughout the United States.

"At four o'clock this afternoon I did not expect to be here this evening. I came unexpectedly, on purely personal business, disconnected with public affairs. I had no idea of seeing any number of my fellow-citizens or discussing political questions.

"This immense concourse thus suddenly convened fills me with renewed hope—it gives me confidence that soon again you will be called together, not as now to commence a vigorous contest, but to rejoice over its result, to rejoice that the powers of the Government will again be in the possession of the Democratic party, whose beneficent principles, recently solemnly announced in national convention, will bring us peace, maintain the rights of the States, re-invigorate the Union, and, with peace and union, will secure us the blessings of personal liberty, material prosperity, and national power. But I will not repay your kindness by detaining you with a speech; I intended only to thank you for the honor you have done me, and now I beg leave to wish you good night."

Mr. Vallandigham was next called, and responded in a

*Mr. Vallandigham, in a public speech at Sidney, Ohio, September 24, thus alludes to the Chicago platform:

"I claim, as the member from Ohio of the Committee on Resolutions in that Convention, to have official personal knowledge that he (Gen. McClellan) is mistaken. The two principal points in that letter of acceptance to which I object were brought before the committee. The one containing the threat of future war was unanimously rejected. The other to the effect that, until the States and people of the South had returned to the Union, we would not exhaust those 'arts of statesmanship,' as they are called, received but three votes in that committee, though presented almost in the very words of the letter itself."

masterly speech of half an hour, which was repeatedly interrupted by cheers. He spoke in defence of the Democratic party and of State rights and peace, and in support of the Chicago platform. The Democratic party was a State rights party—a constitutional party—a Union party—and just now a peace party. It was his party, and its candidates were his candidates. It bore the Ark of the Covenant; it carried the fortunes of the Republic, and in its success lay the only hope of the Republic. The Chicago platform enunciated its policy and principles by authority, and was binding upon every Democrat, and by them the democratic administration must and should be governed. It was the only authorized exposition of the Democratic creed, and he repudiated all others. The unity and harmony of the party were essential to success, and without success in November the country was lost. In conclusion, he declared his purpose to vote for the nominees of the Chicago Convention as the only hope of securing the defeat of Lincoln, and the rescue of the republic.

HIS SPEECH IN NEW YORK.

Mr. Pendleton was serenaded on Monday night, October 24, at the New York Hotel, by the McClellan Legion, an association composed of former soldiers of the Army of the Potomac. An audience of several thousand persons having assembled, Mr. Pendleton was introduced by Hon. John Van Buren, when he said:

I thank you for this manifestation of your kind feeling toward myself. I am the more grateful for it as it comes from men who have stood in the forefront of danger, and periled their lives for their country. [Loud cheers.] I accept it as an evidence of your confidence in and of your sympathy with my devotion to the Union and the Constitution. ["Three cheers for George H. Pendleton."]

I have rarely found it necessary to reply to any personal attack. A friend has just handed me a pamphlet, which he tells me has extensive circulation both here and in the army. It professes to be a record of my speeches and votes in Congress, and to prove from them my hostility to the Republic. It professes to be published by the "Union Congressional Committee," and to be compiled from the Congressional Globe, to which it appeals for its entire accuracy. On the seventh page of that pamphlet I am charged with having voted against certain resolutions on the 7th July, 1864. Now, if any of you gentlemen will examine the Globe, or the file of my daily newspaper of your city, or will even tax his recollection, he will find that Congress adjourned on the 4th day of July, 1864. [Great laughter.] From this specimen of fraud and forgery I leave you to judge of the credibility of the whole fabrication.

I was born in Ohio; I have lived all my life in the Northwest; I know the sentiment of the people; I sympathize entirely with it. They are attached by every tie of affection and interest to this Union. [Loud cheering.]

Unlike New York, they have never known another Government. They never existed as a political community before this Government was formed, and their hearts cling to this Government with indelible tenacity. [Great applause.] Unlike you, they are inland people, chiefly devoted to agriculture. As an integral and controlling portion of the Union, they have prestige and power; they fear from disunion isolation from the world and the loss of that prestige and power. [Cheers.] Their interest requires that they should have speedy and easy communication with the ocean, and this they intend to have both by the Gulf of Mexico and the city of New York, by conciliation and in peace if they can, by all the force and power which a teeming population and a fruitful soil give them if they must. [Loud cheers.] They believe that the first step towards maintaining the Union is the election of General McClellan. [Great cheering.] They believe that the restoration of the Democratic party to power will produce Union. [Cheers.] They believe the policy of this Administration toward both the Southern and Northern States is fatal to the Union. ["That's so."] General McClellan, in his Harrison-Landing letter, said: "Neither confiscation of property, nor political executions of persons, nor territorial organization of States, nor forcible abolition of slavery, should be for one moment thought of." [Cheers.]

In his letter of acceptance he said: "The Union was originally formed by the exercise of a spirit of conciliation and compromise. To restore and preserve it, a like spirit must prevail in the councils of the country and in the hearts of the people." [Cheers.]

The Democratic party is pledged to an unswerving fidelity to the Union under the Constitution. [Cheers.] It is pledged to "the restoration of peace on the basis of the Federal Union of the States." [Loud applause.]

We believe, nay, we know, that if this party shall be restored to power, if this policy shall prevail, the Union shall be restored, State after State will return to us, and the echoes of our rejoicing will come down to us from the vaults of Heaven itself, in token that Deity approves that statesmanship which tempers all its policy with moderation and justice and conciliation. [Cheers.]

When next I meet you I hope we may have already entered on that work. Again, gentlemen, I thank you for your attention, and wish you good night. [Loud and long cheers followed the speech.]

HIS LETTERS.

The following was written to a Democratic meeting in Missouri:

CINCINNATI, September 23, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: I regret much that it will be out of my power to attend the mass meeting which you propose to hold on the 6th proximo. The cordial terms of your invitation, the evidences of kindness which I have received at the hands of those whom you represent, and my own desire to catch an inspiration of your faith and courage and zeal for the interests of our country, combine to make me regret the necessity to decline your invitation.

I promised to be with you, but when I made the promise I expected to be zealous and active, in season and out of season, urging, by every consideration which appeals to patriots, the utmost exertion to secure the success of the nominees at Chicago.

Your kindness has put me in a position where delicacy forbids such efforts. I could only say—what I have often before said—that if success crowns the work of the Democratic party, every aspiration of my heart would be gratified by, as every effort of my life would be directed to, the preservation of the Union, the maintenance of the Constitution, and the securing of all their rights to the States, and of all their liberties to the people. Very truly, yours,

GEO. H. PENDLETON.

CINCINNATI, October 17, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: I have received your friendly letter. Malignant misrepresentations and falsehoods are so frequent in our political struggles, that I have rarely undertaken to correct or refute them.

I make no professions of a new faith, and only repeat my reiterated professions of an old one, when I say that there is no one who cherishes a greater regard for the Union, who has a higher sense of its inestimable benefits, who would more earnestly labor for its restoration by all means which will effect that end than myself.

The Union is the guarantee of the peace, the power, the prosperity of this people, and no man would deprecate more heartily, or oppose more persistently, the establishment of another Government over any portion of the territory within its limits.

I am in favor of exacting no conditions, insisting upon no terms not prescribed in the Constitution, and I am opposed to any course of policy which will defeat the re-establishment of the Government upon its old foundation, and in its territorial integrity.

I am, very truly, yours, &c.,

GEORGE H. PENDLETON.

Hon. JOHN B. HASKIN, New York.

CINCINNATI, October 18, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: I have received your letter. In the very beginning of this war, in the first days of the extra session of 1861, I said, in my place in Congress, that I would vote for all measures necessary to enable the Government to maintain its honor and dignity, and prevent disaster to its flag. I have done so. I thought that by the adoption of such measures the faith of the Government was pledged to the troops in the field, and must not be forfeited by inadequate supplies. I never gave a vote which was incompatible with this sentiment.

All appropriations, pure and simple, for the support and efficiency of the army and navy, had my cordial concurrence. It was only when they were connected with other and improper appropriations; when by reason of their popularity they were loaded down with fraudulent items for the benefit of contractors or speculators, and every attempt to separate them failed; when they were made a stalking-horse for some Abolition scheme, that I was constrained reluctantly to vote against the whole bill.

But I repeat, that I voted against no bill which was confined simply to the object of supplies for the army and the navy.

I am, very truly, yours,

GEO. H. PENDLETON.

Hon. C. L. WARD, Philadelphia.

MR. VALLANDIGHAM'S LETTER ON THE CHICAGO PLATFORM, &C.

SHERMAN HOUSE, CHICAGO, October 22.

To the Editor of the New York News:

In the World of the 20th I observed an article copied from the Albany Argus, relating to Judge Advocate Holt's "Great Copperhead Conspiracy," and which contains the following:

"Mr. Vallandigham was in a miserable minority in the Chicago Convention. He sought to be Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, and was beaten two to one. He led the opposition to McClellan, and after his letter of acceptance threw up his engagements to speak."

Now I have refrained in every speech, except the first—and I have made many in support of the Democratic candidates for President and Vice President—from any allusion to the private history of the Chicago Convention, and did not propose to refer to it further till after the election. But I do not choose to suffer the foregoing to pass unnoticed even now. It would be difficult to compress more misrepresentation, in a small way, within the same compass.

1. Mr. Vallandigham was not "in a miserable minority at the Chicago Convention," and no one knows it better than the man Cassidy, who wrote, and Marble who endorses the statement. The latter I hand over to ex-Mayor Opdyke for judgment.

2. Mr. Vallandigham was not "beaten two to one" for the Chairmanship of the Committee on Resolutions. Through the artifices of Cassidy, Tilden, and other New York politicians, Mr. Guthrie, of Kentucky, received twelve votes to his eight for that post; but Mr. Guthrie was himself afterwards emphatically repudiated by the Convention when presented by "the ring" as their candidate for the Vice Presidency. Mr. Vallandigham wrote the second, the material resolution of the Chicago platform, and carried it through the sub-Committee and the General Committee, in spite of the most desperate, persistent opposition on the part of Cassidy and his friends. Mr. Cassidy himself in an adjoining room laboring to defeat it. But the various substitutes never at any time received more than three votes.

3. Mr. Vallandigham did not "lead the opposition to McClellan," but confined his efforts almost exclusively to the question of platform. He did, indeed, vote against General McClellan on the first, but for him on the revised ballot, and moved that the nomination be made unanimous; whereupon Cassidy threw up his hat and shouted, and he and all his fellows proclaimed Vallandigham a very proper man.

4. As to engagements to speak in support of the Democratic candidates, Mr. Vallandigham has fulfilled as many as any Democratic speaker in any State, and is now here, in Illinois, on the same errand; and, without immodesty, he may say that he has accomplished quite as much of good for the cause as Cassidy and his Argus. The people lack "confidence" in Cassidy.

5. The secret of this and similar assaults on the part of a certain class of New York politicians is, that they cannot "use" Mr. Vallandigham. Of one thing further let them be assured—neither can they kill him.

6. As to the charge of a "conspiracy" set forth in Judge Advocate Holt's pamphlet, and the eleven specifications summed up by Mr. Horace Greeley, I have only to say that, so far as I am concerned, they are absolute falsehoods and fabrications from beginning to end. They are false in the aggregate and false in detail. More than that, they are as preposterous and ridiculous as they are without foundation; and all this Mr. Judge Advocate Holt, Mary Ann Pitman, and Mr. Horace Greeley very well know.

C. L. VALLANDIGHAM.

Mass Convention of Conservative National Union Men.

Chicago, August 27, Midnight.—A mass Convention of the conservative National Union men was held this afternoon, and was largely attended. The Convention met in Bryan Hall.

Hon. Amos Kendall was elected President, and a list of Vice Presidents was adopted, among whom were representatives from all the States, North and South, with the exception of three or four.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing the policy of the Administration as calculated to impel both sections of the country to interminable warfare; proclaiming a determination to maintain the Union and the Constitution; declaring that the only solution of the existing troubles is in the unrestrained exercise of the elective franchise and displacement of the present Administration; declaring that the declaration of the Southern leaders as well as Mr. Lincoln's ultimatum are alike impracticable, and favoring the earliest peace attainable on the basis of the Constitution and Union.

Among the speakers were Coombs, of Kentucky; Perrin, of New York; Governor Wells, of California, and Reed, of Kentucky.

Additional Addresses and Papers from President Lincoln.

HIS SPEECH TO THE 148TH OHIO REGIMENT.

SOLDIERS OF THE 148TH OHIO: I am most happy to meet you on this occasion. I understand that it has been your honorable privilege to stand, for a brief period, in the defence of your country, and that now you are on your way to your homes. I congratulate you, and those who are waiting to bid you welcome home from the war; and permit me in the name of the people to thank you for the part you have taken in this struggle for the life of the nation. You are soldiers of the Republic, everywhere honored and respected. Whenever I appear before a body of soldiers, I feel tempted to talk to them of the nature of the struggle in which we are engaged. I look upon it as an attempt on the one hand to overwhelm and destroy the national existence, while on our part we are striving to maintain the Government and institutions of our fathers, to enjoy them ourselves, and transmit them to our children and our children's children forever.

To do this the Constitutional Administration of our Government must be sustained, and I beg of you not to allow your minds or your hearts to be diverted from the support of all necessary measures for that purpose, by any miserable picaresque arguments addressed to your pockets, or inflammatory appeal made to your passions and your prejudices.

It is vain and foolish to arraign this man or that for the part he has taken or has not taken, and to hold the Government responsible for his acts. In no Administration can there be perfect equality of action and uniform satisfaction rendered by all.

But this Government must be preserved in spite of the acts of any man or set of men. It is worthy your every effort. Nowhere in the world is presented a Government of so much liberty and equality. To the humblest and poorest amongst us are held out the highest privileges and positions. The present moment finds me at the White House, yet there is as good a chance for your children as there was for my father's.

Again I admonish you not to be turned from your stern purpose of defending our beloved country and its free institutions by any arguments urged by ambitious and designing men, but stand fast to the Union and the old flag.

Soldiers, I bid you God-speed to your homes.

TO THE 164TH OHIO.

SOLDIERS: You are about to return to your homes and your friends, after having, as I learn, performed in camp a comparatively short term of duty in this great contest. I am greatly obliged to you and to all who have come forward at the call of the country.

I wish it might be more generally and universally understood what the country is now engaged in. We have, as all will agree, a free Government, where every man has a right to be equal with every other man. In this great struggle, this form of Government, and every form of human rights, is endangered if our enemies succeed. There is more involved in this contest than is realized by every one. There is involved in this struggle the question whether your children and my children shall enjoy the privileges we have enjoyed.

I say this in order to impress upon you, if you are not already so impressed, that no small matter should divert you from our great purpose. There may be some inequalities in the practical application of our system. It is fair that each man shall pay taxes in exact proportion to the value of his property, but if we should wait before collecting a tax to adjust the taxes upon each man in exact proportion with every other man, we should never collect any tax at all. There may be mistakes made. Sometimes things may be done wrong, while the officers of the Government do all they can to prevent mistakes; but I beg of you as citizens of this great republic, not to let your minds be carried off from the great work we have before us.

The struggle is too large for you to be diverted from it by any small matter. When you return to your homes, rise up to the dignity of a generation of men worthy of a free Government, and we will carry out the work we have commenced.

I return you my sincere thanks, soldiers, for the honor you have done me this afternoon.

HIS LETTER ON THE ADOPTION OF THE NEW CONSTITUTION OF MARYLAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.

HON. H. W. HOFFMAN:

MY DEAR SIR: A convention of Maryland has formed a new Constitution for the State. A public meeting is called for this evening, at Baltimore, to aid in securing its ratification by the people, and you ask a word from me on the occasion. I presume the only feature of the instrument about which there is serious controversy is that which provides for the extinction of slavery.

It needs not to be a secret, and I presume it is no secret, that I wish success to this provision. I desire it on every consideration. I wish all men to be free. I wish the material prosperity of the already free, which I feel secure the extinction of slavery would bring. I wish to see in process of disappearing that only thing which could bring this nation to civil war.

I attempt no argument. Argument upon the question is already exhausted by the able, better informed and more immediately interested sons of Maryland herself. I only add that I shall be gratified exceedingly if the good people of the State shall by their votes ratify the new Constitution.

Yours truly,

A. LINCOLN.

Oct. 19—The President was serenaded at the White House to-night, and, on appearing at an upper window, spoke as follows:

I am notified that this is a compliment paid me by the loyal Marylanders resident in this District. I infer that the adoption of the new Constitution for the State furnishes the occasion, and that, in your view, the extirpation of slavery constitutes the chief merit of the new Constitution.

Most heartily do I congratulate you and Maryland, and the nation, and the world upon the event. I regret that it did not occur two years sooner, which, I am sure, would have saved to the nation more money than would have met all the private loss incident to the measure. But it has come at last, and I sincerely hope its friends may fully realize all their anticipations of good from it, and that its opponents may, by its effects, be agreeably and profitably disappointed.

A word upon another subject. Something said by the Secretary of State, in his recent speech at Auburn, has been construed by some into a threat that, if I shall be beaten at the election, I will, between then and the end of my constitutional term, do what I may be able to ruin the Government. Others regard the fact that the Chicago Convention adjourned not sine die, but to meet again, if called to do so by a particular individual, as the intimation of a purpose that if their nominee shall be elected he will at once seize the control of the Government. I hope the good people will permit themselves to suffer no uneasiness on this point.

I am struggling to maintain the Government, not to overthrow it. I am struggling especially to prevent others from overthrowing it. I therefore say that, if I shall live, I shall remain President until the fourth of next March, and that whoever shall be constitutionally elected therefor, in November, shall be duly installed as President on the fourth of March, and that, in the interval, I shall do my utmost that whoever is to hold the helm for the next voyage shall start with the best possible chance to save the ship.

This is due to the people both on principle and under the Constitution. Their will, constitutionally expressed, is the ultimate law for all. If they should deliberately resolve to have immediate peace, even at the loss of their country and their liberties, I have not the power or the right to resist them. It is their own business, and they must do as they please with their own. I believe, however, they are still resolved to preserve their country and their liberty; and, in this office or out, I am resolved to stand by them.

I may add, that in this purpose to save the country and its liberties no classes of people seem so nearly unanimous as the soldiers in the field and seamen afloat. Do they not have the hardest of it? Who should quail while they do not? God bless the soldiers and seamen, with all their brave commanders.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S INTERVIEW WITH HON. JOHN T. MILLS, OF WISCONSIN.

In August, the President had an interview with Judge Mills, of the fifth judicial circuit, Wisconsin, the political features of which

Judge M. thus reports in a letter to the Grant county (Wis.) Herald:

"Mr. President," said Governor Randall, "why can't you seek seclusion, and play permit for a fortnight? It would reinvigorate you."

"Ah," said the President, "two or three weeks would do me no good. I cannot fly from my thoughts—my solicitude for this great country follows me wherever I go. I do not think it is personal vanity or ambition, though I am not free from these infirmities, but I cannot but feel that the weal or woe of this great nation will be decided in November. There is no programme offered by any wing of the Democratic party but that must result in the permanent destruction of the Union."

"But, Mr. President, General McClellan is in favor of crushing out this rebellion by force. He will be the Chicago candidate."

"Sir, the slightest knowledge of arithmetic will prove to any man that the Rebel armies cannot be destroyed by Democratic strategy. It would sacrifice all the white men of the North to do it. There are now in the service of the United States nearly 200,000 able-bodied colored men, most of them under arms, defending and acquiring Union territory. The Democratic strategy demands that these forces be disbanded, and that the masters be conciliated by restoring them to slavery. The black men who now assist Union prisoners to escape are to be converted into our enemies, in the vain hope of gaining the good will of their masters. We shall have to fight two nations instead of one."

"You cannot conciliate the South if you guarantee to them ultimate success; and the experience of the present war proves their success is inevitable if you fling the compulsory labor of millions of black men into their side of the scale. Will you give our enemies such military advantages as insure success, and then depend on coaxing, flattery and concession to get them back into the Union? Abandon all the posts now garrisoned by black men, take 200,000 men from our side and put them in the battle-field or corn-field against us, and we would be compelled to abandon the war in three weeks."

"We have to hold territory in inclement and sickly places; where are the Democrats to do this? It was a free fight, and the field was open to the War Democrats to put down this Rebellion by fighting against both master and slave, long before the present policy was inaugurated."

"There have been men base enough to propose to me to return to slavery the black warriors of Fort Hudson and Olmsted, and thus win the respect of the masters they fought. Should I do so, I should deserve to be damned in time and eternity. Come what will, I will keep my faith with friend and foe. My enemies pretend I am now carrying on this war for the sole purpose of abolition. So long as I am President, it shall be carried on for the sole purpose of restoring the Union. But no human power can subdue this rebellion without the use of the emancipation policy, and every other policy calculated to weaken the moral and physical forces of the rebellion."

"Freedom has given us 200,000 men, raised on Southern soil. It will give us more yet. Just so much it has subtracted from the enemy, and, instead of alienating the South, there are now evidences of a fraternal feeling growing up between our men and the rank and file of the rebel soldiers. Let my enemies prove to the country that the destruction of slavery is not necessary to a restoration of the Union. I will abide the issue."

PRESENTATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Recently, a committee of loyal colored people of Baltimore formally presented to the President an imperial quarto Bible, splendidly bound, costing $580, as a token of their respect and gratitude to him for his active part in the cause of emancipation. They say that since they have been incorporated in the American family they have been true and loyal, and now stand ready to defend the country, and that they are prepared to be armed and trained to protect and defend the star-spangled banner.

The President replied: "I can only say now, as I have often said before, that it has always been a sentiment with me that all mankind should be free. So far as I have been able, or so far as came within my sphere, I have always acted as I believed was right and just, and have done all I could for the good of mankind. I have in letters and documents sent forth from this office expressed myself better than I can now. In regard to the Great Book, I have only to say that it is the best gift which God has given man. All the good from the Saviour of the world is communicated to us through this book. But for this book we could not know right from wrong. All those things desirable to man are contained in it."

"I return you my sincere thanks for this very elegant copy of the great Book of God which you present."

THE PROTEST OF TENNESSEE—REPLY OF THE PRESIDENT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, D. C.,
October 22, 1864.

Messrs. WM. B. CAMPBELL, THOMAS A. R. NELSON, JAMES T. P. CARTER, JOHN WILLIAMS, A. BLIZZARD, HENRY COOPER, BAILEY PATTON, JOHN LELLYETT, E. ETHERIDGE, JOHN D. PERKMAN:

GENTLEMEN: On the 15th day of this month, as I remember, a printed paper, with a few manuscript interlineations, called a protest, with your names appended thereto, and accompanied by another printed paper purporting to be a proclamation by Andrew Johnson, Military Governor of Tennessee, and also a manuscript paper purporting to be extracts from the Code of Tennessee, was laid before me. The protest, proclamation and extracts are respectively as follows:

[The protest is here recited, and also the proclamation of Governor Johnson, dated September 30, to which it refers, together with a list of the counties in East, Middle, and West Tennessee; also, an extract from the Code of Tennessee, in relation to electors of President and Vice President of the United States, the qualifications of voters for members of the General Assembly, and the places of holding elections of officers of popular elections.]

The President then says:

At the time these papers were presented, as before stated, I had never seen either of them, nor heard of the subject to which they relate, except in a general way, only one day previously. Up to the present moment nothing whatever has passed between Governor Johnson, or any one else connected with the proclamation, and myself. Since receiving the papers, as stated, I have given the subject such brief consideration as I have been able to do in the midst of so many pressing public duties.

My conclusion is that I have nothing to do with the matter, either to sustain the plan as the Convention and Governor Johnson have initiated it, or to revoke or modify it as you demand. By the Constitution and laws, the President is charged with no duty in the conduct of a Presidential election in any State; nor do I, in this case, perceive any military reason for his interference in the matter.

The movement set on foot by the Convention and Governor Johnson does not, as seems to be assumed by you, emanate from the National Executive. In no proper sense can it be considered other than as an independent movement of at least a portion of the loyal people of Tennessee.

I do not perceive in the plan any menace of violence or coercion towards any one. Governor Johnson, like any other loyal citizen of Tennessee, has the right to favor any political plan he chooses, and, as Military Governor, it is his duty to keep the peace among and for the loyal people of the State. I cannot discern that by this plan he purposes any more.

But you object to the plan. Leaving it alone will be your perfect security against it. Do as you please on your own account, peacefully and loyally, and Governor Johnson will not molest you, but will protect you against violence so far as in his power.

I presume that the conducting of a Presidential election in Tennessee, in strict accordance with the old Code of the State, is not now a possibility.

It is scarcely necessary to add that if any election shall be held, and any votes shall be cast in the State of Tennessee for President and Vice President of the United States, it will belong, not to the military agents, nor yet to the Executive department, but exclusively to another department of the Government, to determine whether they are entitled to be counted, in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Except it be to give protection against violence, I decline to interfere in any way with any Presidential election.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

REMARKS TO THE 189TH NEW YORK REGIMENT.

On Monday, October 24, this regiment, organized under the late call for 500,000 men, Col. Wm. W. Hoyt commanding, passed through Washington, on their way to the front. Previous to their departure by transport, the regiment was paraded in front of the White House, and presented to the President of the United States by the Colonel, in a few appropriate remarks. Mr. Lincoln was received with the utmost enthusiasm, and replied to the greeting which met him as follows:

SOLDIERS: I am exceedingly obliged to you for this mark of respect. It is said that we have the best Government the world ever knew, and I am glad to meet you, the supporters of that Government. To you who render the hardest work in its support should be given the greatest credit. Others who are connected with it, and who occupy higher positions, their duties can be dispensed with, but we cannot get along without your aid. While others differ with the Administration, and, perhaps, honestly, the soldiers generally have sustained it; they have not only fought right, but, so far as could be judged from their actions, they have voted right, and I for one thank you for it. I know you are en route for the front, and therefore do not expect me to detain you long, and will therefore bid you good morning.

The President retired, and the regiment gave him three cheers, heartily and enthusiastically. Col. Hoyt is an old soldier, having served since the commencement of the existing rebellion in the army. His regiment is raised chiefly in Steuben and Allegany counties, and will, with its gallant Colonel, be heard from in the coming campaign.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND GEN. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, April 30, 1864.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL GRANT:

Not expecting to see you before the Spring campaign opens, I wish to express, in this way, my entire satisfaction with what you have done up to this time, so far as I understand it. The particulars of your plans I neither know nor seek to know.

You are vigilant and self-reliant, and, pleased with this, I wish not to obtrude any restraints or constraints upon you. While I am very anxious that any great disaster or capture of any of our men in any great numbers shall be avoided, I know that these points are less likely to escape your attention than they would be mine. If there be anything wanting which is within my power to give, do not fail to let me know it. And now, with a brave army and a just cause, may God sustain you.

Yours, very truly,

A. LINCOLN.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES UNITED STATES,
CULPEPER C. H., VA., May 1, 1864.

THE PRESIDENT:

Your very kind letter of yesterday is just received. The confidence you express for the future and satisfaction for the past, in my military administration, is acknowledged with pride. It shall be my earnest endeavor that you and the country shall not be disappointed.

From my first entrance into the volunteer service of the country to the present day I have never had cause of complaint, have never expressed or implied a complaint against the Administration or the Secretary of War for throwing any embarrassment in the way of my vigorously prosecuting what appeared to be my duty. Indeed, since the promotion which placed me in command of all the armies, and in view of the great responsibility and importance of success, I have been astonished at the readiness with which everything asked for has been yielded, without even an explanation being asked.

Should my success be less than I desire and expect, the least I can say is, the fault is not with you.

Very truly, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant General.

Withdrawal of Generals Fremont and Cochrane.

BOSTON, August 20.

General FREMONT:

SIR: You must be aware of the wide and growing dissatisfaction in the Republican ranks with the Presidential nomination at Baltimore, and you may have seen notices of a movement just commenced to unite the thorough and earnest friends of a vigorous prosecution of the war in a new Convention which shall represent the patriotism of all parties.

To facilitate the movement, it is emphatically advisable that the candidates nominated at Cleveland and Baltimore should withdraw, and leave the field entirely free for such a united effort. Permit us, sir, to ask whether, in case Mr. Lincoln will withdraw, you will do so, and join your fellow-citizens in this attempt to place the Administration on a basis broad as the patriotism of the country and as its needs?

GEORGE L. STEARNS,
S. R. URBINO,
JAMES M. STONE,
ELIZUR WRIGHT,
EDWARD HABICH,
SAMUEL G. HOWE.

NAHANT, August 25.

GENTLEMEN: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th, addressed to me in New York.

If your letter were in effect an appeal only to my own sentiments in favor of a re-union of parties, I should not hesitate to renounce my personal views, but would be entirely ready to defer to the public opinion which your names represent.

But the conditions are no longer the same as when I expressed my readiness to retire in the event of a contingency which might have occurred at Baltimore. Having now definitely accepted the Cleveland nomination, I have not the right to act independently of the truly patriotic and earnest party who conferred that honor upon me. In any event it would be necessary first to consult with them. It might, besides, have only the effect still further to unsettle the public mind, and defeat the object you have in view, if we should disorganize before first proceeding to organize something better.

To this end I suggest that a direct effort be made to obtain an immediate understanding between the supporters of the Baltimore and Cleveland nominations, in order that the friends of both may coalesce, and unite upon an early day for holding such a convention as you propose. I am satisfied that I do not assume too much in saying that my friends will unite heartily in such a movement.

A really popular convention, upon a broad and liberal basis, so that it could be regarded as a convocation in mass of the people, and not the work of politicians, would command public confidence. Such a convention, acting in the large and liberal spirit in which it was called, without consensations of persons or political cliques, and without reference to bygone situations, rising to the level of the occasion and taking the conditions of the country as they present themselves to-day, could safely be trusted to propose such a policy and name such a man as should, and undoubtedly would, receive the cordial and united support of the patriotic masses of the people. To the great body of these, so far as my information allows me to form any opinion, I think that the following propositions would be acceptable:

1. Respect for the practical liberty and the constitutional rights and dignity of the citizen.
2. The maintenance of the dignity of the United States in their relations to foreign Powers.
3. The re-establishment of the Union; by peace if it is possible; by war, if the employment of peaceful measures cannot be made to succeed.

Much has been said of late about peace, and you will therefore excuse me if I say here what I understand by it. For me, peace signifies the integral re-establishment of the Union without slavery; because slavery is the source of all our political dissensions, and because the institution itself is condemned by the enlightened and liberal spirit of the age. These are to me the essential conditions of peace. If it is practicable to attain this result, it would not be paying too dearly for it—taking also into consideration the material strength which the South has been permitted to acquire by the conduct of the war—to make concessions upon some points of secondary importance, such as that of paying an indemnity for their slaves to those who have remained in a sort of neutral condition during the unhappy war which has convulsed the country. To terminate this we are now expending life and money; it would certainly be a gain to reduce it simply to a question of money.

If, in spite of all these efforts to spare the South humiliation, or losses of capital likely to be too severely felt, the political chiefs who direct the South persist in war, then the policy of the Convention should be to pronounce in that case for war with all the force and energy of the nation. For peace upon any terms, and merely because it is peace—a peace recognizing a North and a South—would not bring about a stable equilibrium. It would only prepare the way for new struggles, and for a condition of disastrous anarchy.

The paramount question is the Union. By peace, if it can be had on honorable and right terms—by war, if the political leaders who are directing the South insist upon war.

The situation of our country is unquestionably critical. It demands the devotion and patriotism of all men who really love their country, and it is one of those moments when all personal aspirations should vanish in the face of the great questions of principle and national existence which are at stake.

Thanking you, gentlemen, for the evidence which your letter gives me of your confidence in my disposition to do everything in my power for the interests of the country,

I am, very truly yours,
J. C. FREMONT.

This is General Fremont's letter of withdrawal:

NAHANT, Sept. 17.

GENTLEMEN: I enclose you my letter of reply to an invitation of some of my Republican friends to meet me at Faneuil Hall.

In declining their invitation, I have informed them of my intention to stand aside from the Presidential canvass, and assigned my reasons for doing so. To avoid repetition, I enclose you the letter in communicating to you now officially my desire to withdraw my name from the Presidential candidates.

In this decision I have the approval of such of our friends as I have been able to consult. I have thought it not prudent to incur the longer delay of consulting others, but I have reason to believe that they will unite with me fully upon the propriety of the step I have taken.

But in withdrawing from the post of candidate, I do not in any way intend to withdraw from my share in the labor, which we jointly undertook, to secure the triumph of the ideas represented by the radical Democracy.

Whatever the next Administration may be, we owe it to ourselves to form a phalanx compact and capable, by its thorough unity, of exerting a pressure strong enough to secure the eventual success of the principles for which we have been contending—the re-establishment of the Union, the abolition of slavery, and practical respect for liberty.

In the present composition of parties, it is indispensable that earnest men should devote themselves to watching the progress and insuring the success of these issues, regardless of men or parties.

Mr. Lincoln says he does not lead, but follows the will of the people. It remains, then, for the people, in the event of his re-election, vigilantly to require the following at his hands, and, further, to require that, in the execution of his duties, he keeps scrupulously within the Constitution and the laws; to make him recognize that he holds his place and his power, not as belonging to himself, but as a really faithful servant of the people.

This is the important duty which we have now to perform.

Although, as representatives of the Cleveland movement, we surrender our functions, the duty of watching party politics, the Constitution remains. What steps are necessary in the performance of that duty must be the subject for future consideration.

I am, gentlemen, respectfully and truly yours, &c.

JOHN C. FREMONT.

To Messrs. WORTHINGTON G. SNETHER and others, a committee, &c.

This letter is upon the same subject:

BOSTON, September 21.

GENTLEMEN: I feel it my duty to make one step more in the direction indicated by my letter of the 25th of August, and withdraw my name from the list of candidates.

The Presidential question has, in effect, been entered upon in such a way that the union of the Republican party has become a paramount necessity. The policy of the Democratic party signifies either separation or re-establishment with slavery. The Chicago platform is simply separation. General McClellan's letter of acceptance is re-establishment with slavery.

The Republican candidate, on the contrary, is pledged to the re-establishment of the Union without slavery; and, however hesitating his policy may be, the pressure of his party will, we may hope, force him to it.

Between these issues, I think, no man of the liberal party can remain in doubt, and I believe I am consistent with my antecedents in withdrawing—not to aid in the triumph of Mr. Lincoln, but to do my part towards preventing the election of the Democratic candidate.

In respect to Mr. Lincoln, I continue to hold exactly the sentiments contained in my letter of acceptance. I consider that his administration has been politically, militarily, and financially a failure, and that its necessary continuance is a cause of regret for the country.

There never was a greater unanimity in a country than was exhibited here at the fall of Sumter, and the South was powerless in the face of it; but Mr. Lincoln completely paralyzed this generous feeling. He destroyed the strength of the position and divided the North, when he declared to the South that slavery should be protected. He has built up for the South a strength which otherwise they could have never attained, and this has given them an advocate on the Chicago platform.

The Cleveland Convention was to have been an open avowal of that condemnation which men had been freely expressing to each other for the past two years, and which had been made fully known to the President; but in the uncertain condition of affairs, leading men were not found willing to make public a dissatisfaction and condemnation which could have rendered Mr. Lincoln's nomination impossible, and their continued silence and support established for him a character among the people which leaves now no choice.

United, the Republican party is reasonably sure of success; divided, the result of the Presidential election is at least doubtful.

I am, gentlemen, very truly, yours,

J. C. FREMONT.

GEN. COCHRANE'S WITHDRAWAL.

To the War Democrats of the United States:

A convention of men of various political tenets assembled at Cleveland on the 31st day of May last, for the purpose of discharging from the suppression of the rebellion the infraction of the rights of both individuals and States which attended it. The presence of a large number of War Democrats unexpectedly contributed to my nomination by the convention for the Vice Presidency, preceded by that of John C. Fremont for President.

The principles which dictated my acceptance of the nomination approved themselves at the time to very general regard, and have since, in my opinion, lost none of their original virtue or vigor. Their practical assertion was required, it was thought, by the success with which personal liberty had been assailed, and the extremities to which constitutional freedom had been reduced. Not the least inducement, however, was the consideration that the redress of grievances, in the manner proposed, could not interrupt, but would entirely consort with a vigorous prosecution of the war. It certainly was not contemplated that the success of the candidates should, in any degree, impair or endanger that most important part of the platform which resolved "that the rebellion must be suppressed by force of arms, and without compromise."

Instead of the Democratic party, as was then hoped and expected, co-operating at this point, they flouted the war at Chicago, and pronounced for unconditional peace. When, "to exhaust the resources of statesmanship," and to allow "the spirit of conciliation and compromise to prevail," General McClellan virtually asserts that there should be a "cessation of hostilities," he is in agreement with the convention which nominated him. When, however, he proposes, in the alternative of the war, that the rebellious States shall be restored to precisely their former condition in the Union, with precisely the same political representation as when they departed from it, he rejects a convention of States, on which, as the peaceable means, the Chicago Convention evidently relied for reconstructing the Union out of States physically debilitated and politically shorn. While, therefore, General McClellan resolves upon an impossible Union as it was, through war, the convention resolves upon an impossible Union as it should be, through peace. That the candidate does not stand erect upon his platform, though admitting a question whether, if elected, he would negotiate a peace, permits none that, if elected, he could not effectively prosecute the war.

The success of the Chicago nominees would therefore, at the best, but place in power a party of divided councils, of uncertain policy, and of indecisive action. Clearly, such an event would be at the furthest from "a suppression of the rebellion by force of arms, and without compromise."

The Baltimore platform, however objectionable at other points, is unimpeachable at this; and while it fails to vindicate personal rights, and the rights of free speech and the press, it does not fail to refer the re-establishment of constitutional liberty and the restoration of the Union to the armament of arms, in which, and in which alone, the national safety is to be found. We stand within view of a rebellion suppressed; within hail of a country reunited and saved. War lifts the curtain and discloses the prospect. War has given to us Atlanta, and war offers to us Richmond.

Shall we exchange the proffered victory for a "cessation of hostilities?" No! As we fought at the beginning, we should fight at the end; and when rebellion shall have laid down its arms, may we peacefully reconstruct whatever the war for the Union shall be found to have spared. "Lay down your arms," then; as it was at the commencement, so it is now, all that is demanded by loyal Americans of their rebellious brothers.

I would certainly prefer that the American people could be brought to a vote on the several propositions peculiar to the Cleveland platform. The right of asylum, the one-term policy, the direct vote of the people for their national Chief Magistrate, the Monroe doctrine, the confining exclusively to the representatives of the people in Congress the reconstruction of States, and the amendment of the Federal Constitution to prohibit slavery, are principles of primary magnitude and importance. But before all these is our country. It is menaced by rebellion. Loyal armies alone protect it. Should those armies retreat, and our protection be withdrawn; or should they advance, and our safety be established? Shall there be peace through the concessions of politicians, or peace through the actions of war? That is the question.

Peace and division, or war and the Union. Other alternative there is none. And, as I am still of the mind that once led me to the field with the soldiers of the Republic, I cannot now hold a position which, by dividing, hazards the success of all those who, whatever their differences at other points, agree, as upon the question of the first consequence, that the restoration of the Union cannot be effected without the uninterrupted continuation of the war.

I, therefore, withdraw my name from the Cleveland ticket.

Very truly yours,

JOHN COCHRANE.

AN IMPORTANT AND SIGNIFICANT CIRCULAR.

The Richmond Examiner of Sept. 17 alludes to an "important circular," issued to the people of Richmond recently. We quote the substance of the circular:

Captain Coke, enrolling officer for this district, will proceed to-day with the enforcement of a circular issued from the War Department, providing for a registry of all white males between the ages of seventeen and fifty years, not actually in service in the field; with the grounds of their exemption or detail; also a registry of all boys who will arrive at the age of seventeen years within the next twelve months, with the month at which they will attain that age. To obviate the possibility of any alarm that the enforcement of the order, unexplained, might tend to create, we will state that it is not intended to enroll the citizens falling within this category. The registry is simply intended as a basis upon which the Government may hereafter act in the matter of conscription and enrollment, as the emergencies of the service may require. We trust that every man and boy within the jurisdiction of the circular will respond with alacrity to the call, and that they will give the enrolling officers as little trouble as possible in obtaining the desired registry.

THE ENROLLMENT IN RICHMOND.

The military registry, ordered by the Bureau of Conscription, of all males between the ages of seventeen and fifty years not actually in the army in the field or with the reserves, commenced yesterday morning in Monroe ward, at No. 306 Broad street, nearly opposite Lacey's shop, and will be continued to-day. The order is very emphatic and must be executed, and the present mode has been adopted as most agreeable to the citizens. The exemptions in Richmond embrace only those with the army in the field and those in the reserves attached to the regiments of Colonels Evans and Danforth. It may as well be understood that this is not an enrollment, but a military census. Citizens failing to report lay themselves liable to arrest by the enrolling officers. Time, temper and trouble will therefore be saved by reporting promptly to the advisory board in the respective wards.—Richmond Examiner, Sept. 21.

REVOCATION OF DETAILS.*

ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
RICHMOND, October 5, 1864.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 76.—1. All details heretofore granted, under authority of the War Department, to persons between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, are revoked, and all such detailed men, together with those within the said ages who hold furloughs or temporary exemptions by reason of pending applications for details, will be promptly assembled at the camps of instruction, and appropriately assigned among the armies for service; except that men detailed and now actually employed in manufacturing, providing, collecting and forwarding munitions and other indispensable supplies for the army and navy, or in work indispensable to military operations, will be continued in their present employments until their details shall be revised.

2. The heads of departments and chiefs of bureaus will, within the next twenty days, forward to the Generals of Reserves lists of all detailed men in their employment, in the several States, specially distinguishing and certifying those who are experts and those absolutely indispensable for the performance of the above-mentioned Government work and business; and all detailed employees not so certified within to the enemy. He must play an important part in the war. He caused the fight, and he will have his portion of the burthen to bear. We have learned from dear-bought experience that negroes can be taught to fight, and that all who leave us are made to fight against us. I would free all able to bear arms, and put them in the field at once. They will make much better soldiers with us than against us, and swell the now depleted ranks of our armies.

I beg you to give this my earnest attention.

With assurances of my friendly regards and very high esteem, I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY W. ALLEN,
Governor of Louisiana.

The class of persons to whom it refers will not be conscripted into the armies of the United States if they come within our lines. All will be freed, and they will be received and treated as refugees. They will be accepted as volunteers, or will be employed in the public service, and their families will be cared for until they are in a condition to care for themselves. If a draft should become necessary, no discrimination against them will be made on the enrollment or draft.

By order of Major General E. R. S. Canby:

C. T. CHRISTENSEN,
Lieutenant Colonel and A. A. G.

* The Richmond Dispatch of September 12, 1864, makes the authoritative statement that "there are 114,000 men detailed as farmers, and some 32,000 exempt as necessary in some form to the Government and public institutions of the States."

the prescribed period will, upon the expiration thereof, be forthwith assigned to the army.

3. All persons called out by this order, who claim exemption on account of physical disability, will be examined by select medical boards, after their arrival at the camps of instructions.

4. All men found for light duty, who are unassigned, will at once report to the camps of instruction, under the penalty of being forthwith assigned to the active forces. By order.

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

NEGROES AS REBEL SOLDIERS.

[From the Richmond Enquirer, Oct. 6.]

The general order for the revocation of details will be found in this issue of the Enquirer. This step has been taken by the Government to fill up the army. It is necessary and proper, and if this order is promptly enforced the increase of the army will be speedy and rapid. We should like to see steps taken to promptly enforce the law of Congress for the employment of negroes in the army, as teamsters, &c. The law of Congress on this subject is plain, and though it does not go far enough, yet by promptly enforcing its provisions, many soldiers will be returned to their command and the army very greatly strengthened. The details should come forward promptly; their services are greatly needed; and if they are speedily collected and sent to the front there will be no danger at Richmond, and the condition of the country present the most encouraging aspect. It is useless to seek to conceal that more men are greatly wanted. The President has emphatically announced the startling fact that two thirds of the army are absent from the ranks. There would be no need of reinforcements but for this most disgraceful straggling and deserting. But as the fact exists, and the evil must be repaired, the details are called upon to do service. How long their service will be required cannot now be said, but sixty to ninety days will terminate the active operations of the campaign, and then details may be resumed. But, at present, all are needed, and all must come forward. Those that delay or shirk will be hunted down, and permanently sent to the army.

The law of Congress authorizing the employment of negroes, if fully carried out, would give ten thousand men to the Army of Northern Virginia. The slaves and free negroes can be impressed just as any other property, and the law provides for their support and clothing, and pays the owner soldier's wages.

The law of February 17 makes all "male free negroes, (with certain exceptions,) between the ages of eighteen and fifty" liable to perform such duties in the army, or in connection with the military defenses of the country, in the way of work upon fortifications, or in Government works, &c., as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe, and provides rations, clothing and compensation. The Secretary of War is also authorized to employ for similar duty twenty thousand male negro slaves, and their owners are guaranteed against escape or death. The Secretary is authorized to impress the slaves when he cannot hire them; and General Orders No. 32, March 11, 1861, directed the enrollment of the free negroes, and their assignment to the performance of the duties mentioned in the act. Also the employment and impressment of slaves was ordered by the same general orders, and the provisions of General Orders No. 138, of the 24th October, 1863, pointed out as governing in this matter. Has this law and general order been enforced?

The General Orders No. 138, Oct. 24, 1863, says: "No impressments shall be made of slaves employed in domestic and family service exclusively, nor upon farms or plantations where there are not more than three slaves of the age specified, and not more than five per cent. of the population of slaves shall be impressed in any county at the same time, unless the necessity is very great, and after consultation with this department or the Governor of the State in which the impressment is to be made." Here is the law and the general order. Have they been enforced? If they have not been executed, no longer delay should be allowed. We call upon the authorities to enforce this law immediately.

The question of making soldiers of negroes, of regularly enlisting them and fighting them for their safety, as well as our own, must have presented itself to every reflecting mind. Because the Yankees have not been able to make soldiers out of their drafted negroes, it does not follow that we cannot train our slaves to make very efficient soldiers. We believe that they can, by drill and discipline, moulded into steady and reliable soldiers. The propriety of employing negroes as soldiers we shall not at present discuss; but whenever the subjugation of Virginia or the employment of her slaves as soldiers are alternative positions, then certainly we are for making them soldiers, and giving freedom to those negroes that escape the casualties of battle.

We should be glad to see the Confederate Congress provide for the purchase of two hundred and fifty thousand negroes, present them with their freedom and privilege of remaining in the States, and arm, equip, drill and fight them. We believe that the negroes, identified with us by interest, and fighting for their freedom here, would be faithful and reliable soldiers, and, under officers who would drill them, could be depended on for much of the ordinary service, and even for the hardest fighting. It is not necessary now to discuss this matter, and may never become so, but neither negroes nor slavery will be permitted to stand in the way of the success of our cause. The war is for national independence on our side, and for the subjugation of white and the emancipation of negroes on the side of the enemy. If we fail, the negroes are nominally free and their masters really slaves. We must, therefore, succeed. Other States may decide for themselves, but Virginia, after exhausting her whites, will fight her blacks through to the last man. She will be free at all costs.

USING THE SLAVES.

[From the Enquirer of October 18.]

The proposition to extend the Conscription Law to the slaves of the States was first formerly advanced by the Enquirer in the issue of the 6th instant. Since that time, we have received many assurances of its popular favor, and none whatever of opposition to it. We learn that the planters in the extreme Southern States favor the proposition, and some have signified their readiness to free five, ten, or fifteen of their slaves, if they will enter the army. The near approach of the time when the Congress meets again requires that expression be given to the sentiments of the country upon this important measure. We therefore earnestly invite its discussion, and open our columns to opponents as well as friends of the proposition.

The result of the late elections is still in doubt, and whether Lincoln or McClellan will be elected it is yet impossible to determine; but there is no uncertainty as to the question of carrying on the war. Whether Lincoln or McClellan be the next President, the voice, and the almost unanimous voice, of that people is for a vigorous prosecution of the war. The duty of preparing to meet that issue will be before the approaching session of the Confederate Congress; that body will have before it, for consideration, the ways and means, as well of men as of money, for carrying on the war on our part.

The war-cry of the enemy—"No parley with rebellion in the field; no compromise with slavery in the readjustment"—fully informs our people that, in plain vernacular, the whites of these States are to be subjugated to slavery, and their slaves reduced to the miserable condition of Yankee free negroes. This is the view of the people among our enemies, and this will be the result of the war, whether ended by Lincoln or McClellan, if the people of these States permit themselves to be conquered.

The conscription of negroes should be accompanied with freedom and the privilege of remaining in the States; this is no part of abolitionism; it is the exercise by the master of the unquestionable right of manumission; it is remunerating those who defend our cause with the privilege of freedom. Nor should this important subject be prejudiced with questions about putting the negro on an equality with our friends, brothers, and fathers. Many of the soldiers in their childhood were fondled and nursed by faithful negro nurses, and yet no question of equality was ever raised. Many a man has manumitted slaves without ever being subjected to the suspicion of being an abolitionist.

The issues involved in this war are too exalted in their importance and character for us to permit them to be compromised by being degraded to a question of property. The liberty and freedom of ourselves and of our children, the nationality of our country, the right of enjoying any kind of property, the houses over our heads, and the very graves of our children and friends, are involved in this struggle. Failure makes slaves of all, white and black; robs all of property, real and personal; divides our lands among our conquerors, who will plough up the very graves of our dead as fertilized ground for making money. We have in our midst a half million of fighting material which is property—shall we use that property for the common cause?

Justice and sound policy demand that we make freemen of those who fight for freedom. We conscript the master and we impress his horses, cattle, wheat, and every other property except slaves. This very exception is an imputation that this war is for slavery and not for freedom. By conscripting the negroes we show to the world the earnestness that is in our people; we prove to our enemies that at the moment of our supposed exhaustion, in the fifth year of the war, we shall meet them with larger armies than we have before raised; and we explode the false accusation that we are fighting for slavery, or a slaveholders' Confederacy.

There are those who doubt whether sound policy would trust negroes with arms. We are not of those who entertain any fears upon that subject. Drill and discipline make valuable soldiers of Russian serfs, and no negroes in these States are so ignorant and brutal as those serfs. Between service with the Confederacy and with the Yankees, between living among us with all their strong local attachments, and going among strangers, who are now openly buying and selling them to recruiting officers, our slaves will find no difficulty in choosing. And, when once it is understood that freedom and a home in the South are the privileges offered by the Confederate authorities, while the enemy extend the beggarly hospitalities of Yankee philanthropy, not only will desertion from our ranks be unfeigned, but the drafted negroes of the Yankee armies will exchange services.

This subject addresses itself to the consideration of our people, at this particular time, with great force. The prospect of four more years of war are before our people; the enemy will not even "parley" with us without unconditional surrender, the fruits of which would be the confiscation of all property, the deportation of whole communities, the degradation of the people, and the domination and tyranny of Yankee masters. There can be no reconstruction which does not embrace a surrender first, which will not permit confiscation afterwards, which does not insure enslaving the white, without freeing the blacks.

If there are any weak-kneed people who imagine they can save their property by reconstruction, let them study the Shibboleth of all parties in the United States—"No parley with rebellion in the field; no compromise with slavery in the adjustment." Unconditional surrender is first demanded before even a parley. We are to lay down our arms and submit to the kindness of the Butlers, Grants, Shermans, and Sheridans; to the fate of New Orleans, the condition of the Valley, the misery of Atlanta, and, after all that degradation, to give up all our slaves in the adjustment. If there are any reasons against extending the conscription to slaves, we should like to have them stated; but we are decidedly of opinion that the whole country will agree to the proposition, and that at an early day the next Congress will be called upon to provide for it by law.

CONFERENCE OF THE GOVERNORS.

[From the Richmond Sentinel, October 24.]

In another column we publish the resolutions adopted at a conference of the Governors of a number of the Confederate States. The united resolve of the Governors to use every effort to increase the effective force of the army; to strengthen the Confederate authorities in the discharge of their duties; to consider the interests of all the States as identical, and to favor the sending of State troops beyond the State limits when their services are needed; to favor stringent laws for the arrest by the State authorities of stragglers and deserters, will be greeted with the popular acclamation. The determined resolve which they declare for themselves and their constituencies, "to maintain our right of self-government, to establish our independence, and to uphold the rights and sovereignty of the States, or to perish in the attempt," is an exhibition of the spirit proper to their high positions, and shared by our people throughout the country.

The Governors also recommend to the Confederate Government to send all able-bodied civil employees into the field, and to dispense in a great measure with provost and post guards. They further propose a course of action in reference to slaves near the enemy's lines, and the employment of slaves in the Confederate service, which is eminently proper, and in accordance with a growing sentiment among the people.

On the whole, we trust the conference of the Governors will be productive of much good.

THE CONFERENCE.

At a meeting of the Governors of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, held in Augusta, Ga., on the 17th inst., Governor William Smith presiding, after a full, free, and harmonious consultation and interchange of counsel, the following, among other views, were expressed:

Resolved, That there is nothing in the present aspect of public affairs to cause any abatement of our zeal in the prosecution of the war, to the accomplishment of a peace based on the independence of the Confederate States. And to give encouragement to our brave soldiers in the field, and to strengthen the Confederate authorities in the pursuit of this desirable end, we will use our best exertions to increase the effective force of our armies.

Resolved, That the interests of each of our States are identical in the present struggle for self-government, and wisdom and true patriotism dictate that the military forces of each should aid the others against invasion and subjugation, and for this purpose we shall recommend to our several Legislatures to repeal all such laws as prohibit the Executives from sending their forces beyond their respective limits, in order that they may render temporary service wherever most urgently required.

Resolved, That, whilst it is our purpose to use every exertion to increase the strength and efficiency of our State and Confederate forces, we respectfully and earnestly request that the Confederate authorities will send to the field every able-bodied man, without exception, in any of its various departments, whose place can be filled by either disabled officers and soldiers, senior reserves, or negroes, and dispense with the use of all provost and post guards, except in important cities and localities where the presence of large bodies of troops make them necessary, and with all passport agents upon railroads not in the immediate vicinity of the armies, as we consider these agents an unnecessary annoyance to good citizens, and of no possible benefit to the country.

Resolved, That we recommend our respective Legislatures to pass stringent laws for the arrest and return to their commands of all deserters and stragglers from the Confederate armies or State troops, and that it be made the special duty, under appropriate penalties, of all civil and military officers to arrest and deliver to the proper authorities all such delinquents.

And whereas the public enemy, having proclaimed the freedom of our slaves, are forcing into their armies the able-bodied portion thereof, the more effectually to wage their cruel and bloody war against us; therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the true policy and obvious duty of all slave owners timely to remove their slaves from the line of the enemy's approach, and especially those able to bear arms; and when they shall fail to do so, that it should be made the duty of the proper authorities to enforce the performance of this duty, and to give to such owners all necessary assistance as far as practicable.

Resolved, That the course of the enemy, in appropriating our slaves who happen to fall into their hands to purposes of war, seems to justify a change of policy on our part; and whilst owners of slaves, under the circumstances, should freely yield them to their country, we recommend to our authorities, under proper regulations, to appropriate such part of them to the public service as may be required.

Resolved, That the States have a right to export such productions and to import such supplies as may be necessary for State use, or for the comfort or support of their troops in service, upon any vessel or vessels owned or chartered by them; and that we request Congress at its next session to pass laws removing all restrictions which have been imposed by Confederate authority upon such exports or imports by the States.

And, lastly, we deem it not inappropriate to declare our firm and unalterable purpose, as we believe it to be that of our fellow-citizens, to maintain our right of self-government, to establish our independence, and to uphold the rights and sovereignty of the States, or to perish in the attempt.

Resolved, That the chairman be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to his Excellency President Davis, one each to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, to be laid before their respective bodies, and one to the Governor of each State in the Confederacy.

The Richmond Whig, of the 24th, thus comments upon the above:

THE GOVERNORS IN COUNCIL.

The Governors of several of our States have been in consultation in Georgia, and have agreed in making a number of recommendations to Congress, the Confederate Executive, and the Legislatures of the several States, the adoption of which, it is thought, will promote the cause in which each of these States have so vital an interest. There does not appear to have been any discord or diversity of opinion in this conference; and, indeed, it may be said there is no difference among our people, except in some matters, as to the wisdom with which the means placed at the disposal of the authorities are employed.

The paramount question with all—the one question—is, how can the power of the Confederacy be most efficiently and successfully employed for the defence and deliverance of the Confederacy? All agree that its entire military resources, to the last man and the last dollar if needed, must be thrown into the struggle. No one thinks of turning back, or so much as looking back, till the work is finished. No one dreams of any adjustment that would compromise our independence. Liberty or death is the language and purpose of all. With such a resolve animating the whole body of our people, armies, authorities, and citizens, subjugation is impossible.

LETTER OF ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS ON PEACE.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, GA., September 22, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: You will please excuse me for not answering your letter of the 14th instant sooner. I have been absent nearly a week on a visit to my brother in Sparta, who has been quite out of health for some time. Your letter I found here on my return home yesterday. The delay of my reply thus occasioned I regret.

Without further explanation or apology allow me now to say to you that no person living can possibly feel a more ardent desire for an end to be put to this unnatural and merciless war upon honorable and just terms than I do. But I really do not see that it is in my power or yours, or that of any number of persons in our position, to inaugurate any movement that will even tend to aid in bringing about a result that we and so many more desire.

The movement by our Legislature at its last session, at the suggestion of the Executive, on this subject, was by authority properly constituted for such a purpose. That movement, in my judgment, was timely, judicious, and in the right direction. Nor has it been without results. The organization of that party at the North to which you refer may justly be claimed as a part of the fruits of it. These, it is to be hoped, will be followed by others of a more marked character, if all in both sections who sincerely desire peace upon correct terms will give that movement thus inaugurated all the aid in their power.

The resolutions of the Georgia Legislature, at its last session, upon the subject of peace, in my judgment, embodied and set forth very clearly those principles upon which alone there can be permanent peace between the different sections of this extensive, once happy and prosperous, but now distracted country.

Easy and perfect solution to all present troubles, and those far more grievous ones which loom in prospect, and portentously threaten in the coming future, is nothing more than the simple recognition of the fundamental principle and truth upon which all American constitutional liberty is founded, and upon the maintenance of which alone it can be preserved—that is, the sovereignty, the ultimate, absolute sovereignty, of the States. This doctrine our Legislature announced to the people of the North and to the world. It is the only key-note to peace—permanent, lasting peace—consistent with the security of the public liberty.

The old Confederation was formed upon this principle. The old Union was afterwards formed upon this principle. No league can ever be formed or maintained between any State, North or South, securing public liberty, upon any other principle. The whole framework of American institutions, which in so short a time had won the admiration of the world, and to which we were indebted for such an unparalleled career of prosperity and happiness, was formed upon this principle. All our present troubles sprung from a departure from this principle, from a violation of this essential law of our political organization.

In 1776 our ancestors, and the ancestors of those who are waging this unholy crusade against us, together proclaimed the great and eternal truth for the maintenance of which they jointly pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor, that governments are instituted amongst men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of those ends for which it was formed, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and institute a new Government, laying its foundations on such principles, and organizing its powers in such a form as to them may seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

It is needless here to state that by "people" and "governed," in this announcement, is meant communities and bodies of men capable of organizing and maintaining a government, not individual members of society. The consent of the governed refers to the will of the mass of the community or State in its organized form, and expressed through its legitimate and properly constituted organs. It was upon this principle the Colonists stood justified before the world in effecting their separation from the mother country. It was upon this principle that the original thirteen co-equal and co-sovereign States formed the Federal compact of the old Union in 1787. It is upon the same principle that the present co-equal and co-sovereign States of our Confederacy formed their new compact of Union.

The idea that the old Union or any Union between sovereign States, consistently with this fundamental truth, can be maintained by force is preposterous. This war springs from an attempt to do this preposterous thing. Superior power may compel a Union of some sort, but it would not be the Union of the old Constitution or of our new. It would be that sort of Union that results from despotism.

The subjugation of the people of the South by the people of the North would necessarily involve the destruction of the Constitution, and the overthrow of their liberties as well as ours. The men or party at the North, to whom you refer, who favor peace, must be brought to a full realization of this truth in all its bearings before their efforts will result in much practical good. Any peace growing out of a union of States established by force will be as ruinous to them as to us.

The action of the Chicago Convention, so far as its platform of principles goes, presents, as I have said on another occasion, a ray of light, which, under Providence, may prove the dawn of day to this long and cheerless night, the first ray of light I have seen from the North since the war began. This cheers the heart, and towards it I could almost exclaim, "Hail! holy light, offspring of Heaven, first lorn of the eternal co-eternal beam. May I express thee unblamed, since God is light." Indeed, I could have quite so exclaimed, but for the sad reflection that whether it shall bring healing in its beams or be lost in a dark and ominous eclipse ere its good work be done, depends so much upon the action of others who may not regard it and view it as I do. So at best it is but a ray, a small and tremulous ray, enough only to gladden the heart and quicken the hope.

The prominent and leading idea of that Convention seems to have been a desire to reach a peaceful adjustment of our present difficulties and strife through the medium of a convocation of the States. They propose to suspend hostilities, to see what can be done, if anything, by negotiations of some sort. This is one step in the right direction. To such a convention of the States I should have no objection, as a peaceful conference and interchange of views between equal and sovereign Powers, just as the Convention of 1787 was called and assembled. The proper constituted authorities at Washington and Richmond, the duly authorized representatives of the two confederacies of States now at war with each other, might give their assent to such a proposition. Good might result from it. It would be an appeal on both sides from the sword to reason and justice. All wars which do not result in the extinction and extermination on one side or the other must be ended sooner or later by some sort of negotiation.

From the discussion or interchange of views in such a Convention, the history as well as the true nature of our institutions, and the relation of the States towards each other and towards the Federal head, would doubtless be much better understood generally than they now are; but I should favor such a proposition only as a peaceful conference, as the Convention of 1787 was. I should be opposed to leaving the question at issue to the absolute decision of such a body. Delegates might be clothed with powers to consult and agree, if they could, upon some plan of adjustment, to be submitted for subsequent ratification by the sovereign States whom it affected, before it should be obligatory or binding, and then binding only on such as should so ratify it. It becomes the people of the South as well as the people of the North to be quite as watchful and jealous of their rights as their common ancestors were. The maintenance of liberty in all ages, times, and countries, when and where it has existed, has required not only constant vigilance and jealousy, but it has often required the greatest privations and sufferings and sacrifices that people of States are ever subjected to. Through such an ordeal we are now passing. Through a like and even a severer ordeal our ancestors passed in their struggle for the principles which it has devolved upon us thus to defend and maintain.

But, great as our sufferings and sacrifices have been and are, to which you allude, they are as yet far short of the like sufferings and sacrifices which our fathers bore with patience, courage and fortitude in the crisis that tried men's souls in their day. These are the virtues that sustained them in their hour of need. Their illustrious and glorious example bids us not to under-estimate the priceless inheritance they achieved for us at such a cost of treasure and blood. Great as are the odds we are struggling against, they are not greater than those against which they successfully struggled. In point of reverses our condition is not to be compared with theirs. Should Mobile, Savannah, Charleston, Augusta, Macon, Montgomery, and even Petersburg and Richmond fall, our condition would not then be worse or less hopeful than theirs was in the darkest hour that rested on their fortunes. With wisdom on the part of those who control our destiny in the Cabinet and in the field, in husbanding and properly wielding our resources at their command, and in securing the hearts and affections of the people in the great cause of right and liberty for which we are struggling, we could suffer all their losses and calamities, and greater even, and still triumph in the end.

At present, however, I do not see, as I stated in the outset, that you or I, or any number of persons in our position, can do anything towards inaugurating any new movement looking to a peaceful solution of the present strife. The war on our part is fairly and entirely defensive in its character. How long it will continue to be thus wickedly and mercilessly waged against us depends upon the people of the North. Georgia, our own State, to whom we owe allegiance, has with great unanimity proclaimed the principles upon which a just and permanent peace ought to be sought and obtained. The Congress of the Confederate States has followed with an endorsement of these principles. All you and I, and others in our position, therefore, can do on that line at this time is to sustain the movement already inaugurated, and, to the utmost of our ability, to hold up these principles as the surest hope of restoring soundness to the public mind of the North, as the brazen serpent was held up for the healing of Israel in the wilderness. The chief aid and encouragement we can give the peace party at the North is to keep before them these great fundamental principles and truths, which alone will lead them and us to permanent and lasting peace, with possession and enjoyment of constitutional liberty. With these principles once recognized, the future would take care of itself, and there would be no more war so long as they should be adhered to. All questions of boundaries, confederacies, and union or unions would naturally and easily adjust themselves, according to the interests of parties and the exigencies of the times. Here lies the true law of the balance of power and the harmony of States.

Yours, respectfully,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

LETTER FROM WILLIAM W. BOYCE ON PEACE.

WINSBORO, S. C., Sept. 29, 1864.

HIS EXCELLENCY JEFFERSON DAVIS:

SIR: The Democratic party of the United States, in their recent convention at Chicago, resolved that if they attained power they would agree to an armistice and a convention of all the States, to consider the subject of peace. I think that action demands a favorable response from our Government. You are the only person who can make that response, because our Congress does not meet until after the time appointed for the Presidential election. If our Congress met in time I should propose the action I desire taken to that body, and submit to its judgment my argument; but as that opportunity does not occur, I have no alternative but to remain silent, or address myself to you. I cannot, consistently with my ideas of duty, remain silent. I therefore address myself to you. We are waging war to obtain a satisfactory peace. By a satisfactory peace, I mean a peace consistent with the preservation of our free institutions. By a satisfactory peace, I do not mean that cessation of hostilities which might, after a protracted contest, result from the exhaustion of the belligerents, whereby the sword would fall from their nerveless hands, their hearts a prey to the furies. Such a peace as that would be but a hollow truce, in which each party would be incessantly preparing for a new, final and decisive struggle. The peace which I mean is a peace which reconciles the interests and the feelings of the belligerents; a peace, in short, which restores harmony. Unless we can obtain such a peace as this, our republican institutions totter to their fall, and we become the subjects of a military despotism. Every government must exist; that is the law of its being. If it is attacked by a great force it must bring a proportionately great force to its defence. If its form is such as not to furnish military strength to the full extent of its means, it must disregard that form. The republican form, especially the form of a Confederacy of free States, is not the best adapted for war. In fact, it is a peace establishment. The form best adapted for war is a national military despotism. The Republic at war is gradually passing into military despotism. As the war continues and the pressure of its enemies increases, this transition is accelerated. A Republic forced to the wall by a powerful enemy must end in despotism. If we turn our eyes to Europe we find only two nations with free institutions, Great Britain and Switzerland. Why is this? The reason is obvious. The necessity of being constantly in the highest state of preparation for war compels every country to the utmost development of its military strength. Absolute government is a part of that state of preparation, and therefore absolute government is the ordinary condition. If there were no other obstacle to France being a republic, the immense standing armies she is compelled to keep constantly under arms would be conclusive. France is compelled to keep six hundred thousand men always in arms. France is obliged, therefore, to be what she is, a military despotism. Take the case of Prussia in the celebrated seven years' war. Suppose her institutions had been liberal, what would have been the result? Frederick the Great would either have had to abandon the struggle, or seize all power. Nothing but absolute power in the hands of Frederick enabled him to come forth victorious from the contest. He sacrificed everything else in Prussia to the one idea of military strength. As Prussia had no natural defences, and was greatly inferior in strength to the other great powers, it was necessary to give exclusive development to the military idea; this Frederick did. As Macaulay said, he made Prussia "all sting." This was logical in Frederick. To save Prussia it was necessary to give her the maximum of military strength; he did this. Prussia still has a place on the map, but he made no effort to save liberty. Frederick found Prussia an absolute monarchy; he left it an entrenched camp. Liberty was never thought of. It is impossible in her condition. If Prussia, with her excellent population, were at a vast distance from where she is, and protected by oceans and mountains, she might be a republic; but where she is, it is impossible. On the continent of Europe no State can exist with free institutions, because the form of government must be such as furnishes the greatest amount of military strength. Perhaps it may be said that Switzerland contradicts my theory. I reply that Switzerland is an exceptional case—a few nests of poor people buried in remote valleys, surrounded by inaccessible mountains; they are not worth conquering. Besides, the mutual jealousy of the great powers is their real safeguard. England is the only free and great power in Europe. This is owing to her insular position. The ocean is the divine charter of her freedom. If nothing but a surveyor's line separated England from France, England would be a military despotism as France is. No country can be free which has to sleep with her hand on her sword.

But why resort to general reasoning and the condition of European nations to prove what I have asserted, when the proof stares us in the face in the example of our own country. We see it in every sight; we feel it in every emotion; we hear it in every sound. When our present Government was established, everything possible was done in the interest of State rights, every conceivable guarantee was taken for individual freedom—as little as possible was conceded to the Federal Government. The Federal Government was "cabined, cribbed, confined," "hedged in by sancy doubts and fears." The school of extreme State rights were at work framing a Constitution for a Federal Government, with the accumulated suspicions of seventy years. They did their work well. The problem to be solved was the framing of a Federal Government, with the minimum of power to function. I thought at the time it was useless labor, because I conceived, in the humility of my judgment, that the constitution of a country was that which its necessities pointed out, and that you could not in advance say what would be the necessities of a Confederacy exposed to perpetual war with a neighboring power of superior force. But the framers of our Constitution were not deterred by any such considerations as these from their work. They established their Confederacy, guarded and limited in the interests of the rights of the separate States as much as possible. Well, we have been at war not quite four years, and what is the result? Is not our Federal Government in the exercise of every possible power of a national central military despotism? Suppose there were no States, only provinces, and unlimited power was conferred upon you and Congress—what greater powers would you exercise than you do now? Have we not carried conscription to its last limits? Is not every man in the country between 17 and 50 subject to military authority? None are exempt except upon considerations of public interest. Have we not been compelled to lay direct taxes in the very teeth of the theory of the Constitution? Have we not issued such vast amounts of paper money as to unsettle all value? Have we not compelled the holders of our paper money to fund it, or lose one-third? Have we not seized all the railroads? Have we not destroyed railroads and built others? Have we not established a universal system of impressment of property, at our own prices, in our own money? Have we not established a Government monopoly of the exportations of the great staples of the country? Have we not forbidden the importation of luxuries? Have we not compelled those whom we permit to remain at home to execute bonds to furnish their products to us at our prices? Have we not suspended the writ of habeas corpus? Have we not introduced the passport system, which we used to think belonged to the iron despotism of Europe? In short, has not our Federal Government done everything that a centralized military despotism could do? Indeed, if you were appointed Military Dictator, what greater powers could you exercise than you now do? I allude to these things not to complain of them, but to lament them. If you tell me they are necessary, I reply that is precisely my argument. My argument assumes and requires that necessity. It is plain that our Government exercises the powers of a central despotism. I blame no one for it. I am sure those who are at the head of the Government would gladly have it otherwise; but necessity compels the course they have taken. But I shall be told, perhaps, this necessity is limited to the war, and when peace returns we will go back to our old state of liberty. That depends upon the kind of peace. A peace without reconciliation carries in his bosom the seeds of new wars. This armed peace and its offspring, war, would fasten upon us permanently a central military despotism. It is common to bear it said that the United States have gone into despotism. If so, then it is a very sad truth for us, for that would develop their maximum military power, and would, of course, necessitate the same thing in the same way on our part. The truth is, we are vitally interested in the preservation of free institutions in the Northern States, because the people of the United States will not only make their institutions, but they will make ours. If they acquire their maximum military strength by going into despotism, we must do the same, just as if they were to originate new and overpoweringly destructive modes of warfare, we would have to resort to the same or be overwhelmed. Some persons of intelligence concede that the Northern people have gone into despotism, but ridicule the idea of such a calamity befalling us. To such I would reply, we are but human beings, not gods, and we are acted upon by necessity as other people. The truth is, that the Government at Washington has not dared to exercise power on the grand scale that our Government has. The Lincoln Government has not ventured to resort to an effective conscription; it has not resorted to taxation as we have; it has no tax in kind; it does not prohibit imports; it does not monopolize the exports; it does not rely on impressments. It plays the tyrant, but it hesitates to seize the sceptre.

I think I have established my proposition, that our Republican institutions are lost unless we have a peace accompanied by harmony with the North. The great question for us then is, how are we to obtain such a peace?

Before I consider this question, I would call your attention to this fact, that the peace we are to make with the North is to be made by us and the North alone. There is no probability of any foreign intervention; by that I mean any armed interference in our behalf. The peace between the North and the South, when it comes, must come, then, by the action of these parties alone. Foreign Powers will not interfere. The question then is, how are these belligerent States, now so fiercely engaged, to obtain this peace with reconciliation, which I have said is necessary to preserve their Republican form of government? It is a great question. I now approach it.

I admit in the first place that a successful military defence is indispensable. Without that nothing can be anticipated but utter ruin. But is this all? I think not. There is something over and above success in war. That is political policy. If Mr. Lincoln remains in power, there is no hope of accomplishing anything by political policy. Mr. Lincoln is the exponent of the fanaticism and hatred of the North. He holds power because he is the exponent of these sentiments of his party; in order to be master of others he has to be their slave. He cannot be rational upon the subject of slavery, because he represents madmen; he cannot exercise what Burke calls the truest political wisdom, magnanimity, because he represents malignants. Besides, Mr. Lincoln is committed by his past career to the most violent course. If he had been a statesman when he became President, he could, by a wise policy, have restored harmony. But in that great crisis, when statesmanship could have accomplished so much, he used no efforts to harmonize, but yielded himself up a mere instrument of the foolish mob, as if statesmanship came from below upwards. Mr. Wm. H. Seward, by his speeches made in the winter of '60, showed that he comprehended the policy of conciliation, but just at the moment when it became necessary to put in force his fine maxims, he found no use for them. Mr. Lincoln's mode of carrying on the war, his emancipation policy, the license he gave his armies to commit the greatest outrages, shows that he relies on nothing but force. I confess, therefore, I have no hope of Mr. Lincoln as a pacificator. I should as soon have selected Charles IX. to pacify the Huguenots after the massacre of St. Bartholomew. But fortunately Mr. Lincoln and those he represents are not all of the North. There is a powerful party there which condemns his policy. That party is rational on the subject of slavery. It represents whatever of amity or conservatism is left at the North. This party proposes that the war shall cease, at least temporarily, and that all the States should meet in amicable council, to make peace if possible. This is the most imposing demonstration in favor of peace made at the North since the war broke out. I think our only hope of a satisfactory peace, one consistent with the preservation of free institutions, is in the supremacy of this party at some time or other. Our policy, therefore, is to give this party all the capital we can. You should, therefore, at once, in my opinion, give this party all the encouragement possible, by declaring your willingness to an armistice, and a convention of all the States in their sovereign capacity, to enter upon the subject of peace. The theory upon which this party goes is, that we are willing to cease hostilities, at least temporarily, and meet in council to attain peace if possible. The theory upon which Mr. Lincoln goes is, that there is no use to attempt any negotiation with us; that the sword is the only possible arbiter. Our policy is to show that the theory of the Chicago platform is the true one. To put this matter in another light, let us ask the question, what is the policy that Mr. Lincoln wishes us to pursue? Of course he wishes us to verify his theory and falsify the opposite theory. He wishes us to treat the advances of the Chicago Convention with contempt. He wishes to be able to say to the Northern people, "see, the Government of Richmond tramples upon your tenders of peaceful negotiation; McClellan could accomplish nothing by negotiation; war is all that is left; don't remove me, I am carrying that on with especial zeal." When we know what Mr. Lincoln wants us to do, then we know very certainly what he ought to do.

It may be said, the proposed convocation of the States is unconstitutional. To this I reply, we can amend the Constitution. It may be further objected that to meet the Northern States in convention is to abandon our present form of Government. But this no more follows than that their meeting us implies an abandonment of their form of Government. A Congress of the States in their sovereign capacity is the highest acknowledgment of the principles of State rights. This imposing assemblage is, in my opinion, the best, while it is the most august tribunal to which the great question of peace could possibly be referred. Imagine this grand council of States in the act of convening, after the people, everywhere in peaceful possession of the right to elect their ambassadors, had done so. What a sublime spectacle it would present! There would be nothing to compare with it in moral grandeur, in ancient or modern times. The friends of humanity and progress and civilization, and all Christians in every land, would rejoice at the spectacle, and millions in every clime, the good everywhere, would mingle their prayers in all tongues for an auspicious issue to these great deliberations. The question rests with you; the responsibility is with you; the consequences will be with your country. You and Mr. Lincoln can never make peace. You may traverse indefinitely the same bloody circles you have been moving in for the last four years, but you will never approach any nearer than you now are. Your only hope of peace is in the ascendancy of the conservative party North. Fortify that party if you can by victories, but do not neglect diplomacy. It was the boast of Philip, the great king, that he gained more cities by his policy than by his arms. A weak power, engaged with a stronger, must make up in sagacity for what it lacks in physical force, otherwise the monuments of its glory become the tomb of its nationality.

With sentiments of the highest respect, I remain your fellow-citizen,

WILLIAM W. BOYCE.

LETTER FROM HERSCHEL V. JOHNSON ON PEACE.

SANDY GROVE, NEAR BARTOW P. O., GA., Sept. 25, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 14th inst. was received several days ago. I have taken time to consider the object which it proposes—"the inauguration of a peace movement at the South." I long for peace as ardently as "the hart pants for the cooling water brook." I agree with you, that "this unnatural strife cannot be terminated by arms."

To this end, we should lose no occasion, nor omit any proper means to convince the North that we are still, as we always have been, willing to adjust the difficulties between us, upon honorable terms. We have avowed our desire for peace and readiness for negotiation from the very beginning of the war, in every form in which organized communities can give expression to their will. We have avowed it in executive messages, in legislative resolves and congressional manifestoes.

What more can we do, in view of our situation? Gladly would I do more, if it were possible. But I do not believe that it is. We can inaugurate no movement that would lead to the result so earnestly desired by every friend of humanity, and so urgently demanded by the interests of both sections. Our military situation would seem to forbid even the attempt. The capture of Atlanta and Richmond is regarded by the authorities of the United States as all that is necessary for our ultimate subjugation. They have captured Atlanta, and General Grant says the early capture of Richmond is certain, beyond a doubt.

What, under the circumstances, would be the probable effect of any peace movement at the South? Would it conciliate the North? Would it inspire the Government of the United States with a sense of justice, or forbearance, or magnanimity? So far from this, it would be construed into intimidation on our part, and it would stimulate and intensify the war spirit of the North. It would be regarded as our confession of overthrow, and the premonitory symptom of our readiness to sue for mercy on the bended knees of unconditional surrender.

In view of the avowed object of the war on the part of the Northern Government, it is very certain that there can be no peace, upon any honorable terms, so long as its present rulers are in power. The President of the United States has proclaimed emancipation, and his determination to enforce it by the sword. He has announced, in advance of any formal offer of negotiation on our part, that he will not treat with rebels, (as he is pleased to call the people of the Confederate States,) except upon the condition that we lay down our arms, abandon slavery, and return to the Union. He will then grant such terms as may be compatible with his sense of justice, liberality, and magnanimity. So long, therefore, as its present rulers are in power, and this policy shall be adhered to, there can be no peace between us and the Government of the United States which will not bring upon us confiscation, social disorganization, poverty, degradation, and intolerable dishonor. What worse would be our doom if subjugated by military power? Subjugation is no worse than the submission offered to us as the only condition of peace. It would at least save to us our honor.

We must have negotiations which will not compromise our status in any way; which will not affect our national honor, or the rights of States. Peace upon any other terms involves the loss of liberty, because it will be the result of force—not of choice and compact between co-equal and sovereign States. Peace upon any other terms means despotism enthroned in empire—not Republicanism founded upon "the consent of the governed," and organized "in such forms as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness." This is the kind of peace which the United States now propose to enforce upon the people of the Confederate States—the peace of death to constitutional liberty—the stagnant peace of despotism—the peace which chains and prison bars impose.

I look with anxiety to the approaching Presidential election in the United States. For, although the Chicago platform falls below the great occasion, and the nominee still lower, yet the triumph of the Democratic party of the North will certainly secure a temporary suspension of hostilities and an effort to make peace by an appeal to reason. They confess that four years of bloody war, as a means of restoring the Union, has proven a failure. They declare that the true principles of American Government have been disregarded and trampled under foot by the present Executive of the United States. Their success will bring a change of Administration, and, with that, a change of policy. It will do more, and what is of infinitely greater importance, it will bring the two contending parties face to face, in the arena of reason and consultation. Then and there can be discussed the history of all our difficulties, the principles involved in the bloody issue, and the respective interests of both Governments. Such is my conviction of the omnipotence of truth and right, that I feel an abiding confidence that an honorable peace would ultimately spring from such deliberations.

In their long-cherished devotion to the Union of the States—a sentiment which challenges my respect—the people of the North, it seems to me, have fallen into two grave and capital errors. On the one hand, they attach an undue importance to the mere fact or form of Union, ignoring the principles and objects of the Union, and forgetting that it ceases to be valuable when it fails to secure that object and maintain those principles. On the other hand, they think that the States of the Confederacy have separated from the United States in contempt of that Union, in a wanton disposition to insult its flag and to destroy the Government of which it is the emblem. Both opinions are wrong. The old Union was an organization of States. But it was more; it was such an organization, founded upon great principles, in order to give the most efficient security for the maintenance of those very same principles.

These principles are the sovereignty of the States—the right of the people to govern themselves; the right of each State to regulate its own domestic affairs, to establish its own municipal institutions, to organize its own system of labor, and to pursue its own career of enterprise, subject to no restrictions except such as are expressed in the Federal Constitution. On these the Union was based, and constituted the solemn guarantee of all, that each State should be protected in their undisturbed enjoyment. When it failed to do this, or, what is worse, when its Government passed into the administration of those whose avowed policy and measures must lead to the overthrow of those principles, it was virtually at an end, and, in their opinion, ceased to be valuable to the people of the Confederate States. Hence, secession was not resorted to merely to throw off the Union.

Our people loved the Union and honored its once glorious flag for the rich memories that clustered around it. They left it with a reluctance and regret to which history will scarcely do justice. They were, as they are now, wedded to the principles on which the Union was founded; they separated from it but to vindicate and maintain them. Whether they acted wisely or unwisely must be left to the imperial arbitrament of time and coming events. But no people were ever prompted to so momentous a step by loftier devotion to constitutional liberty. For this we are denounced as rebels against the Government of the United States, and threatened with the bloody doom of traitors; our country is invaded, our homes desolated, and our people slain by hostile armies.

This is the naked truth. When thus viewed, how cruel and unnatural is this war! Why should the North fight us?

Especially why should the thousands of professed constitutional men at the North lend their countenance and aid to our subjugation? We are struggling for principles which should be as dear to them as they are to us. Do they not see that our overthrow will be the downfall of constitutional liberty—fatal to their freedom as well as ours—the inauguration of an irresponsible and unlimited despotism? Correct ideas are slow in the progress of leavening the mass of mind; truth is ever trampled upon when passion gains sway. But the ultimate prevalence of the one and the ascendancy of the other is only a question of time, and their end, peace.

The light already begins to break in upon the thinking and better portion of the Northern people. They begin to see that this war is not waged to restore the Union in good faith—the Union of the Constitution; but either to secure disunion, by avowing impossible and degrading terms of peace, or to convert it into a despotism by subjugating the South. Hence the Chicago movement. Hence the note of discontent that is being sounded by a portion of the press and statesmen of the North. God opened the light, that the people of the North may understand the position which we occupy, and discern the volcano that threatens to engulf their liberty. Then they will consider negotiation not only politically but absolutely necessary. Then peace will come, predicated upon those principles so essential to both Governments, and all our strifes and difficulties solved in conformity to the best interests of the parties.

In view of our position, permit me to repeat, I do not see how we can inaugurate any movement likely to lead to an honorable peace. We are the party assailed. Peace movements must come from the assailing party. I would not be understood, however, as standing on any point of etiquette as to who should take the initiative—I have no such feeling. All I mean to say is, that in view of the avowed policy of the United States Government, any advance on our part is already rejected before made, and that we cannot make any upon the conditions announced by its President. I would not hesitate to take the initiative if there was the least hope of a favorable response or an honorable result. But if the Government of the United States should pass into other hands, repudiate the policy of subjugation, and indicate a desire for negotiation, I would, if need be, have our Government propose it—certainly accept the offer of it, if tendered by the Federal authorities.

Such I believe to be the spirit and temper of our people. Such I am satisfied is the sentiment of the President of the Confederate States. He has avowed it on every occasion which required him to allude to the subject. The North can have peace at any moment. All that they need to do is to let us alone—cease to fight us; or, if they prefer, agree to negotiate a peace on terms honorable to both parties. We are willing, always have been willing, and shall continue to be willing. But as long as they fight us the war must continue. For what can we do but defend? We have no power to stop their fighting short of unconditional submission to the terms announced by the President of the United States.

Are our people prepared for peace upon those terms? It is an insult to ask the question, unless, indeed, we suppose, contrary to the whole history of our struggle, that they did not count the cost in the beginning, and have no just appreciation of the mighty principles involved. The President of the Confederate States never uttered anything more true than when he said to the unofficial messenger of President Lincoln that "we are not fighting for slavery, but for the right of self-government."

So long as the people will keep this great truth in view and obey the inspiration which it should kindle in the breasts of freemen, they cannot be conquered. They may have their land desolated, their property destroyed, their towns and cities burned and sacked, but subjugated they never can be. We cannot have peace so long as the present rulers of the United States are in power. We may not even if the Chicago movement should be successful. But let us wait and hope for the change and for peace. If it come not, then we must rely upon the omnipotence of truth and right, and the judicious economy and use of the means which God has given us. Patience, fortitude, courage, hope, and faith are as much elements of heroic patriotism as they are of Christian perfection.

It is indispensable to cherish them with untiring devotion, and as the only condition on which liberty can be gained or preserved. Her christening, from the beginning, was the baptism of blood. She requires her votaries to lock arms and shields around her altar, resolved to die freemen rather than live slaves. If this be the spirit of the people, ultimate success will be the reward for their sufferings and sacrifices. For their encouragement history is replete with examples, of which none is more striking or more inspiring than that of the revolution of 1776. Then let there be no despondency, no relaxation of effort and energy, no abatement of courage and heroic resolve.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
HERSCHEL V. JOHNSON.

Letters from Lieut. Gen. Grant.

MEMPHIS, TENN., August 26, 1863.

GENTLEMEN: I received a copy of the resolutions passed by the "loyal citizens of Memphis, at a meeting held at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, August 25, 1863," tendering me a public recognition.

In accepting this testimonial, which I do at a great sacrifice of my personal feelings, I simply desire to pay a tribute to the first public exhibition in Memphis of loyalty to the Government which I represent in the Department of the Tennessee. I should dislike to refuse, for considerations of personal convenience, to acknowledge, anywhere or in any form, the existence of sentiments which I have so long and so ardently desired to see manifested in this Department. The stability of this Government and the unity of this nation depend solely on the cordial support and the earnest loyalty of the people. While, therefore, I thank you sincerely for the kind expressions you have used toward myself, I am profoundly gratified at this public recognition, in the city of Memphis, of the power and authority of the Government of the United States.

I thank you, too, in the name of the noble army which I have the honor to command. It is composed of men whose loyalty is proved by their deeds of heroism and their willing sacrifices of life and health. They will rejoice with me that the miserable adherents of the rebellion, whom their bayonets have driven from this fair land, are being replaced by men who acknowledge human liberty as the only true foundation of human government. May your efforts to restore your city to the cause of the Union be as successful as has been theirs to reclaim it from the despotic rule of the leaders of the rebellion.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your very obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT,

Major General.

To Messrs. R. HUGH, and others, Committee, Memphis.

The following is an extract of a letter from Lieut. Gen. Grant, dated,

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
CITY POINT, VA., Aug. 16, 1864.

HON. E. B. WASHBURN:

DEAR SIR: I state to all citizens who visit me that all we want now to ensure an early restoration of the Union is a determined unity of sentiment North. The Rebels have now in their ranks their last man. The little boys and old men are guarding prisoners, guarding railroad bridges, and forming a good part of their garrisons for entrenched positions.

A man lost by them cannot be replaced. They have robbed alike the cradle and the grave to get their present force. Besides what they lose in frequent skirmishes and battles, they are now losing, from desertions and other causes, at least one regiment per day. With this drain upon them the end is not far distant if we will only be true to ourselves. Their only hope now is in a divided North. This might give them re-enforcements from Tennessee, Kentucky, Maryland and Missouri, while it would weaken us. With the draft quietly enforced, the enemy would become despondent and would make but little resistance.

I have no doubt but the enemy are exceedingly anxious to hold out until after the Presidential election. They have many hopes from its effects. They hope a counter revolution; they hope the election of a Peace candidate; in fact, like Micawber, they hope for something to turn up.

Our Peace friends, if they expect peace from separation, are much mistaken. It would be but the beginning of war, with thousands of Northern men joining the South because of our disgrace in allowing separation. To have "peace on any terms," the South would demand the restoration of their slaves already freed. They would demand indemnity for losses sustained, and they would demand a treaty which would make the North slave hunters for the South. They would demand pay or the restoration of every slave escaping to the North.

Yours truly, U. S. GRANT.

Grant and Sherman on the Draft.

CITY POINT, September 13, 10.30 A. M.

HON. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

We ought to have the whole number of men called for by the President in the shortest possible time. Prompt action in filling our armies will have more effect upon the enemy than a victory over them. They profess to believe, and make their men believe, there is such a party North in favor of recognizing Southern independence that the draft cannot be enforced. Let them be undeceived. Deserters come into our lines daily, who tell us that the men are nearly universally tired of the war, and that desertions would be much more frequent, but that they believe peace will be negotiated after the fall election.

The enforcement of the draft and prompt filling up of our armies will save the shedding of blood to an immense degree.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant General.

ATLANTA, Ga., September 13, 6. 30 A. M.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

I am very glad to hear the draft will be enforced. First we need the men; and secondly, they come as privates to fill up our old and tried regiments, with their experienced officers already on hand; and thirdly, because the enforcement of the law will manifest a power resident in our Government equal to the occasion.

Our Government, though a democracy, should, in times of trouble and danger, be able to wield the power of a great nation.

All is well here.

W. T. SHERMAN,
Major General.

Unpublished Letters from General Jackson.

The following letters of President Andrew Jackson, which have never before been published, have been handed to us by the gentleman to whom they were written. They contain sentiments and advice which we recommend to all who love the Union now.—N. Y. Post.

WASHINGTON, November 2, 1832.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just received your letter of the 31st ultimo, with the enclosure, for which I thank you.

I am well advised of the views and proceedings of the great leading nullifiers of the South in my native State, (S. C.) and weep for its fate, and over the delusion into which the people are led by the wickedness, ambition, and folly of their leaders. I have no doubt of the intention of their leaders, first to alarm the other States to submit to their views rather than a dissolution of the Union should take place. If they fail in this, to cover their own disgrace and wickedness, to nullify the tariff, and secede from the Union.

We are wide awake here. The Union will be preserved, rest assured of this. There has been too much blood and treasure shed to obtain it, to let it be surrendered without a struggle. Our liberty and that of the whole world rests upon it, as well as the peace, prosperity, and happiness of these United States. It must be persequated. I have no time to say more. My health is good, improved by the travel. With a tender of my kind salutations to you and your amiable family, I am, sincerely your friend,

ANDREW JACKSON.

Col. J. A. HAMILTON.

WASHINGTON, December 6, 1832.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of the 3d instant is just received. I accord with you fully in the propriety of the people giving fully and freely their sentiment and opinions on nullification, and the course pursued by South Carolina in her late proceedings.

The ordinance passed, when taken in connection with the Governor's Message, is rebellion and war against the Union. The raising of troops under them to resist the laws of the United States is absolute treason. The crisis must be, and as far as my constitutional and legal powers go will be, met with energy and firmness. Therefore the propriety of the public voice being heard, and it ought now to be spoken in a voice of thunder that will make the leaders of the nullifiers tremble, and which will cause the good citizens of South Carolina to retrace their steps and adhere to that Constitution of perpetual Union they have sworn to support. This reasonable procedure against the Union is a blow against not only our liberties, but the liberties of the world.

This nullifying movement in the South has done us great injury abroad, and must not only be promptly met and put down, but frowned down by public opinion. It is therefore highly proper for the people to speak all over the Union.

I am preparing a proclamation to the people of the South, and as soon as officially advised of these rebellious proceedings, will make a communication to Congress. I can say no more, as I am surrounded at present, and bid you, for the present, adieu.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Col. J. A. HAMILTON.

The Reconstruction of States.

LOUISIANA.

MESSAGE OF GOVERNOR HAHN.

The newly-elected Legislature of Louisiana met October 3, 1864, and the Senate was organized by the election of John E. Neellis as Secretary, and John T. Wood as Sergeant-at-Arms.

The House of Representatives elected the following officers: Speaker, S. Belden; Secretary, H. C. Westerfield; Sergeant-at-Arms, M. DeCoursey.

On the 6th, Governor Hahn delivered his message, from which we make the following extracts:

The unsettled condition of the country, the absence or destruction of most of the public archives and various other causes, have conspired to throw much difficulty in the way of a full organization of a State Government. The want of a Legislature, and the sudden uprooting of many important, yet unwise and illiberal laws and institutions, by military orders, rendered it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the Executive of the State to perform his duties satisfactorily and understandingly to the public, or to properly reconcile and harmonize the various conflicting rules of government and interests of the State. I was somewhat aided in this dilemma by the President of the United States, who, shortly after my inauguration, invested me, without any solicitation or suggestion on my part, "with the powers exercised hitherto by the Military Governor of Louisiana." Fortunately, the harmony which has characterized the intercourse of the military and civil authorities of this State has rendered the exercise of any such powers by me almost unnecessary. The principal subject upon which I have used these powers are, the appointment of public officers, the payment of money from the State Treasury for just and pressing purposes, and after recommendation from proper officers, and the exercise of executive clemency. As I said in my inaugural address, "for the moment civil government must necessarily harmonize with military administration;" and, while we recognize the paramount authority of the military power, we should not forget that it desires to surrender as speedily as possible the power to the people. The very object of the army of the United States in remaining here is to maintain Louisiana and the neighboring States in the Union; and the only way of doing this is to disperse and overthrow those who pretend to set up a rebel government, and to guarantee to the loyal a republican form of State government.

The great duty of the Legislature will be to provide a system of laws applicable to the new condition of things consequent upon the attempt to overthrow the Government. The obliteration of an interest so extended as that of slavery necessarily makes great changes in the events, opinions and business of the people; and the highest possible wisdom is required to adapt the State to its new condition. The change from servile to compensated labor requires careful, liberal and humane legislation, in order to secure the rights of those people who have not been accustomed to provide for and protect themselves. Inasmuch as Louisiana is the first State that makes this change upon an extended scale, so it ought to be the first to establish a form of government which shall meet all the exigencies of the case, securing to the public the products upon which the wealth of the State and people depend, and to laborers their full rights. * * * * *

Counsel should be taken and suggestions invited from intelligent people of all parts of the world upon this subject, and such system established as will, while it will meet our wants, furnish a model for the legislation of other States. It need not be executed in a hurry; the subject is of the highest possible importance, and should be dealt with in a spirit of enlightened liberality and humanity. The assistance of the military authorities furnishes an immediate government, but another system must be established ultimately, and the people cannot begin too soon to prepare. * * * * *

According to law, the election of Presidential electors is to take place in November. I know of no reason why Louisiana should not participate in that election on a footing with the other States. She has forfeited her rights under no Constitutional provision or Congressional statute. She has instituted civil rule, and has a loyal State Government, embracing executive, legislative, and judicial branches; all of which are in effective operation. In the attributes of State government, she stands the peer of the loyal States whose soil has never been trodden by the foot of rebellion, has suffered by the rebellion, and the temporary rule of the rebel Confederacy is her misfortune: but so far as the laws at present stand, it is no abridgement of the rights of her loyal citizens. * * * * *

Although the new Constitution has fixed the term of the State officers at four years, it has wisely provided that the term of those now in office (who were elected at a time when many parishes could not participate in the election) shall expire at an early day, in case of the restoration of peace in the whole State; and it is made my duty, as soon as an election can be held "in every parish of the State," to declare the fact and order a new election. I need hardly tell you that I shall have real pleasure when this event shall be at hand. While I have the best reasons for believing that the rebellion is now almost extinct in every portion of the State, and that only scattered fragments smoulder in insignificant proportions at different points, the time so anxiously desired by me to deliver my trust has not yet come. Let us hope that it may not be delayed many months. We have good grounds for believing that circumstances will soon have completely changed, so that every parish will have returned to its duty, assisted and protected by the national power, and the whole people will exercise their right to elect State officers.

LOUISIANA UNITED STATES SENATORS.

The free State Legislature of Louisiana has chosen Charles Smith, of the parish of St. Mary's, a United States Senator, vice Judah P. Benjamin, whose time expires with the ensuing session, and R. K. Cutler, to fill, for the three ensuing years, the seat which was left vacant by John S. Milled. Mr. Smith is a carpenter by trade. He has been Sheriff of, and is now the State Senator from, his own parish. Mr. Cutler is a leading lawyer of New Orleans, and has filled several important posts in the parish of Jefferson. He was a prominent member of the Constitutional Convention.

TENNESSEE.

1862, March 3—ANDREW JOHNSON was appointed Military Governor of Tennessee. For form of appointment, see page 179.

1863, September 19—The PRESIDENT gave him this further direction:

HON. ANDREW JOHNSON, Military Governor of Tennessee:

You are hereby authorized to exercise such powers as may be necessary and proper to enable the loyal people of Tennessee to present such a republican form of State government as will entitle the State to the guarantee of the United States therefor, and to be protected, under such State government, by the United States, against invasion and domestic violence. All according to the 4th section of the 4th article of the Constitution of the United States.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

1864, September 30—Gov. JOHNSON issued a proclamation, ordering an election in Tennessee for electors for President and Vice President, under certain regulations and restrictions, as follows:

PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
NASHVILLE, TENN., Sept. 30, 1864.

Whereas, a respectable portion of the loyal people of Tennessee, representing a large number of the counties of the State, and supposed to reflect the will of the Union men in their respective counties, recently held a convention in the city of Nashville, in which, among other things touching the reorganization of the State, they with great unanimity adopted the following resolutions;

2. Resolved, That the people of Tennessee who are now and have been attached to the National Union do hold an election for President and Vice President in the ensuing election in November.

3. Resolved, That the electors shall be the following and no others; the same being free white men, twenty-one years of age, citizens of the United States, and for six months previous to the election citizens of the State of Tennessee:

1st. All who have voluntarily borne arms in the service of the United States during the present war, and who are either in the service or have been honorably discharged.

2. All the known active friends of the Government of the United States in each county.

4. Resolved, That the citizen electors designated in the foregoing resolutions shall, at least fifteen days before the election, register their names with an agent to be appointed for that purpose, and no citizen not thus registered shall be allowed to vote. Such registration shall be open to the public for inspection, and to be executed according to such regulations as may hereafter be prescribed: Provided, that the officers of election, in the discharge of their duty, may reject any party so registered on proof of disloyalty.

5. Resolved, That, as means for ascertaining the qualifications of the voters, the registrars and officers holding the election may examine the parties on oath touching any matter of fact. And each voter, before depositing his vote shall be required to take and subscribe the following oath, viz:

I solemnly swear that I will henceforth support the Constitution of the United States, and defend it against the assaults of all enemies; that I am an active friend of the Government of the United States, and the enemy of the so-called Confederate States; that I ardently desire the suppression of the present rebellion against the Government of the United States; that I sincerely rejoice in the triumph of the armies and navies of the United States, and in the defeat and overthrow of the armies, navies, and of all armed combinations in the interest of the so-called Confederate States; that I will cordially oppose all armistices or negotiations for peace with rebels in arms, until the Constitution of the United States, and all laws and proclamations made in pursuance thereof, shall be established over all the people of every State and Territory embraced within the National Union, and that I will heartily aid and assist the loyal people in whatever measures may be adopted for the attainment of these ends; and further, that I take this oath freely and voluntarily, and without mental reservation. So help me God.

Said oath being prima facie evidence, subject to be disproved by other testimony.

6. Resolved, That the polls be opened at the county seat, or some other suitable place in each county, and the ballot-box be so guarded and protected as to secure to electors a free, fair, and impartial election, and that polls also be opened for the convenience of the soldiers, at such places as may be accessible to them.

And whereas, it further appears from the proceedings of said Convention, "That the Military Governor of the State of Tennessee is requested to execute the foregoing resolutions in such manner as he may think best subserves the interests of the Government."

And whereas, I, Andrew Johnson, Military Governor of the State of Tennessee, being anxious to co-operate with the loyal people of the State, and to encourage them in all laudable efforts to restore the State to law and order again, and to secure the ballot-box against the contamination of treason by every reasonable restraint that can be thrown around it, I do therefore order and direct that an election for President and Vice President of the United States of America be opened and held at the county seat, or other suitable place, in every county in the State of Tennessee, upon the first Tuesday after the first Monday in the month of November next, at which all citizens and soldiers, being free white men, twenty-one years of age, citizens of the United States, and for six months prior to the election citizens of the State of Tennessee, who have qualified themselves by registration, and who take the oath prescribed in the foregoing resolutions, shall be entitled to vote, unless said oath shall be disproved by other testimony, for the candidates for President and Vice President of the United States.

And to the end that the foregoing resolutions, which are made part of this proclamation, may be faithfully executed, and the loyal citizens of the State, and none others, be permitted to exercise the right of suffrage, I do hereby appoint the several gentlemen whose names are affixed to this proclamation to aid in said election, and superintend the registration of the loyal voters in their respective counties, as provided by the fourth resolution above quoted.

But as the day of election is near at hand, and there may be a difficulty in completing the registration within the time limited, it is not intended that the registration be an indispensable prerequisite to the qualification of the voter; and in such cases, where it is impracticable, and where the voter is of known and established loyalty, he shall be entitled to vote, notwithstanding he may not have registered his name as required by the foregoing resolution.

The election shall be opened, conducted, returns made, &c., in all respects as provided by the 4th chapter of the "Code of Tennessee," except so far as the same is modified by this proclamation.

But in cases where the County Court fail or neglect to appoint inspectors or judges of election, and there is no sheriff or other civil officer in the county qualified by law to open and hold said election, the registering agents hereto appended may act in his stead, and in all respects discharge the duties imposed in such cases upon sheriffs.

In like manner it is declared the duty of the military officers commanding Tennessee regiments, battalions, or detached squads, and surgeons in charge of the hospitals of Tennessee soldiers, to open and hold elections on the day aforesaid, under the same rules and regulations hereinbefore prescribed, and at such suitable places as will be convenient to the soldiers, who are hereby declared entitled to vote without oath or registration.

In testimony whereof, I, Andrew Johnson, Military Governor of the State of Tennessee, do hereunto set my hand, and have caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed at this Department, on the 30th day of September, A. D. 1864.

By the Governor: ANDREW JOHNSON. [L. S.]

Attest: EDWARD H. EAST, Secretary of State.

843. If the sheriff or other officer whose duty it is to attend at a particular place of voting under the foregoing provisions fail to attend, any justice of the peace present, or, if no justice of the peace be present, any three freeholders, may perform the duties prescribed by the preceding sections, or in case of necessity may act as officers or inspectors.

PROTEST AGAINST THE PROCLAMATION.

1864, October 15—JOHN LELLYETT, Esq., of Nashville, presented to the PRESIDENT this protest:

To his Excellency Abraham Lincoln,

President of the United States:

SIR: The undersigned, loyal citizens of the United States and of the State of Tennessee, on our own behalf and on behalf of the loyal people of our State, ask leave to submit this protest against the proclamation of his Excellency, Andrew Johnson, Military Governor, ordering an election to be held for President and Vice President, under certain regulations and restrictions therein set forth. A printed copy of said proclamation is herewith enclosed.

The Constitution of the United States provides that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors," &c. Under this provision of the Federal Constitution, the Legislature of Tennessee, years before the present rebellion, prescribed the mode of election to be observed, which will be found to differ essentially from the mode prescribed by the Military Governor. We herewith enclose a copy of the law of Tennessee governing the holding of said election.

The Military Governor expressly assumes, by virtue of authority derived from the President, so to alter and amend the election law of Tennessee, (enacted under authority of the Constitution of the United States, as above set forth,) as to make the same conform to his own edict as set forth in the proclamation aforesaid. He assumes so to modify our law as to admit persons to vote at the said election who are not entitled to vote under the law and the constitution of Tennessee. Instance this: our constitution and law require that each voter shall be "a citizen of the county wherein he may offer his vote for six months next preceding the day of election;" while the Governor's order only requires that he shall (with other qualifications named) be a citizen of Tennessee for six months, &c. This provision would admit to vote many persons not entitled by law.

We will, for the sake of brevity, pass over some less important points of conflict between the proclamation and the law, but will instance in this place another. By our law it is provided that the polls shall be opened in every civil district in each county in the State; but the proclamation provides only for their being opened at one place in each county. This provision would put out of the power of many legal voters to exercise the elective franchise.

We solemnly protest against these infringements of our law, conflicting as they do with the very letter of the Federal Constitution, because they are without authority, and because they will prevent a free, fair, and true expression of the will of the loyal people of Tennessee.

But we protest still more emphatically against the most unusual and impracticable test oath which it is proposed to require of all citizen voters in Tennessee.

[The oath is as follows: "I solemnly swear that I will henceforth support the Constitution of the United States, and defend it against the assaults of all enemies; that I am an active friend of the Government of the United States, and the enemy of the so-called Confederate States; that I ardently desire the suppression of the present rebellion against the Government of the United States; that I sincerely rejoice in the triumph of the armies of the United States, and in the defeat and overthrow of the armies, navies, and of all armed combinations in the interest of the so-called Confederate States; that I will cordially oppose all armistices or negotiations for peace with rebels in arms, until the Constitution of the United States, and all laws and proclamations made in pursuance thereof, shall be established over all the people of every State and Territory embraced within the national Union, and that I will heartily aid and assist the loyal people in whatever measures may be adopted for the attainment of these ends; and further, that I take this oath freely and voluntarily and without mental reservation. So help me God."]

A citizen, qualified to vote, and whose loyalty cannot be "disproved by other testimony," is to be required to swear, first, that he "will henceforth support the Constitution of the United States, and defend it against all enemies." This obligation we are willing to renew daily. But this is not yet deemed a sufficient test of loyalty. He is required to make oath and subscribe to a mass of vain repetitions concerning his activity as a friend of the Union and the enemy of its enemies—concerning his desires, his hopes, and fears—and that he finds it in his heart to rejoice over the scenes of blood and of wounds, of anguish and death, wherein his friends, his kindred, his loved ones are slain, or maimed, or made prisoners of war—whereby the land of his birth or adoption is made desolate, and lamentation and mourning are spread over the whole nation. While all the civilized world stands aghast in contemplation of the unequal horrors of our tremendous strife, the citizen of Tennessee is called upon by her Military Governor, under your authority, to swear that in these things he finds occasion to rejoice! As if this were still not enough, the citizen is further required to swear to the indefinite prolongation of this war, as follows: "That I will cordially oppose all armistices or negotiations for peace with rebels in arms until the Constitution of the United States, and all laws and proclamations made in pursuance thereof, shall be established over all the people of every State and Territory embraced within the National Union;" until (in brief) the war shall be at an end. Now, we freely avow to your Excellency, and to the world, that we earnestly desire the return of peace and good will to our now unhappy country; that we seek neither pleasure, profit, nor honor in the perpetuation of war; that we should feel bound as Christians, as patriots, and as civilized men—that we are bound by the oaths we have taken—to countenance and encourage any negotiations which may be entered into by the proper authorities with the intent to restore peace and union under the Constitution we have sworn to support and defend. We should be traitors to our country, false to our oaths—false, indeed, to the primary clause of the oath we are now discussing, to oppose such negotiations. We cannot consent to swear at the ballot-box a war of extermination against our countrymen and kindred, or to prolong by our opposition, for a single day after it can be brought to an honorable and lawful conclusion, a contest the most sanguinary and ruinous that has scourged mankind.

You will not have forgotten that in the month of July last you issued the following proclamation:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, July 18, 1864.

To whom it may concern :

Any proposition which embraces the restoration of peace, the integrity of the whole Union, and the abandonment of slavery, and which comes by and with an authority that can control the armies now at war against the United States, will be received and considered by the Executive Government of the United States, and will be met by liberal terms on other substantial and collateral points, and the bearer or bearers thereof shall have safe conduct both ways.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

This is certainly a proposition to treat with rebels in arms—with their chiefs. Are we now to understand by this proclamation of one acting under your authority, and himself a candidate with you for the second office, that even the above proposition is withdrawn—that you will henceforth have no negotiations upon any terms but unremitting war to the bitter end? Or are we to understand that while you hold this proposition open, or yourself free to act as your judgment may dictate, we, the citizens of Tennessee, shall swear to oppose your negotiations?

In the next breath, the voter who has already been thus far qualified is required to swear that he will "heartily aid and assist the loyal people in whatever measures may be adopted for the attainment of these ends." Adopted by whom? The oath does not say. We cannot tell what measures may be adopted. We cannot comment upon the absurdity of the obligation here imposed without danger of departing from that respectful propriety of language which we desire to observe in addressing the Chief Magistrate of the American people. But this is the clause of an oath which the candidate for the Vice Presidency requires at the lips of the loyal and qualified voters of Tennessee, before these citizens shall be allowed to vote for or against you and himself at the coming election!

For these reasons, and others which, for the sake of brevity, we omit, we solemnly protest against the interference of the Military Governor with the freedom of the elective franchise in Tennessee. We deny his authority and yours to alter, amend, or annul any law of Tennessee. We demand that Tennessee be allowed to appoint her electors as expressly provided by the Federal Constitution, which you have sworn to support, protect, and defend, in the manner which the Legislature thereof has prescribed. And to that end we respectfully demand of you, as the principal under whose authority this order has been issued, that the same shall be revoked. We ask that all military interference shall be withdrawn so far as to allow to the loyal men of Tennessee a full and free election. By the loyal men of Tennessee we mean those who have not participated in the rebellion, or given it aid and comfort; or who may have complied with such terms of amnesty as have been offered them under your authority.

On the 8th day of December, 1863, you, as President, issued a proclamation declaring that "a full pardon is hereby granted," "with restoration of all rights of property," &c., to each of our citizens having participated, directly or by implication, in the existing rebellion, (with certain exceptions,) "upon the condition that every such person shall take and subscribe an oath, and thenceforward keep and maintain said oath inviolate." And it is further provided in the proclamation aforesaid that in the contingency of the reorganization of a State Government in Tennessee, or certain other States named, the persons having taken the oath referred to, being otherwise qualified by the election law of the State, shall be entitled to vote. The undersigned would state that many of our citizens have complied in good faith with the terms of amnesty proposed in your proclamation aforesaid, and are, therefore, by reason of the full pardon granted them, fully entitled to vote and exercise all other rights belonging to loyal citizens, without let or hindrance; and we respectfully appeal to you, as President of the United States, to make good your promise of pardon to these citizens by the removal of all other and further hindrance to their exercise of the elective franchise.

But if it be claimed upon the plea of military necessity that guards and restrictions shall be thrown around the ballot-box in Tennessee, we still ask the withdrawal of the proclamation of the Military Governor, because the conditions thereby imposed upon the loyal men of Tennessee as a qualification for voters are irrelevant, unreasonable, and not in any sense a test of loyalty. But they pledge the citizen to oppose the lawful authorities in the discharge of their duty. The oath required is only calculated to keep legal and rightful voters from the polls. We suggest that no oath be required but such as is prescribed by law. Our people will not hesitate, however, to take the usual oath of loyalty—for example, in the language of the primary clause of the oath in question: "That I will henceforth support the Constitution of the United States, and defend it against the assaults of its enemies." Denying your right to make any departure from the law in the case, we shall, however, feel no hardship in this.

The Convention to which Gov. Johnson refers was a mere partisan meeting, having no authority, and not representing the loyal men of Tennessee in any sense.

The names of the signers of this protest have been placed before the people of Tennessee as candidates for electors, who, if chosen, are expected to cast the electoral voice of Tennessee for George B. McClellan for President and George H. Pendleton for Vice-President. By virtue of such position it becomes our province especially to appear before you in the attitude we do. We are aware that grave questions may arise, in any event, with regard to the regularity of the vote of Tennessee, in consequence of the partially disorganized condition of the State. The friends of your re-election, however, announced an electoral ticket, and the public became aware that preparations were being made for the holding of the election, leaving that matter no longer a question. Some time thereafter our electoral ticket was placed before the public, and within a few days followed the proclamation complained of. We, for ourselves and those we represent, are willing to leave all questions involving the right of Tennessee to participate in the election to the decision of competent authority.

After the foregoing paper had been read, a brief colloquy ensued between the President and Mr. Lellyett, as described in the following communication :

WASHINGTON, October 15, 1864.

To the Editors of the National Intelligencer :

I called upon the President to-day, and presented and read to him the above protest. Having concluded, Mr. Lincoln responded: "May I inquire how long it took you and the New York politicians to concoct that paper?"

I replied: "It was concocted in Nashville, without communication with any but Tennesseans. We communicated with citizens of Tennessee outside of Nashville, but not with New York politicians."

"I will answer," said Mr. Lincoln, emphatically, "that I expect to let the friends of George B. McClellan manage their side of this contest in their own way, and I will manage my side of it in my way."

"May we ask an answer in writing?" I suggested.

"Not now. Lay those papers down here. I will give no other answer now. I may or may not write something about this hereafter. I understand this. I know you intend to make a point of this. But go ahead. You have my answer."

"Your answer then, is, that you expect to let General McClellan's friends manage their side of this contest in their own way, and you will manage your side of it in your way?"

"Yes."

I then thanked the President for his courtesy in giving us a hearing at all, and took my leave.

Judge Mason of this city was present at the interview, to whom I refer in regard to the correctness of this report. On stepping outside the door of the Executive Mansion I immediately wrote down the President's emphatic response, and submitted it to Judge Mason and another gentleman who happened to be present, and they both pronounced it accurate.

And now I have a word to say to the people of the United States, who are or ought to be the masters of Abraham Lincoln. The paper which I had the honor to present to the President is not the "concoction of New York politicians," however that might affect its merits. It is the solemn voice of a once free and proud people, protesting against their own disfranchisement by the agent of Abraham Lincoln. It is the voice of those loyal men in Tennessee who have borne the reproach of a people they still loved, supporting the President in all lawful efforts to preserve the Union. The reward of our loyalty is disfranchisement. The cup of perjury is commended to our lips because it is known that we will not touch its contents. Judge ye between the people of Tennessee and Abraham Lincoln. It may be met that our solemn and respectful appeal should be thrown aside with a contemptuous sneer. Look to it. If you, the people of the Northern States, shall sustain this act of tyranny, your own time will soon come. If the President of the United States may "manage his side of this contest?" by setting aside the very letter of the Constitution and altering the elective laws of the States, so as to disfranchise his opponents, liberty is already dead.

JOHN LELLYETT.

The Hon. Charles Mason, having accompanied Mr. Lellyett in his visit to the President, and having been present at the interview accorded to Mr. Lellyett, has been called by the latter in the following note to authenticate his report of the conversation had with the President. The reply of Mr. Mason is also appended:

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15, 1864.

HON. CHAS. MASON:

DEAR SIR: I submit to your inspection what I have written in reference to my interview with the President to-day, and will ask you to state if you regard the same as an accurate report.

Respectfully,

JOHN LELLYETT.

— WASHINGTON, Oct. 15, 1864.

JOHN LELLYETT, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: In compliance with the request in your note of this day, I have only to say that I was present at the interview referred to. Your statement of what took place is substantially correct; and on all material points I believe it literally so.

Yours, truly,

CHAS. MASON.

[For President LINCOLN's reply see page 425.]

REPLY OF THE PROTESTANTS.

TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States:

SIR: Your letter in reply to the Tennessee Protest has reached us, and has no doubt been read by the people. The argument on this subject is nearly exhausted, but we have some additional and most important facts to submit to the people, in further elucidation of the subject.

Our wonder is not excited to learn that you had not seen the proclamation of Governor Johnson, and scarcely heard of it until presented by us. It is an evil of no small magnitude, connected with your Administration, that military subordinates assume despotic powers without asking the sanction of their superiors—even presuming to give law to the people by proclamation and to repeal and modify our laws at will. The idea that the President himself can make, or repeal, or modify a law of the land, State or national, constitutional or statutory, though freely practiced upon by yourself, is a doctrine of despotism in "irrepressible conflict" with the principles of public liberty. And when these things are done by subordinates, the evil becomes intolerably oppressive, and calls for the firmest and most active lawful resistance which a people deserving to be free can offer.

You tell us that "the movement set on foot by the convention and Governor Johnson does not, as seems to be assumed by you, emanate from the National Executive." What we did assume is, that the plan was promulgated by proclamation of the Military Governor, who has no authority but that derived directly from you, and it was given the force of law by his edict. It thus became indirectly your act; and now that you decline to order the edict to be recalled or modified, it becomes your own as fully as if it had emanated from you. "In no proper sense," you say, "can it be considered other than an independent movement of at least a portion of the loyal people of Tennessee." Independent of what? Manifestly independent of all lawful authority—Independent of and at war with the Federal Constitution, which you have both sworn to support, protect, and defend. What right has a citizen or officer to favor an "independent movement" at variance with the Constitution, and support the same by force of arms? What less is this than waging war against the Constitution of the United States and the Government established thereby? "An independent movement" against the Constitution, supported by a Military Governor by force of arms! recommended by an assembly calling itself a convention!

Such in principle were the "independent movements" of governors and "portions of the people" which set at first in motion the great rebellion in the South with which we are contending. The "convention" calls upon a Military Governor to order an "independent movement" to help your re-election, and to support it by force of arms, placing "guards" around the ballot-box. And their recommendation is adopted by the Military Governor and "made" by him "part of this proclamation." And yet you say, "I do not perceive in the plan any menace of coercion or violence toward any one." Just so with the earlier "independent movement" of Governor Harris in this State, which we opposed as we oppose this. There was no menace of coercion or violence toward any who should consent to see the Constitution violated and the "political plan" carried out without opposition. But the bayonet was kept in view, as it is in this case. Public meetings were menaced, and perhaps broken up by armed force. And so it is now.

Those opposed to the "independent movement" were denounced as traitors, and so they are now. Troops from our own and from other States were used to overawe the people, and so they are now. We had vigilance committees and mob violence then. We have now secret leagues, and are liable at any time to arbitrary arrest, as well as to mob violence, which is now used in our midst.

These are general facts, in support of which we add the following specifications:

We have held a number of peaceable and loyal public meetings in this city, more than one of which has been "menaced" by your partisans. On the 21st instant such a meeting was held at the court-house in this city. It was held "peacefully" and conducted "loyally," the assembly consisting chiefly of the "friends of George B. McClellan." A number of provost guards were present, by request of those who conducted the meeting, to preserve order. The meeting had been addressed by a gentleman who is an exile from his home because of his loyalty, and who has spent much time in the military service of the Government during the war. One of the undersigned, a McClellan Elector, [Hon. Baillie Peyton,] had taken the stand to address the meeting, when the hall was suddenly entered by a large party of soldiers, and the meeting violently broken up. These men rushed in with guns and drawn pistols, crying "Disperse you d—d rebels and traitors!" extinguishing the lights and driving the people from the hall.

We specify further that on the 25th instant, the rioters, thirty in number, published a card in the "Nashville Times," the organ in this city of Governor Johnson, to which they appended their names, as "all members of Company D, 1st Tennessee Light Artillery." This company was raised and its officers appointed (as we understand) under the superintendence of Governor Johnson. The rioters speak thus in their card: "Neither Governor Johnson, nor any other individual outside of the men who were active participants, know anything of our intentions till the affair was over. Some colored men may have followed us, but we knew nothing of them." "We do not fear a court-martial," they defiantly add, "and therefore cheerfully give our names as loyal and Union-loving soldiers."

We specify further that on the evening of the 24th inst., only three days after the McClellan meeting was broken up, our streets were paraded by an immense procession of negroes bearing torches and transparencies, with such inscriptions on the latter as "Lincoln and Johnson," "Liberty or Death." Some disorders occurred in connection with this demonstration, and shots were freely fired by the negroes—some at a window where white persons were standing, and some at persons on the streets. One of the latter (an employé of the Government) was dangerously if not mortally wounded, and it was thought others were hit. In the course of these orgies the procession waited on Governor Andrew Johnson, at the Capitol, and he delivered to the negro assembly an address. A report of his speech was published and re-published in his organ, the "Times," and from that report we take the following extract. Governor Johnson says:

"I speak to-night as a citizen of Tennessee. I am here on my own soil and mean to remain here, and fight this great battle of freedom through to the end. Loyal men from this day forward are to be the controllers of Tennessee's grand and sublime destiny, and REBELS must be DUMB. We will not listen to their counsels. NASHVILLE IS NO LONGER THE PLACE FOR THEM TO HOLD THEIR MEETINGS. LET THEM GATHER THEIR TREASONABLE CONCLAVES ELSEWHERE—AMONG THEIR FRIENDS IN THE CONFEDERACY. THEY SHALL NOT HOLD THEIR CONSPIRACIES IN NASHVILLE."

The language of the rioters, "Disperse REBELS and TRAITORS," and the common application of such terms of abuse and terror to the friends of General McClellan here, do not admit of our ignoring the meaning of Governor Johnson in the language quoted. The allusion is evidently to the riotous dispersion of our meeting three evenings previous. It also seems to adopt your idea, that as a citizen of Tennessee he "has the right to favor any political plan he chooses." And he unmistakably evinces his determination to "manage" his "side of his contest in his own way."

"Governor Johnson," you say, "like any other loyal citizen, has a right to favor any political plan he chooses." We do not so read the duty of the citizen. Some of the political plans of our day are devised to overturn the Constitution and Government of the United States—and this is one of them. The Southern rebellion is another. Neither the citizen nor Governor Johnson has a right to favor such plans, unless it be upon the principle advanced by you as a member of Congress, that "any people, any where, being inclined, and having the power, have the right" to revolutionize their Government; that "this is a most valuable, a most sacred right." We shall despair of the republic if these principles of anarchy, as embodied in you, shall be adopted by the people in your re-election.

In the face of the reign of terror which has been established in Tennessee under the eyes of Governor Johnson, you say to us: "Do as you please on your own account, peacefully and loyally, and Governor Johnson will not molest you, but will protect you against violence as far as is in his power." If you mean that Governor Johnson will allow us to stay away from the polls without molestation, we trust there is some truth in your assurance. But if you mean to suggest that we hold separate elections "on our own account," and to assure us that we shall not be molested but protected in such a "movement," we know by experience, and by the facts above set forth, that your assurance is a cruel mockery. We will not advise our citizens to put in jeopardy their lives in going through the farce you propose, of holding an election under the laws at one ballot-box, while Governor Johnson holds an election under his "plan" at another. Too many unoffending citizens have already been murdered in our streets by negro soldiers—too many reputable women have been insulted by them. We do not wish to provoke further outrage. There will be no election for President in Tennessee in 1864. You and Governor Johnson may "manage your side of it in your own way," but it will be no election.

After consultation with our friends, therefore, in different parts of the State, and having communicated with nearly all of our colleagues, we respectfully announce to the people of Tennessee that in view of what is set forth above—in view of the fact that our people are overawed by military power, the laws set aside and violated with impunity—and in view of the fact that we have appealed in vain to the President whose duty it is "to see that the laws be faithfully executed," and that those who act by his authority shall hold sacred the liberties of the people; in view of these things we announce that the McClellan Electoral Ticket in Tennessee is withdrawn.

Suppression of Newspapers—(See pp. 188, 194.)

Below is a newspaper report of a trial in October, 1864, growing out of the suppression of a newspaper in Pennsylvania:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—Judges Grier and Cadwalader.—Wm. H. Hodgson vs. Wm. Millward, United States Marshal. This is an action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the seizure of the presses, type, paper, and other printing material used in the publication of the newspaper known as the Jeffersonian, published at West Chester, in this State. The seizure was made on the 23d of August, 1861, by the marshal's deputies, Messrs. Jenkins and Schuyler. The office was closed, and plaintiff alleges that he was deprived of the use of his property, and thereby compelled to suspend the issue of his paper until the 14th of October, 1861, to his great loss and damage, and for which he now seeks to recover. The authority for the seizure, and upon which the defendant relies as his defence, was the following warrant issued by the then United States District Attorney, Geo. A. Coffey, Esq., who claimed to have issued the same by direction of the Secretary of War at Washington:

EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
OFFICE U. S. ATTORNEY.

To WM. MILLWARD, Marshal:

According to the provisions of the act of 6th of August, 1861, I hereby request you to seize upon all copies of the Jeffersonian newspaper, published in the borough of West Chester, Chester County, Pennsylvania, as well as all property of every kind whatsoever used in and about the publication of said newspaper that may be found in your bailiwick, for condemnation and confiscation according to law, I being authorized by the President of the United States.

GEORGE A. COFFEY, United States Attorney.

PHILADELPHIA, 23d August, 1861.

The case was tried before Chief Justice Lowrie, in the Supreme Court at Nisi Prius, in February last, and was prosecuted to judgment, but subsequently, under the provisions of the act of Congress of March 3d, 1863, entitled "an act relating to habeas corpus cases, and for other purposes," the record of the proceedings in the nisi prius was removed into this court, where yesterday it came up for trial de novo.

The evidence offered to the court and jury was mainly that adduced upon the former trial, and at that time reduced to writing. The defence set up that the order of District Attorney Coffey to seize the property was a justification, and as the act of Congress authorized the President to direct such seizure, the jury, if they found that Mr. Coffey did receive such instructions, and in turn issued his order to Mr. Millward, the verdict should be for the defendants.

Defendant's points, on which the court was requested to charge, were as follows:

I. That by the third section of the act of Congress of August 6, 1861, the District Attorney of the Eastern District of the United States is authorized to institute proceedings for the confiscation and condemnation of any property within the said district, of the character described in the first section of the act, and that for this purpose the said District Attorney had authority to direct the seizure of such property so found, preparatory to filing an information in and issuing an attachment from the proper court, and that his order to the marshal of the district to seize the Jeffersonian printing-press, and other materials, followed up as it was by the proceedings in the courts of the United States, is a legal justification of the marshal and his deputies for such seizure.

If the court should decline to affirm the foregoing proposition, then it is respectfully requested to charge:

1. That if the jury find from the evidence that the order from the District Attorney to the marshal was issued under the authority of the President of the United States, then the said order is a justification to the marshal and his deputies for the seizure complained of in this suit.

II. That after the information was filed in the District Court of the United States, and the attachment was issued therefrom and the property attached, it was in the custody of the law, and the marshal was in nowise liable for damages for its detention, and that the plaintiff can only recover for the taking and detention of the property from the 23d of August to the 12th of September, a period of twenty days.

III. That the measure of damages in this case is the actual pecuniary loss which the plaintiff sustained by reason of the possession of his printing establishment having been taken by the marshal and continued for the period of twenty days, and that there is no evidence in the cause which would justify the jury in giving vindictive damages.

JUDGE GRIER'S CHARGE.

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: After the elaborate arguments of counsel, it is not necessary to say much about the facts of this case. It is your province to deal with the facts. You are the sole judges of them, and are to apply to them the principles of law that will be laid down by the court. You are not to decide the law. That is for the court. You must take care not to let party feeling or passion influence you. You must hear the small as well as the great. While you may recollect that this was done in times of great excitement, yet that a trespass, and a gross one, has been committed, it is not denied. It is a fact, to be sure, for you, but it is not denied that property of the plaintiff was taken. If so, have the defendants made out a justification?

The court instruct you, they have not. The marshal cannot plead the order of the Attorney General or his deputy. This is not a justification. If a marshal arrests A when told to arrest B, it is no defence that he had a right to arrest B.

The marshal would have had a right to seize for condemnation the kind of property specified in the act of Congress of the 6th of August, 1861, without the order of the District Attorney. But this act had nothing to do with the liberty of the press. It never gave authority for such a seizure as the present one.

The order of the District Attorney that has been shown here was no more of a justification to the marshal than if issued by any one now in the court-house.

The District Attorney had no right to make such an order. You may arrest a man for murder without warrant, but you show the man committed the felony; otherwise it is no defence to an action of trespass.

If the property, then, was within the meaning of the act of Congress, the seizure was justifiable; if not, the marshal is liable in damages. Certain points, or prayers for instruction on the law, have been submitted to me by the defendants, which I will now proceed to answer:

I. The first point, to a certain extent, is true. The District Attorney might advise the issuing of an attachment, and seize property that was liable under the act of Congress. But it is not the law that this order of the District Attorney was a justification of the marshal in this case. The marshal could act, if the property was liable to seizure, as well without the order of the District Attorney as with it. If the court had decided that the property was liable, the marshal would have been justified. But if the court had decided the property was not properly seized, then the seizure was unlawful and it was trespass, and the marshal was liable. There is not even a certificate as to probable cause for seizure. But I say nothing on this head, for it does not appear that it was asked, or that it was a case for it. No attempt, however, was made at the hearing of the information in the circuit court to show any cause. It was clear that the act of Congress did not apply. There was no law forbidding this man, the plaintiff, to write against the war. I doubt whether any act of Congress could have prevented a man giving his opinions candidly against the war. He had a right to write and to print. The order of the District Attorney makes the case no better. He had no right to issue the order. The marshal had no right to obey it. It was no warrant. If the marshal had consulted counsel, counsel would have told him he was not to obey such an order. I doubt any counsel could have been found who would have advised obedience to such an order.

II. In answer to the second point, I say there is no competent evidence of any authority from the President or any of his Cabinet, and if there had been it would make the case no better. If there had been a proceeding in court, and a seizure under protest, it would have protected the officer. But the marshal or sheriff cannot justify under an order like this.

III. As to the third point, I instruct you on the question of damages that the jury should give full compensatory damages for all the loss that has accrued to the plaintiff. But the damages should not be vindictive or punitive. There is no evidence that the marshal acted from malice, or was influenced by political feeling, or committed any excess. There is some evidence that the District Attorney did this to gratify some people out of doors. He is not, however, here to answer, and this is not imputable to the marshal. But, for the purpose of vindicating public justice when an officer of the law commits an act almost without a pretence of authority, the damages should be exemplary to vindicate the outraged law, that men in authority may be careful how they trespass on the rights of citizens. There is a difference in this respect between the case of a public officer and a private person, no matter how high the public officer—even the President or one of his Secretaries. The marshal is here liable for the whole time the property was detained. He is liable for all the damages from the beginning to the end. The decree of this court was conclusive against him. I have thus laid down the principles of law which are to guide you, and it will be for you to apply them to the facts of the cause.

The jury was out about twenty hours, and returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $504 23. George W. Biddle and Wm. B. Reed for plaintiff; John C. Knox and David Webster for defendant.

Colored Persons as Witnesses.

To complete the record on pages 242, 243, it should be stated that these proceedings were prior to those there recorded:

Pending the emancipation bill for the District of Columbia, Second Session of Thirty-Seventh Congress, in Senate, 1862, April 3—MR. SUMNER, moved to amend Section 7, by adding the words: "without the exclusion of any witness on account of color;" which was agreed to, yeas 26, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Browning, Chandler, Clark, Colamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Howe, King, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Pomeroy, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilmot, Wilson of Mass.—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Carlile, Davis, Kenne'ly, Nesmith, Powell, Saulsbury, Willey, Wilson of Missouri, Wright.—0.

There was no separate vote in the House on this proposition.

Connected with this subject, as stated on page 243, is the following opinion of Judge John C. Underwood, of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, delivered at the late term:

[From the Alexandria, Va., State Journal.]

United States District Court, District of Virginia, in the matter of the petition of Israel Dorsey, a citizen of Massachusetts.

The use of the courts of the country, and the right to give testimony in them are privileges so fundamental and important to the security of personal and domestic peace, as to make their denial one of the greatest wrongs, next to slavery itself, which can be inflicted on a human being.

If the denial is permitted the victim may be robbed upon the highway, his house burned over his head, his wife or child ravished or murdered before his eyes without remedy or redress. We see, therefore, that the right to testify in courts of justice is not only essential to personal dignity and safety, but it is the very bulwark of defence of all other individual, domestic, and social rights, and that nothing but a conviction of a high crime can possibly justify its invasion. The clause of the United States Constitution on which the petitioner relies is the first of the second section of Article 4, and is in these words:

"The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

Alexander Hamilton, in commenting upon this clause in the 80th number of the Federalist, says:

"It may be esteemed the basis of the Union. And if it be a just principle that every government ought to possess the means of executing its own provisions, by its own authority, it will follow that in order to the inviolable maintenance of that equality of privileges and immunities to which the citizens of the Union will be entitled, the national judiciary ought to preside in all cases in which one State or its citizens are opposed to another State or its citizens. To secure the full effect of so fundamental a provision against all evasion and subterfuge, it is necessary that its construction should be committed to that tribunal, which, having no local attachments, will be likely to be impartial between the different States and their citizens, and which, owing its official existence to the Union, will never be likely to feel any bias inauspicious to the principles on which it is founded."

In the same paper he says: "There ought always to be a constitutional method to give efficacy to constitutional provisions." It will be remembered that, to give effect to this very provision, and to secure the invaded rights of her citizens, the Legislature of Massachusetts many years ago sent an eminent jurist, Judge Hoar, to the State of South Carolina, with an appeal to the courts of justice. His appeal was rudely rejected, and himself and daughter by mob violence driven from that State of lawless madmen, who were then just beginning their wild rush from the crime of slavery to the kindred crimes of treason and rebellion against the best Government that ever blessed the world. Nor is it too much to assert that the neglect to give practical effect to this constitutional provision has been an efficient cause of the war now desolating the country.

In support of these views the case of Corfield vs. Coryell, 4th volume Washington Circuit Court Reports, pages 230 and 231, is directly in point and would seem conclusive. Mr. Justice Washington in his opinion says of the clause in question:

"The inquiry is, what are the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States? We find no hesitation in confining these expressions to those privileges and immunities which are in their nature fundamental. They may be all comprehended under the following general heads: Protection by the Government; the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety. The right of a citizen of one State to pass through or to reside in any other State, for purposes of trade, agriculture, professional pursuits or otherwise, to claim the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, to institute and maintain actions of any kind in the courts of the State, to take, hold, and dispose of property, real and personal, and an exemption from higher taxes or impositions than are paid by the other citizens of the State. These and many others which might be mentioned are strictly privileges and immunities, and the enjoyment of them by the citizens of each State in every other State are manifestly calculated (to use the expressions of the preamble of the corresponding provision in the old articles of confederation) the better to secure and perpetuate mutual friendship and intercourse among the people of the different States of the Union."

The right to testify must be included in the foregoing enumeration as a part of the right to use the courts, and several of the rights enumerated are certainly less vital and fundamental than the right in question.

No one who has read the able opinion of Attorney General Bates, utterly demolishing the unfortunate obiter dicta in the Dred Scott case, can doubt that colored men may be citizens of the United States and of the several States; and indeed, all the counsel in this case seem to admit that the petitioner is a citizen of Massachusetts.

This court has no doubt that a citizen of Massachusetts has a right to demand the protection of his oath, and the use of the courts of Virginia, or any other State of this Union, in virtue of the above-quoted constitutional provision, which, like a treaty stipulation between independent States, abrogates every State law which may attempt to defeat its wise and benevolent and truly national operation.

Massachusetts may with perfect propriety say to Virginia—no matter with what wrongs, for the sake of sustaining a bloody and barbarous system, you outrage humanity in the persons of colored men born and reared upon your own soil, I demand of you, by the sacred guaranty of your constitutional obligations, that the humblest of my citizens when a sojourner in your territory, shall be secure in all the great fundamental rights of human nature.

On the 22d day of June, 1772, the court of the King's Bench decided in the case of James Somerset, claimed as a slave by a Virginia planter named Charles Stewart, that "the state of slavery is of such a nature that it is incapable of being introduced on any reasons, moral or political, but only by positive law. It is so odious that nothing can be suffered to support it but positive law, and therefore the black must be discharged." Such in that celebrated case was the language of Lord Mansfield, the most brilliant light in that constellation of British judges who made their land immortal and raised themselves to the most sublime moral elevation by stooping to lift the lowly and crushed of their fellow-citizens, and to place them upon the great table-land of British security and protection. It was on the argument of the same case that Counselor Davy made the never-to-be-forgotten declaration that the air of England was "too pure for a slave to breathe in."

It is time for us to say the soil of Virginia, soaked by the blood of so many martyrs of freedom, is too sacred to be ever again pressed by the footstep of a slave.

The Senator from Virginia, who in 1850 excited the indignation of all christendom by demanding of Congress additional enactments to facilitate man and woman hunting through the length and breadth of the country, freely admitted that there was no positive law in Virginia establishing slavery, and that the system rested alone upon custom. He might well have added,

"It is a custom

More honored in the breach than the observance."

How then can any one who respects the humane principles declared in Lord Mansfield's time-honored opinion, for one moment regard slavery or any of its incidents as of any legal force in this State?

This court will always be ready to apply Lord Mansfield's principles to slavery and its supports and incidents, and the law in question is nothing more, and it has also the strongest conviction that the State law excluding the testimony of colored men from the courts of justice is utterly null and void, because it is utterly repugnant to her glorious Declaration of Rights, which, following the decision of Lord Mansfield, was adopted in June, 1776, as part of the constitution of the State. Never has that Declaration been repealed, but it has been repeatedly reaffirmed and continued as the basis of every State constitution of Virginia up to and including that of 1864.

Among the provisions of that Declaration are the following:

1. That all men are by nature equally free and independent, and have certain inherent rights, of which, when they enter into a state of society, they cannot, by any compact, deprive or divest their posterity; namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety.

4. That no man or set of men are entitled to exclusive or separate emoluments or privileges from the community, but in consideration of public services.

15. That no free government or the blessing of liberty can be preserved to any people but by a firm adherence to justice, moderation, temperance, frugality and virtue, and by a frequent recurrence to fundamental principles.

In the light of such guarantees the enactment excluding the testimony of any man unconvicted of an infamous crime could not be executed or tolerated for a moment by a civilized and christian people, but for the debasing and demoralizing influence of the great abomination of slavery; which, invading every department of society, ascending even the pulpit and the halls of justice, has too successfully labored to poison and paralyze the public conscience, pronouncing itself, with all the blazen impudence of the bottomless pit, a divine institution, and asserting the cruel doctrine that the dearest human rights are only skin deep, and that dusky men have none which paler men are bound to respect.

Never should the courts of Virginia deny this fundamental privilege of manhood to any innocent human being, and least of all to a citizen of Massachusetts—the cradle of the American Revolution of 1776—the first State to abolish slavery, the first to scatter the seeds of knowledge and science throughout her bounds, to bless all the people who dwell within the influence of her generous and beneficent institutions.

Had Congress clearly conferred upon this court the necessary power, the relief prayed for by the petitioner would be cheerfully and speedily granted. But the method of proceeding in order to secure the benefit of a right fully guaranteed by the Constitution has been left in great doubt and obscurity from some cause, probably from an influence which in the future will neither be felt nor feared. With a view, therefore, of obtaining the aid of Congress at the approaching session, and with the hope also that the Legislature of this State, soon to assemble, may do itself and our old Commonwealth the honor of wiping the wicked enactment, excluding the testimony of colored men in any of our courts, from our code of laws, burying it in the same grave with its barbarous twin brother, slavery, thus obviating the necessity of further action by this court, the case is put over for final action, and, if desired, for further argument, to the next term.

Gen. Grant's Orders Respecting Fugitive Slaves.

As an addenda to the military reports, orders, and proclamations, respecting "contrabands," on pages 244, 253, the following, issued at different times by Gen. Grant, and not before published as a whole, are inserted:

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF WEST TENNESSEE,
FORT DONELSON, February 26, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS } No. 14.

I. General Orders No. 3, series 1861, from Headquarters Department of the Missouri, is still in force, and must be observed. The necessity of its strict enforcement is made apparent by the numerous applications from citizens for permission to pass through the camps to look for fugitive slaves. In no case whatever will permission be granted to citizens for this purpose.

II. All slaves at Fort Donelson at the time of its capture, and all slaves within the line of military occupation that have been used by the enemy in building fortifications, or in any manner hostile to the Government, will be employed by the Quartermaster's Department for the benefit of the Government, and will under no circumstance be permitted to return to their masters.

III. It is made the duty of all officers of this command to see that all slaves above indicated are promptly delivered to the Chief Quartermaster of the district.

By order of Brig. Gen. U. S. GRANT:

JNO. A. RAWLINS, A. A. G.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF WEST TENNESSEE,
CORINTH, MISS., August 11, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS } No. 72.

Recent acts of Congress prohibit the army from returning fugitives from labor to their claimants, and authorizing the employment of such persons in the service of the Government. The following orders are therefore published for the guidance of the army in this military district in this matter:

I. All fugitives thus employed must be registered, the names of the fugitives and claimants given, and must be borne upon morning reports of the command in which they are kept, showing how they are employed.

II. Fugitive slaves may be employed as laborers in the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Engineer Departments, and wherever by such employment a soldier may be saved to the ranks. They may be employed as teamsters, as company cooks, (not exceeding four to a company), or as hospital attendants or nurses. Officers may employ them as private servants, in which latter case the fugitive will not be paid or rationed by the Government. Negroes, not thus employed, will be deemed unauthorized persons, and must be excluded from the camps.

III. Officers and soldiers are prohibited from enticing slaves to leave their masters. When it becomes necessary to employ this kind of labor, commanding officers of posts or troops must send details (always under the charge of a suitable non-commissioned officer) to press into service the slaves of disloyal persons to the number required.

IV. Citizens within the reach of any military station, known to be disloyal and dangerous, may be ordered away or arrested, and their crops and stocks taken for the benefit of the Government or the use of the army.

V. All property taken from rebel owners must be duly reported and used for the benefit of Government, and be issued to troops through the proper departments, and when practicable the act of taking should be avowed by the written certificate of the officer taking, to the owner or agent of such property.

It is enjoined on all commanding officers to see that this order is strictly executed. The demoralization of troops consequent on being left to execute laws in their own way, without a proper head, must be avoided.

GENERAL ORDERS } No. 25.

[Extract.]

I. Corps, division, and post commanders will afford all facilities for the completion of the negro regiments now organizing in this department. Commissioners will issue supplies, and Quartermasters will furnish stores on the same requisitions and returns as are required from other troops.

It is expected that all commanders will especially exert themselves in carrying out the policy of the Administration, not only in organizing colored regiments and rendering them efficient, but also in removing prejudice against them.

GENERAL ORDERS }
No. 51. }

I. At all military posts in States within the Department, where slavery has been abolished by the proclamation of the President of the United States, camps will be established for such freed people of color as are out of employment.

II. Commanders of posts or districts will detail suitable officers from the army as superintendents of such camps. It will be the duty of such superintendents to see that suitable rations are drawn from the Subsistence Department for such people as are confined to their care.

III. All such persons supported by the Government will be employed in every practicable way, so as to avoid, as far as possible, their becoming a burden upon the Government. They may be hired to planters or other citizens, on proper assurances that the negroes so hired will not be run off beyond the military jurisdiction of the United States; they may be employed on any public works; in gathering crops from abandoned plantations; and generally, in any manner local commanders may deem for the best interests of the Government, in compliance with law and the policy of the Administration.

IV. It will be the duty of the Provost Marshal at every military post to see that every negro within the jurisdiction of the military authority is employed by some white person or is sent to the camps provided for freed people.

V. Citizens may make contracts with freed persons of color for their labor, giving wages per month in money, or employ families of them by the year on plantations, &c., feeding, clothing, and supporting the infirm as well as the able-bodied, and giving a portion—not less than one-twentieth—of the commercial part of their crops, in payment for such service.

VI. Where negroes are employed under this authority, the parties employing will register with the Provost Marshal their names, occupation, and residence, and the number of negroes employed. They will enter into such bonds as the Provost Marshal, with the approval of the local commander, may require, for the kind treatment and proper care of those employed, and as security against their being carried beyond the employer's jurisdiction.

VII. Nothing in this order is to be construed to embarrass the employment of such colored persons as may be required by the Government.

By order of Major General U. S. GRANT:

Acting Asst. Adjt. Genl.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE TENNESSEE,
VICKSBURG, Miss., August 23, 1863.

GENERAL ORDERS }
No. 53. }

I. Hereafter, negroes will not be allowed in or about the camps of white troops, except such as are properly employed and controlled.

II. They may be employed in the Quartermaster's Department, Subsistence Department, Medical Department, as hospital nurses and laundresses, in the Engineer Department as pioneers. As far as practicable, such as have been or may be rejected as recruits for colored regiments by the examining surgeon will be employed about hospitals and in pioneer corps.

III. In regiments and companies they may be employed as follows: One cook to each fifteen men, and one teamster to each wagon. Officers may employ them as servants, but not in greater numbers than they are entitled to commutation for.

IV. Commanders of regiments and detachments will see that all negroes in or about their respective camps, not employed as provided in this order, are collected and turned over to the Provost Marshal of the division, post, or army corps to which their regiment or detachment belongs.

V. Provost Marshals will keep all negroes thus coming into their hands from straggling and wandering about, until they can be put in charge of the superintendent of the camp for colored people nearest them; and all negroes unemployed in accordance with this or previous orders, not in and about camps of regiments and detachments, will be required to go into the camps established for negroes, and it is enjoined upon Provost Marshals to see that they do so.

VI. Recruiting for colored regiments in negro camps will be prohibited, except when special authority to do so is given.

VII. All able-bodied negro men who are found, ten days after publication of this order, without a certificate of the officer or person employing them, will be regarded as unemployed, and may be pressed into service. Certificates given to negroes must show how, when, and by whom they are employed, and if as officers' servants, that the officer employing them has not a greater number than by law he is entitled to commutation for.

Assistant Adjutant General.

Protection to Colored Soldiers.

On page 280 is the President's order on this subject, which has been the occasion of more or less correspondence between the Union and Rebel authorities. The latest and most satisfactory statement is included in the subjoined correspondence:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
October 19, 1864.

LIEUT. GEN. U. S. GRANT, Commanding U. S. Armies:

GENERAL: In accordance with instructions from the Honorable Secretary of the Confederate States, I have the honor to call your attention to the subject of two communications recently addressed by Major General B. F. Butler, an officer under your command, to the Hon. Robert Ould, commissioner for the exchange of prisoners. For the better understanding of the matter, I enclose copies of the communications.

You will perceive by one of them that the writer has placed a number of officers and men belonging to the Confederate service, prisoners of war captured by the United States forces, at labor in the canal at Dutch Gap, in retaliation, as is alleged, for a like number of Federal colored soldiers, prisoners of war in our hands, who are said to have been put to work on our fortifications. The evidence of this fact is found in the affidavits of two deserters from our service.

The other letter refers to a copy of a notice issued by a Confederate officer commanding a camp near Richmond, calling upon the owners to come forward and establish their claims to certain negroes in the custody of that officer. The writer of the letter proceeds to state that some of the negroes mentioned in the notice are believed to be soldiers of the United States Army, captured in arms, and that, upon that belief, he has ordered to such manual labor as he deems most fitting to meet the exigency an equivalent number of prisoners of war held by the United States, and announces that he will continue to order to labor captives in war to a number equal to that of all the United States soldiers whom he has reason to believe are held to service or labor by the Confederate forces, until he shall be notified that the alleged practice on the part of the Confederate authorities has ceased.

Before stating the facts with reference to the particular negroes alluded to, I beg to explain the policy pursued by the Confederate Government towards this class of persons when captured by our forces.

All negroes in the military or naval service of the United States taken by us, who are not identified as the property of citizens or residents of any of the Confederate States, are regarded as prisoners of war, being held to be proper subjects of exchange, as I recently had the honor to inform you. No labor is exacted from such prisoners by the Confederate authorities.

Negroes who owe service or labor to citizens or residents of the Confederate States, and who, through compulsion, persuasion, or their own accord, leave their owners and are placed in the military or naval service of the United States occupy a different position.

The rights to the service or labor of negro slaves in the Confederate States is the same now as when the States were members of the Federal Union. The constitutional relations and obligations of the Confederate States to the owners of this species of property are the same as those so frequently and so long recognized as those appertaining to the Government of the United States with reference to the same class of persons by virtue of its organic law.

From the earliest period of the independence of the American States it has been held that one of the duties incumbent upon the several common governments under which they have from time to time been associated was the return to their lawful owners of slaves recaptured from the public enemy. It has been uniformly held that the capture or abduction of a slave does not impair the right of the owner to such a slave, but that the right attaches to him immediately on recapture.

Such was the practice of the American States during their struggle for independence. The Government under which they were then associated restored to the owners slaves abducted by the British forces and subsequently recaptured by the American armies.

In the war of 1812 with Great Britain the course pursued by the United States Government was the same, and it recognized the right of the owner to the slaves recaptured from the enemy. Both the Continental and United States Governments, in fact, denied that the abduction of slaves was a belligerent right; and the latter Power insisted upon, and ultimately secured by treaty, pecuniary indemnity from the British Government for slaves taken by its forces during the war of 1812.

And it is supposed that if a slave belonging to a citizen of a State in which slavery is recognized, and which is regarded as one of the United States, were to escape into the Confederate States, or be captured or abducted by their armies, the legal right of the owner to reclaim him would be as clear now as in 1812, the Constitution of the United States being unchanged in this particular, and that instrument having been interpreted in the judicial decisions, legislative and diplomatic acts, and correspondence of the United States, as imposing upon that Government the duty of protecting, in all cases coming within the scope of its authority, the owners of slaves, as well as of any other kind of property recognized as such by the several States.

The Confederate Government, bound by the same constitutional obligations, considers, as that of the United did, that the capture or abduction of a negro slave does not preclude the lawful owner from reclaiming him when captured, and I am instructed to say that all such slaves, when properly identified as belonging to citizens of any of the Confederate States, or to persons enjoying the protection of their laws, will be restored, like other recaptured private property, to those entitled to them.

Having endeavored to explain the general policy of the Confederate Government with regard to this subject, I beg leave to state the facts concerning the particular transactions referred to in the enclosed communications.

The negroes recently captured by our forces were sent to Richmond with other Federal prisoners. After their arrival it was discovered that a number of them were slaves belonging to citizens or residents of some of the Confederate States; and of this class, fifty-nine, as I learn, were sent, with other negroes, to work on the fortifications around Richmond until their owners should appear and claim them. As soon as I was informed of the fact, less than two days afterwards, not wishing to employ them here, I ordered them to be sent to the rear. By a misapprehension of the engineer officer in charge, they were transferred to our lines south of the James river, but when apprized of the error, I repeated the order for their removal. If any negroes were included among this number who were not identified as the slaves of citizens, or residents of some of the Confederate States, they were so included without the knowledge or authority of the War Department, as already explained, and the mistake, when discovered, would have been corrected.

It only remains for me to say that negroes employed upon our fortifications are not allowed to be placed where they will be exposed to fire, and there is no foundation for any statement to the contrary. The author of the communications referred to has considered himself justified by the reports of two deserters, who do not allege that the negroes in question were exposed to any danger, in placing our prisoners under the fire of our batteries.

In view of the explanations of the practice of the Confederate Government above given, and of the statement of facts I have made, I have now, in accordance with my instructions, respectfully to inquire whether the course pursued toward our prisoners, as set forth in the accompanying letters, has your sanction, and whether it will be maintained?

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. E. LEE, General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
October 29, 1864.

Gen. R. E. LEE, C. S. A.,
Commanding Army Northern Virginia:

GENERAL: Understanding from your letter of the 19th that the colored prisoners who are employed at work in the trenches near Fort Gilmer have been withdrawn, I have directed the withdrawal of the Confederate prisoners employed in the Dutch Gap canal.

I shall always regret the necessity of retaliating for wrongs done our soldiers; but regard it my duty to protect all persons received into the army of the United States, regardless of color or nationality. When acknowledged soldiers of the Government are captured they must be treated as prisoners of war, or such treatment as they receive will be inflicted upon an equal number of prisoners held by us.

I have nothing to do with the discussion of the slavery question; therefore decline answering the arguments adduced to show the right to return to former owners such negroes as are captured from our army.

In answer to the question at the conclusion of your letter, I have to state that all prisoners of war falling into my hands shall receive the kindest treatment possible, consistent with securing them, unless I have good authority for believing any number of our men are being treated otherwise. Then, painful as it may be to me, I shall inflict like treatment on an equal number of Confederate prisoners.

Hoping that it may never become my duty to order retaliation upon any man held as a prisoner of war, I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant General.

Military Order Respecting the Election in Missouri—(See p. 314.)

1864, October 12—Maj. Gen. Rosecrans issued an order establishing the regulations for the election in Missouri. The following are passages from the order:

The General commanding expects the united assistance of the true men of all parties in his efforts to secure a full and fair opportunity for all who are entitled to vote at the approaching elections in the State of Missouri, and in excluding from the polls those who, by alienage, treason, guerrillaism, and other crimes and disabilities, have no just right to vote.

I. Those, and only those, who have the qualifications, and who take the oath prescribed by the laws of the State, copies of which are hereto annexed, shall vote.

Voting, or attempting to vote, in contravention of law or orders, is declared a military offence, subjecting the offender to arrest, trial, and punishment, if convicted.

II. No one who has borne arms against the Government of the United States, or voluntarily given aid and comfort to its enemies during the present rebellion, shall act as judge or clerk at election; nor shall any county judge knowingly appoint any such person to act as judge at election. Violation of this will be promptly noticed, and the offenders brought to trial by the local military authorities.

III. Outrages upon the freedom of election by violence or intimidation; attempting to hinder legal or to procure or encourage illegal voting; interfering with the legal challenge of voters; acting as officers of election in contravention of law or orders; wilful neglect to perform their duties, under the laws and these orders, by officers of elections, and especially taking the voters' or officers' oath falsely; and all other acts and words interfering with the purity and freedom of elections, are crimes against the liberties of the people, and are declared military offences, and will be rigorously punished.

The oath is as provided in the ordinance of the Convention of Missouri, and printed on page 314.

Report of Hon. J. Holt, Judge Advocate General, on certain "Secret Associations."

WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF MILITARY JUSTICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., October 8, 1864.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

SIR: Having been instructed by you to prepare a detailed report upon the mass of testimony furnished me from different sources in regard to the Secret Associations and Conspiracies against the Government, formed, principally in the Western States, by traitors and disloyal persons, I have now the honor to submit as follows:

During more than a year past it has been generally known to our military authorities that a secret treasonable organization, affiliated with the Southern rebellion, and chiefly military in its character, has been rapidly extending itself throughout the West. A variety of agencies, which will be specified herein, have been employed, and successfully, to ascertain its nature and extent, as well as its aims and its results; and, as this investigation has led to the arrest, in several States, of a number of its prominent members as dangerous public enemies, it has been deemed proper to set forth in full the acts and purposes of this organization, and thus to make known to the country at large its intensely treasonable and revolutionary spirit.

The subject will be presented under the following heads:

- I. The origin, history, names, &c., of the Order.
- II. Its organization and officers.
- III. Its extent and numbers.
- IV. Its armed force.
- V. Its ritual, oaths, and interior forms.
- VI. Its written principles.
- VII. Its specific purposes and operations.
- VIII. The witnesses and their testimony.

I.—THE ORIGIN, HISTORY, NAMES, ETC., OF THE ORDER.

This secret association first developed itself in the West in the year 1862, about the period of the first conscription of troops, which it aimed to obstruct and resist. Originally known in certain localities as the "Mutual Protection Society," the "Circle of Honor," or the "Circle," or "Knights of the Mighty Host," but more widely as the "Knights of the Golden Circle," it was simply an inspiration of the rebellion, being little other than an extension among the disloyal and disaffected at the North of the association of the latter name, which had existed for some years at the South, and from which it derived all the chief features of its organization.

During the summer and fall of 1863, the Order, both at the North and South, underwent some modifications as well as a change of name. In consequence of a partial exposure which had been made of the signs and ritual of the "Knights of the Golden Circle," Sterling Price had instituted as its successor in Missouri a secret political association, which he called the "Corps de Belgique," or "Southern League;" his principal coadjutor being Charles L. Hunt, of St. Louis, then Belgian Consul at that city, but whose exequatur was subsequently revoked by the President on account of his disloyal practices. The special object of the Corps de Belgique appears to have been to unite the rebel sympathizers of Missouri, with a view to their taking up arms and joining Price upon his proposed grand invasion of that State, and to their recruiting for his army in the interim.

Meanwhile, also, there had been instituted at the North, in the autumn of 1863, by sundry disloyal persons, prominent among whom were Vallandigham and P. C. Wright, of New York, a secret Order, intended to be general throughout the country, and aiming at an extended influence and power, and at more positive results than its predecessor, and which was termed, and has since been widely known as the O. A. K., or "Order of American Knights."

The opinion is expressed by Col. Sanderson, Provost Marshal General of the Department of Missouri, in his official report upon the progress of this Order, that it was founded by Vallandigham during his banishment, and upon consultation at Richmond with Davis and other prominent traitors. It is, indeed, the boast of the Order in Indiana and elsewhere, that its "ritual" came direct from Davis himself; and Mary Ann Pitman, formerly attached to the command of the rebel Forrest, and a most intelligent witness, whose testimony will be hereafter referred to, states positively that Davis is a member of the Order.

Upon the institution of the principal organization, it is represented that the "Corps de Belgique" was modified by Price, and became a southern section of the O. A. K., and that the new name was generally adopted for the Order, both at the North and South.

The secret signs and character of the Order having become known to our military authorities, further modifications in the ritual and forms were introduced, and its name was finally changed to that of the O. S. L., or "Order of the Sons of Liberty," or the "Knights of the Order of the Sons of Liberty." These later changes are represented to have been first instituted, and the new ritual compiled, in the State of Indiana, in May last, but the new name was at once generally adopted throughout the West, though in some localities the association is still better known as the "Order of American Knights."

Meanwhile, also, the Order has received certain local designations. In parts of Illinois it has been called at times the "Peace Organization," in Kentucky the "Star Organization," and in Missouri the "American Organization;" these, however, being apparently names used outside of the lodges of the Order. Its members have also been familiarly designated as "Butternuts" by the country people of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, and its separate lodges have also frequently received titles intended for the public ear; that in Chicago, for instance, being termed by its members the "Democratic Invincible Club;" that in Louisville, the "Democratic Reading Room;" &c.

It is to be added that in the State of New York and other parts of the North, the secret political association known as the "McClellan Minute Guard" would seem to be a branch of the O. A. K., having substantially the same objects, to be accomplished, however, by means expressly suited to the localities in which it is established. For, as the Chief Secretary of this association, Dr. R. F. Stevens,* stated in June last to a reliable witness, whose testimony has been furnished, "those who represent the McClellan interest are compelled to preach a vigorous prosecution of the war, in order to secure the popular sentiment and allure voters."

II.—ITS ORGANIZATION AND OFFICERS.

From printed copies, heretofore seized by the Government, of the constitutions of the Supreme Council, Grand Council, and County Parent Temples, respectively, of the Order of Sons of Liberty, in connection with other and abundant testimony, the organization of the Order, in its latest form, is ascertained to be as follows:

1. The government of the Order throughout the United States is vested in a Supreme Council, of which the officers are a Supreme Commander, Secretary of State, and Treasurer. These officers are elected for one year, at the annual meeting of the Supreme Council, which is made up of the Grand Commanders of the several States ex officio, and two delegates elected from each State in which the Order is established.

2. The government of the Order in a State is vested in a Grand Council, the officers of which are a Grand Commander, Deputy Grand Commander, Grand Secretary, Grand Treasurer, and a certain number of Major Generals, or one for each Military District. These officers also are elected annually by "representatives" from the County Temples, each Temple being entitled to two representatives, and one additional for each thousand members. This body of representatives is also invested with certain legislative functions.

3. The Parent Temple is the organization of the Order for a county, each Temple being formally instituted by authority of the Supreme Council, or of the Grand Council or Grand Commander of the State. By the same authority, or by that of the officers of the Parent Temple, branch or subordinate Temples may be established for townships in the county.

But the strength and significance of this organization lie in its military character. The secret constitution of the Supreme Council provides that the Supreme Commander "shall be commander-in-chief of all military forces belonging to the Order in the various States when called into actual ser-"

* LETTER OF R. F. STEVENS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.

To the Editor of the World:

DEAR SIR: In Judge Holt's report to the Secretary of War, just published, statements are made, to the effect that the Minute Guard Association is a secret organization. Second, That its objects are identical with the traitorous objects of an alleged Northwestern association. Third, That it is a branch of the O. A. K. Fourth, That I said in June, that "those who represent the McClellan interest are compelled to preach a vigorous prosecution of the war, in order to secure the popular sentiment, and allure voters." None of the members of the association ever held a secret meeting, and nothing of a secret or traitorous nature was ever connected with it. It was never connected with the O. A. K., or any other association. Its members were never compelled to "preach," as alleged, and all the above statements of Judge Holt are absolute and entire falsehoods. Mr. Greeley, in his editorial of the 15th instant, makes a like statement, to the effect that the Minute Guard is connected with the alleged Northwestern conspiracy, and parades my name with the evident intent of fixing upon me the character of a traitor. The whole of which are base insinuations and fabrications, and worthy of the man who wrote of our national flag, "Tear down the flaunting lie,"—and of the slave States, that they had a clear right to secede, and he would oppose all coercive attempts to keep them in.

The Minute Guard is an association for ordinary political campaign work. It has no secrets like the oath-bound Loyal (?) League. On public occasions, each member carries, or wears, the American flag. On election days they work for votes; and the results of their work will be seen all over the Union, as it has been seen in the recent election in Pennsylvania.

In these fabrications of Judge Holt and Mr. Greeley; in the low buffoonery contained in the answer to the recent communication from the Union men of Tennessee; in the unparalleled election frauds in Indiana; in the open boasts of a company of Massachusetts soldiers that they voted at several of the polls in Philadelphia; in the discharge of workmen at the navy-yard for being in favor of McClellan; in the thousands of arbitrary arrests, and the hundreds of suppressions of a hitherto free press, all men may see that the re-election of Mr. Lincoln, and the continuance in power of such men as support him, will be the most unmitigated curse ever inflicted upon a free people.

Yours, &c.,

vice;" and further, that the Grand Commanders "shall be commanders-in-chief of the military forces of their respective States." Subordinate to the Grand Commander in the State are the "Major Generals," each of whom commands his separate district and army. In Indiana the Major Generals are four in number. In Illinois, where the organization of the order is considered most perfect, the members in each Congressional District compose a "brigade," which is commanded by a "Brigadier General." The members of each county constitute a "regiment," with a "colonel," in command, and those of each township form a "company." A somewhat similar system prevails in Indiana, where also each company is divided into "squads," each with its chief—an arrangement intended to facilitate the guerilla mode of warfare in case of a general outbreak or local disorder.

The "McClellan Minute Guard," as appears from a circular issued by the Chief Secretary in New York in March last, is organized upon a military basis similar to that of the Order proper. It is composed of companies, one for each election district, ten of which constitute a "brigade," with a "brigadier general" at its head. The whole is placed under the authority of a "Commander-in-chief." A strict obedience on the part of members to the orders of their superiors is enjoined.

The first "Supreme Commander" of the Order was P. C. Wright, of New York, editor of the New York News, who was in May last placed in arrest and confined in Fort Lafayette. His successor in office was Vallandigham,* who was elected at the annual meeting of the Supreme Council in February last. Robert Holloway, of Illinois, is represented to have acted as Lieutenant General, or Deputy Supreme Commander, during the absence of Vallandigham from the country. The Secretary of State chosen at the last election was Dr. Massey, of Ohio.

In Missouri the principal officers were Charles L. Hunt, Grand Commander, Charles E. Dunn, Deputy Grand Commander, and Green B. Smith, Grand Secretary. Since the arrest of these three persons (all of whom have made confessions which will be presently alluded to) James A. Barrett has, as it is understood, officiated as Grand Commander. He is stated to occupy also the position of chief of staff to the Supreme Commander.

The Grand Commander in Indiana, H. H. Dodd, is now on trial at Indianapolis by a military commission for "conspiracy against the Government," "violation of the laws of war," and other charges. The Deputy Grand Commander in that State is Horace Heffren, and the Grand Secretary, W. M. Harrison. The Major Generals are W. A. Bowles, John C. Walker, L. P. Milligan, and Andrew Humphreys. Among the other leading men of the Order in that State are Dr. Athon, State Secretary, and Joseph Ristine, State Auditor.

The Grand Commander in Illinois is — Judd, of Lewistown; and B. B. Piper, of Springfield, who is entitled "Grand Missionary" of the State, and designated also as a member of Vallandigham's staff, is one of the most active members, having been busily engaged throughout the summer in establishing Temples and initiating members.

In Kentucky, Judge Bullitt, of the Court of Appeals, is Grand Commander, and, with Dr. U. F. Kalfus and W. R. Thomas, jailor in Louisville, two other of the most prominent members, has been arrested and confined by the military authorities. In New York, Dr. R. F. Stevens, the chief secretary of the McClellan Minute Guard, is the most active ostensible representative of the Order.

The greater part of the chief and subordinate officers of the order and its branches, as well as the principal members thereof, are known to the Government, and, where not already arrested, may regard themselves as under a constant military surveillance. So complete has been the exposure of this secret league, that however frequently the conspirators may change its names, forms, passwords, and signals, its true purposes and operations cannot longer be concealed from the military authorities.

It is to be remarked that the Supreme Council of the Order, which annually meets on February 22, convened this year at New York city, and a special meeting was then appointed to be held at Chicago on July 1, or just prior to the day then fixed for the convention of the Democratic party. This convention having been postponed to August 29, the special meeting of the Supreme Council was also postponed to August 27, at the same place, and was duly convened accordingly. It will be remembered that a leading member of the convention, in the course of a speech made before that body, alluded approvingly to the session of the Sons of Liberty at Chicago at the same time, as that of an organization in harmony with the sentiment and projects of the convention.

It may be observed, in conclusion, that one not fully acquainted with the true character and intentions of the Order might well suppose that, in designating its officers by high military titles, and in imitating in its organization that established in our armies, it was designed merely to render itself more popular and attractive with the masses, and to invest its chiefs with a certain sham dignity; but when it is understood that the Order comprises within itself a large army of well-armed men, constantly drilled and exercised as soldiers, and that this army is held ready at any time for such forcible resistance to our military authorities, and such active co-operation with the public enemy, as it may be called upon to engage in by its commanders, it will be perceived that the titles of the latter are not assumed for a mere purpose of display, but they are the chiefs of an actual and formidable force of conspirators against the life of the Government, and that their military system is, as it has been remarked by Colonel Sanderson, "the grand lever used by the rebel Government for its army operations."

III.—ITS EXTENT AND NUMBERS.

The "Temples" or "Lodges" of the Order are numerously scattered through the States of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, and Kentucky. They are also officially reported as established, to a less extent, in Michigan and the other Western States, as well as in New York, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, and Tennessee. Dodd, the Grand Commander of Indiana, in an address to the members in that State of February last, claims that at the next annual meeting of the Supreme Council (in February, 1865) every State in the Union will be represented, and adds, "this is the first and only true national organization the Democratic and Conservative men of the country have ever attempted." A provision made in the constitution of the Council for a representation from the Territories, shows, indeed, that the widest extension of the Order is contemplated.

In the States first mentioned the Order is most strongly centred at the following places, where are situated its principal "Temples." In Indiana, at Indianapolis and Vincennes; in Illinois, at Chicago, Springfield, and Quincy, (a large proportion of the lodges in and about the latter place having been founded by the notorious guerilla chief, Jackson;) in Ohio, at Cincinnati, Dayton, and in Hamilton county, (which is proudly termed by members "the South Carolina of the North;") in Missouri, at St. Louis; in Kentucky, at Louisville; and in Michigan, at Detroit, (whence communication was freely had by the leaders of the Order with Vallandigham during his banishment, either by letters addressed to him through two prominent citizens and members of the Order, or by personal interviews at Windsor, C. W.) It is to be added that the regular places of meeting, as also the principal rendezvous and haunts of the members in these and less important places, are generally well known to the Government.

The actual numbers of the Order have, it is believed, never been officially reported, and cannot, therefore, be accurately ascertained. Various estimates have been made by leading members, some of which are no doubt considerably exaggerated. It has been asserted by delegates to the Supreme Council of February last, that the number was there represented to be from 800,000 to 1,000,000; but Vallandigham, in his speech last summer at Dayton, Ohio, placed it at 500,000, which is probably much nearer the true total. The number of its members in the several States has been differently estimated in the reports and statements of its officers. Thus, the force of the Order in Indiana is stated to be from 75,000 to 125,000; in Illinois, from 100,000 to 140,000; in Ohio, from 80,000 to 108,000; in Kentucky, from 40,000 to 70,000; in Missouri, from 20,000 to 40,000; and in Michigan and New York, about 20,000 each. Its representation in the other States above mentioned does not specifically appear from the testimony; but, allowing for every exaggeration in the figures reported, they may be deemed to present a tolerably faithful view of what, at least, is regarded by the Order as its true force in the States designated.

It is to be noted that the Order, or its counterpart, is probably much more widely extended at the South even than at the North, and that a large proportion of the officers of the rebel army are represented by credible witnesses to be members. In Kentucky and Missouri the Order has not hesitated to admit as members, not only officers of that army, but also a considerable number of guerillas, a class who might be supposed to appreciate most readily its spirit and purposes. It is fully shown that as lately as in July last several of these ruffians were initiated into the first degree by Dr. Kalfus, in Kentucky.

IV.—ITS ARMED FORCE.

A review of the testimony in regard to the armed force of the Order will materially aid in determining its real strength and numbers.

Although the Order has from the outset partaken of the military character, it was not till the summer or fall of 1863 that it began to be generally organized as an armed body. Since that date its officers and leaders have been busily engaged in placing it upon a military basis, and in preparing it for a revolutionary movement. A general system of drilling has been instituted and secretly carried out. Members have been instructed to be constantly provided with weapons, and in some localities it has been absolutely required that each member should keep at his residence, at all times, certain arms and a specified quantity of ammunition.

In March last the entire armed force of the Order, capable of being mobilized for effective service, was represented to be 340,000 men. As the details upon which this statement was based are imperfectly set forth in the testimony, it is not known how far this number may be exaggerated. It is abundantly shown, however, that the Order, by means of a tax levied upon its members, has accumulated considerable funds for the purchase of arms and ammunition, and that these have been procured in large quantities for its use. The witness Clayton, on the trial of Dodd, estimated that two-thirds of the Order are furnished with arms.

Green B. Smith, Grand Secretary of the Order in Missouri, states in his confession of July last: "I know that arms, mostly revolvers, and ammunition have been purchased by members in St. Louis to send to members in the country where they could not be had;" and he subsequently adds that he himself alone clandestinely purchased and forwarded, between April 15th and 19th last, about 200 revolvers, with 5,000 percussion caps and other ammunition. A muster-roll of one of the country lodges of that State is exhibited, in which, opposite the name of each member, are noted certain numbers, under the heads of "Missouri Republican," "St. Louis Union," "Anzeiger," "Miscellaneous Periodicals," "Books," "Speeches," and "Reports;" titles which, when interpreted, severally signify single-barrelled guns, double-barrelled guns, revolvers, private ammunition, private lead, company powder, company lead—the roll thus actually setting forth the amount of arms and ammunition in the possession of the lodge and its members.

In the States of Ohio and Illinois the Order is claimed by its members to be unusually well armed with revolvers, carbines, &c.; but it is in regard to the arming of the Order in Indiana that the principal statistics have been presented, and these may serve to illustrate the system which has probably been pursued in most of the States. One intelligent witness, who has been a member, estimates that in March last there were in possession of the Order in that State 6,000 muskets and 60,000 revolvers, besides private arms. Another member testifies that at a single lodge meeting of two hundred and fifty-two persons, which he attended early in the present year, the sum of $4,000 was subscribed for arms. Other members present statements in reference to the number of arms in their respective counties, and all agree in representing that these have been constantly forwarded from Indianapolis into the interior. Beck & Brothers are designated as the firm in that city to which most of the arms were consigned. These were shipped principally from the East; some packages, however, were sent from Cincinnati, and some from Kentucky, and the boxes were generally marked "pick-axes," "hardware," "nails," "household goods," &c.

General Carrington estimates that in February and March last, nearly 30,000 guns and revolvers entered the State, and this estimate is based upon actual inspection of invoices. The true number introduced was therefore probably considerably greater. That officer adds that on the day in which the sale of arms was stopped by his order, in Indianapolis, nearly 1,000 additional revolvers had been contracted for, and that the trade could not supply the demand. He further reports that after the introduction of arms into the Department of the North had been prohibited in General Orders of March last, a seizure was made by the Government of a large quantity of revolvers and 135,000 rounds of ammunition, which had been shipped to the firm in Indianapolis, of which H. H. Dodd, Grand Commander, was a member; that other arms about to be shipped to the same destination were seized in New York city; and that all these were claimed as the private property of John C. Walker, one of the Major Generals of the Order in Indiana, and were represented to have been "purchased for a few friends." It should also be stated that at the office of Hon. D. W. Voorhees, M. C., at Terre Haute, were discovered letters which disclosed a correspondence between him and ex-Senator Wall, of New Jersey, in regard to the purchase of 20,000 Garibaldi rifles, to be forwarded to the West.

It appears in the course of the testimony that a considerable quantity of arms and ammunition were brought into the State of Illinois from Burlington, Iowa, and that ammunition was sent from New Albany, Indiana, into Kentucky; it is also represented that, had Vallandigham been arrested on his return to Ohio, it was contemplated furnishing the Order with arms from a point in Canada, near Windsor, where they were stored and ready for use.

There remains further to be noticed, in this connexion, the testimony of Clayton upon the trial of Dodd, to the effect that arms were to be furnished the Order from Nassau, N. P., by way of Canada; that, to defray the expense of these arms or their transportation, a formal assessment was levied upon the lodges, but that the transportation into Canada was actually to be furnished by the Confederate authorities.

A statement was made by Hunt, Grand Commander of Missouri, before his arrest, to a fellow member, that shells and all kinds of munitions of war, as well as infernal machines, were manufactured by the Order at Indianapolis; and the late discovery in Cincinnati of samples of hand-grenades, conical shells, and rockets, of which one thousand were about to be manufactured, under a special contract, for the O. S. L., goes directly to verify such a statement.

These details will convey some idea of the attempts which have been made to place the Order upon a war footing and prepare it for aggressive movements. But, notwithstanding all the efforts that have been put forth, and with considerable success, to arm and equip its members as fighting men, the leaders have felt themselves still very deficient in their armament, and numerous schemes for increasing their armed strength have been devised. Thus, at the time of the issuing of the general order in Missouri requiring the enrolment of all citizens, it was proposed in the lodges of the O. A. K., at St. Louis, that certain members should raise companies in the militia, in their respective wards, and thus get command of as many Government arms and equipments as possible, for the future use of the Order. Again it was proposed that all the members should enroll themselves in the militia, instead of paying commutation, in this way obtaining possession of United States arms, and having the advantage of the drill and military instruction. In the councils of the Order in Kentucky, in June last, a scheme was devised for disarming all the negro troops, which it was thought could be done without much difficulty, and appropriating their arms for military purposes.

The despicable treachery of these proposed plans, as evincing the animus of the conspiracy, need not be commented upon.

It is to be observed that the Order in the State of Missouri has counted greatly upon support from the enrolled militia, in case of an invasion by Price, as containing many members and friends of the O. A. K.; and that the "Paw-Paw militia," a military organization of Buchanan county, as well as the militia of Platte and Clay counties, known as "Flat Foots," have been relied upon, almost to a man, to join the revolutionary movement.

V.—ITS RITUAL, OATHS, AND INTERIOR FORMS.

The ritual of the Order, as well as its secret signs, passwords, &c., has been fully made known to the military authorities. In August last one hundred and twelve copies of the ritual of the O. A. K. were seized in the office of Hon. D. W. Voorhees, M. C., at Terre Haute, and a large number of rituals of the O. S. L., together with copies of the Constitutions of the councils, &c., already referred to, were found in the building at Indianapolis, occupied by Dodd, the Grand Commander of Indiana, as had been indicated by the Government witness and detective, Stidger. Copies were likewise discovered at Louisville, at the residence of Dr. Kalfus, concealed within the mattress of his bed, where Stidger had ascertained that they were kept.

The ritual of the O. A. K. has also been furnished by the authorities at St. Louis. From the ritual, that of the O. S. L. does not materially differ. Both are termed "progressive," in that they provide for five separate degrees of membership, and contemplate the admission of a member of a lower degree into a higher one only upon certain vouchers and proofs of fitness, which, with each ascending degree, are required to be stronger and more imposing.

Each degree has its commander or head; the Fourth or "Grand" is the highest in a State; the Fifth or "Supreme" the highest in the United States; but to the first or lower degree only do the great majority of members attain. A large proportion of these enter the Order, supposing it to be a "Democratic" and political association merely; and the history of the Order furnishes a most striking illustration of the gross and criminal deception which may be practiced upon the ignorant masses by unscrupulous and unprincipled leaders. The members of the lower degree are often for a considerable period kept quite unaware of the true purposes of their chiefs. But to the latter they are bound, in the language of their obligation, "to yield prompt and implicit obedience to the utmost of their ability, without remonstrance, hesitation, or delay;" and meanwhile their minds, under the discipline and teachings to which they are subjected, become educated and accustomed to contemplate with comparative unconcern the treason for which they are preparing.

The oaths, "invocations," "charges," &c., of the ritual, expressed as they are in bombastic and extravagant phraseology, would excite in the mind of an educated person only ridicule and contempt, but upon the illiterate they are calculated to make a deep impression, the effect and importance of which were doubtless fully studied by the framers of the instrument.

The oath which is administered upon the introduction of a member into any degree is especially imposing in its language; it prescribes as a penalty for a violation of the obligation assumed "a shameful death," and further, that the body of the person guilty of such violation shall be divided into four parts and cast out at the four "gates" of the Temple. Not only, as has been said, does it enjoin a blind obedience to the commands of the superiors of the Order, but it is required to be held of paramount obligation to any oath which may be administered to a member in a court of justice or elsewhere. Thus, in cases where members have been sworn by officers empowered to administer oaths to speak the whole truth in answer to questions that may be put to them, and have then been examined in reference to the Order, and their connection therewith, they have not only refused to give any information in regard to its character, but have denied that they were members, or even that they knew of its existence. A conspicuous instance of this is presented in the cases of Hunt, Dunn, and Smith, the chief officers of the Order in Missouri, who, upon their first examination under oath, after their arrest, denied all connection with the Order, but confessed, also under oath, at a subsequent period, that this denial was wholly false, although in accordance with their obligations as members. Indeed, a deliberate system of deception in regard to the details of the conspiracy is inculcated upon the members, and studiously pursued; and it may be mentioned, as a similarly despicable feature of the organization, that it is held bound to injure the Administration and officers of the Government, in every possible manner, by misrepresentation and falsehood.

Members are also instructed that their oath of membership is to be held paramount to an oath of allegiance, or any other oath which may impose obligations inconsistent with those which are assumed upon entering the Order. Thus, if a member, when in danger, or for the purpose of facilitating some traitorous design, has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, he is held at liberty to violate it on the first occasion, his obligation to the Order being deemed superior to any consideration of duty or loyalty prompted by such oath.

It is to be added that where members are threatened with the penalties of perjury, in case of their answering falsely to questions propounded to them in regard to the Order before a court or grand jury, they are instructed to refuse to answer such questions, alleging, as a ground for their refusal, that their answers may criminate themselves. The testimony shows that this course has habitually been pursued by members, especially in Indiana, when placed in such a situation.

Besides the oaths and other forms and ceremonies which have been alluded to, the ritual contains what are termed "Declarations of Principles." These declarations, which are most important as exhibiting the creed and character of the Order, as inspired by the principles of the rebellion, will be fully presented under the next branch of the subject.

The signs, signals, passwords, &c., of the Order are set forth at length in the testimony, but need only be briefly alluded to. It is a significant fact, as showing the intimate relations between the Northern and Southern sections of the secret conspiracy, that a member from a Northern State is enabled to pass without risk through the South by the use of the signs of recognition which have been established throughout the Order, and by means of which members from distant points, though meeting as strangers, are at once made known to each other as "brothers." Mary Ann Pitman expressly states in her testimony that whenever important despatches are required to be sent by rebel generals beyond their lines, members of the Order are always selected to convey them. Certain passwords are also used in common in both sections, and of these, none appears to be more familiar than the word "Nu-oh-lac," or the name "Calliope" spelt backward, and which is employed upon entering a Temple of the first degree of the O. A. K.—certainly a fitting password to such dens of treason.

Beside the signs of recognition, there are signs of warning and danger, for use at night as well as by day; as, for instance, signs to warn members of the approach of United States officials seeking to make arrests. The Order has also established what are called battle-signals, by means of which, as it is asserted, a member serving in the army may communicate with the enemy in the field, and thus escape personal harm in case of attack or capture. The most recent of these signals represented to have been adopted is a five-pointed copper star, worn under the coat, which is to be disclosed upon meeting an enemy, who will thus recognize in the wearer a sympathizer and an ally. A similar star of German silver, hung in a frame, is said to be numerously displayed by members or their families in private houses in Indiana, for the purpose of insuring protection to their property in case of a raid or other attack; and it is stated that in many dwellings in that State a portrait of John Morgan is exhibited for a similar purpose.

Other signs are used by members, and especially the officers of the Order in their correspondence. Their letters, when of an official character, are generally conveyed by special messengers, but when transmitted through the mail are usually in cipher. When written in the ordinary manner, a character at the foot of the letter, consisting of a circle with a line drawn across the centre, signifies to the member who receives it that the statements as written are to be understood in a sense directly the opposite to that which would ordinarily be conveyed.

It is to be added that the meetings of the Order, especially in the country, are generally held at night and in secluded places, and that the approach to them is carefully guarded by a line of sentinels, who are passed only by means of a special countersign, which is termed the "picket."

VI.—ITS WRITTEN PRINCIPLES.

The "Declaration of Principles," which is set forth in the ritual of the Order, has already been alluded to. This declaration, which is specially framed for the instruction of the great mass of members, commences with the following proposition:

"All men are endowed by the Creator with certain rights, equal as far as there is equality in the capacity for the appreciation, enjoyment, and exercise of these rights." And subsequently there is added: "In the Divine economy no individual of the human race must be permitted to encumber the earth, to mar its aspects of transcendent beauty, nor to impede the progress of the physical or intellectual man, neither in himself nor in the race to which he belongs. Hence, a people, upon whatever plane they may be found in the ascending scale of humanity, whom neither the divinity within them nor the inspirations of divine and beautiful nature around them can impel to virtuous action and progress onward and upward, should be subjected to a just and humane servitude and tutelage to the superior race until they shall be able to appreciate the benefits and advantages of civilization."

Here, expressed in studied terms of hypocrisy, is the whole theory of human bondage—the right of the strong, because they are strong, to despoil and enslave the weak, because they are weak! The languages of earth can add nothing to the cowardly and loathsome baseness of the doctrine, as thus announced. It is the robber's creed, sought to be nationalized, and would push back the hand on the dial plate of our civilization to the darkest periods of human history. It must be admitted, however, that it furnishes a fitting "corner-stone" for the government of a rebellion, every fibre of whose body and every throb of whose soul is born of the traitorous ambition and slave-pen inspirations of the South.

To these detestable tenets is added that other pernicious political theory of State sovereignty, with its necessary fruit, the monstrous doctrine of secession—a doctrine which, in asserting that in our federative system a part is greater than the whole, would compel the General Government, like a Japanese slave, to commit hari-kari whenever a faithless or insolent State should command it to do so.

Thus, the ritual, after reciting that the States of the Union are "free, independent, and sovereign," proceeds as follows:

"The government designated 'The United States of America' has no sovereignty, because that is an attribute with which the people, in their several and distinct political organizations, are endowed and is inalienable. It was constituted by the terms of the compact, by all the States, through the express will of the people thereof, respectively—a common agent, to use and exercise certain named, specified, defined, and limited powers which are inherent of the sovereignties within those States. It is permitted, so far as regards its status and relations, as common agent in the exercise of the powers carefully and jealously delegated to it, to call itself 'supreme,' but not 'sovereign.' In accordance with the principles upon which it is founded the American theory, government can exercise only delegated power; hence, if those who shall have been chosen to administer the government shall assume to exercise powers not delegated, they should be regarded and treated as usurpers. The reference to 'inherent power,' 'war power,' or 'military necessity,' on the part of the functionary for the sanction of an arbitrary exercise of power by him, we will not accept in palliation or excuse."

To this is added, as a corollary, "it is incompatible with the history and nature of our system of government that Federal authority should coerce by arms a sovereign State."

The declaration of principles, however, does not stop here, but proceeds one step further, as follows:

"Whenever the chosen officers or delegates shall fail or refuse to administer the Government in strict accordance with the letter of the accepted Constitution, it is the inherent right and the solemn and imperative duty of the people to resist the functionaries, and, if need be, to expel them by force of arms! Such resistance is not revolution, but is solely the assertion of right—the exercise of all the noble attributes which impart honor and dignity to manhood."

To the same effect, though in a milder tone, is the platform of the order in Indiana, put forth by the Grand Council at their meeting in February last, which declares that "the right to alter or abolish their government, whenever it fails to secure the blessings of liberty, is one of the inalienable rights of the people that can never be surrendered."

Such, then, are the principles which the new member swears to observe and abide by in his obligation, set forth in the ritual, where he says: "I do solemnly promise that I will ever cherish in my heart of hearts the sublime creed of the E. K., (Excellent Knights,) and will, so far as in me lies, illustrate the same in my intercourse with men, and will defend the principles thereof, if need be, with my life, whenever assailed, in my own country first of all. I do further solemnly declare that I will never take up arms in behalf of any government which does not acknowledge the sole authority or power to be the will of the governed."

The following extracts from the ritual may also be quoted as illustrating the principle of the right of revolution and resistance to constituted authority insisted upon by the Order:

"Our swords shall be unsheathed whenever the great principles which we aim to inculcate and have sworn to maintain and defend are assailed."

Again: "I do solemnly promise, that whenever the principles which our Order inculcates shall be assailed in my own State or country, I will defend these principles with my sword and my life, in whatsoever capacity may be assigned me by the competent authority of our Order."

And further: "I do promise that I will, at all times, if need be, take up arms in the cause of the oppressed—in my own country first of all—against any power or government usurped, which may be found in arms and waging war against a people or peoples who are endeavoring to establish, or have inaugurated, a government for themselves of their own free choice."

Moreover, it is to be noted that all the addresses and speeches of its leaders breathe the same principle, of the right of forcible resistance to the Government, as one of the tenets of the Order.

Thus P. C. Wright, Supreme Commander, in his general address of December, 1863, after urging that "the spirit of the fathers may animate the free minds, the brave hearts, and still unshackled limbs of the true democracy," (meaning the members of the Order,) adds as follows: "To be prepared for the crisis now approaching, we must catch from afar the earliest and faintest breathings of the spirit of the storm; to be successful when the storm comes, we must be watchful, patient, brave, confident, organized, armed."

Thus, too, Dodd, Grand Commander of the Order in Indiana, quoting, in his address of February last, the views of his chief, Vallandigham, and adopting them as his own, says:

"He (Vallandigham) judges that the Washington power will not yield up its power until it is taken from them by an indignant people by force of arms."

Such, then, are the written principles of the Order in which the neophyte is instructed, and which he is sworn to cherish and observe as his rule of action, when, with arms placed in his hands, he is called upon to engage in the overthrow of his Government. This declaration—first, of the absolute right of slavery; second, of State sovereignty and the right of secession; third, of the right of armed resistance to constituted authority on the part of the disaffected and the disloyal, whenever their ambition may prompt them to revolution—is but an assertion of that abominable theory which, from its first enunciation, served as a pretext for conspiracy after conspiracy against the Government on the part of Southern traitors, until their detestable plotting culminated in open rebellion and bloody civil war. What more appropriate password, therefore, to be communicated to the new member upon his first admission to the secrets of the Order could have been conceived than that which was actually adopted—"Calhoun!"—a man who, balled in his lust for power, with grinning teeth turned upon the Government that had lifted him to its highest honors, and upon the country that had borne him, and down to the very close of his fevered life labored incessantly to scatter far and wide the seeds of that poison of death now upon our lips. The thorns which now pierce an I tear us are of the tree he planted.

VII.—ITS SPECIFIC PURPOSES AND OPERATIONS.

From the principles of the Order, as thus set forth, its general purpose of co-operating with the rebellion may readily be inferred, and, in fact, those principles could logically lead to no other result. This general purpose, indeed, is distinctly set forth in the personal statements and confessions of its members, and particularly of its prominent officers, who have been induced to make disclosures to the Government. Among the most significant of these confessions are those already alluded to, of Hunt, Dunn, and Smith, the heads of the order in Missouri. The latter, whose statement is full and explicit, says: "At the time I joined the Order I understood that its object was to aid and assist the Confederate Government, and endeavor to restore the Union as it was prior to this rebellion." He adds: "The Order is hostile in every respect to the General Government, and friendly to the so-called Confederate Government. It is exclusively made up of disloyal persons—of all Democrats who are desirous of securing the independence of the Confederate States with a view of restoring the Union as it was."

It would be idle to comment on such gibberish as the statement that "the independence of the Confederate States" was to be used as the means of restoring "the Union as it was;" and yet, under the manipulations of these traitorous jugglers, doubtless the brains of many have been so far muddled as to accept this shameless declaration as true.

But proceeding to the specific purposes of the Order, which its leaders have had in view from the beginning, and which, as will be seen, it has been able, in many cases, to carry out with very considerable success, the following are found to be most pointedly presented by the testimony:

1. Aiding Soldiers to Desert and Harboring and Protecting Deserters.—Early in its history the Order essayed to undermine such portions of the army as were exposed to its insidious approaches. Agents were sent by the K. G. C. into the camps to introduce the Order among the soldiers, and those who became members were instructed to induce as many of their companions as possible to desert, and for this purpose the latter were furnished by the Order with money and citizens' clothing. Soldiers who hesitated at desertion, but desired to leave the army, were introduced to lawyers who engaged to furnish them some quasi legal pretext for so doing, and a certain attorney of Indianapolis, named Walpole, who was particularly conspicuous in furnishing facilities of this character to soldiers who applied to him, has boasted that he has thus aided five hundred enlisted men to escape from their contracts. Through the schemes of the Order in Indiana whole companies were broken up—a large detachment or a battery company, for instance, deserting on one occasion to the enemy with two of its guns—and the camps were imbued with an spirit of discontent and dissatisfaction with the service. Some estimate of the success of these efforts may be derived from the report of the Adjutant General of Indiana, of January, in 1863, setting forth that the number of deserters and absentees returned to the army through the post of Indianapolis alone, during the month of December, 1862, was nearly two thousand six hundred.

As soon as arrests of these deserters began to be generally made, writs of habeas corpus were issued in their cases by disloyal judges, and a considerable number were discharged thereon. In one instance in Indiana, where an officer in charge of a deserter properly refused to obey the writ, after it had been suspended in such cases by the President, his attachment for contempt was ordered by the chief justice of the State, who declared that "the streets of Indianapolis might run with blood, but that he would enforce his authority against the President's order." On another occasion certain United States officers who had made the arrests of deserters in Illinois were themselves arrested for kidnapping, and held to trial by a disloyal judge, who at the same time discharged the deserters, though acknowledging them to be such.

Soldiers, upon deserting, were assured of immunity from punishment and protection on the part of the Order, and were instructed to bring away with them their arms, and, if mounted, their horses. Details sent to arrest them by the military authorities were in several cases forcibly resisted, and, where not unusually strong in numbers, were driven back by large bodies of men, subsequently generally ascertained to be members of the Order. Where arrests were effected, our troops were openly attacked and fired upon on their return. Instances of such attacks occurring in Morgan and Rush counties, Indiana, are especially noticed by General Carrington. In the case of the outbreak in Morgan county, J. S. Bingham, editor of the Indianapolis Sentinel, a member or friend of the Order, sought to forward to the disloyal newspapers of the West false and inflammatory telegraphic dispatches in regard to the affair, to the effect that cavalry had been sent to arrest all the Democrats in the county, that they had committed gross outrages, and that several citizens had been shot; and adding "ten thousand soldiers cannot hold the men arrested this night. Civil war and bloodshed are inevitable." The assertions in this despatch were entirely false, and may serve to illustrate the fact heretofore noted, that a studious misrepresentation of the acts of the Government and its officers is a part of the prescribed duty of members of the Order. It is proper to mention that seven of the party in Morgan county who made the attack upon our troops were convicted of their offence by a State court. Upon their trial it was proved that the party was composed of members of the K. G. C.

One of the most pointed instances of protection afforded to deserters occurred in a case in Indiana, where seventeen intrenched themselves in a log cabin with a ditch and palisade, and were furnished with provisions and sustained in their defence against our military authorities for a considerable period by the Order or its friends.

2. Discouraging Enlistments and Resisting the Draft.—It is especially inculcated by the Order to oppose the reinforcement of our armies, either by volunteers or drafted men. In 1862 the Knights of the Golden Circle organized generally to resist the draft in the Western States, and were strong enough in certain localities to greatly embarrass the Government. In this year and early in 1863 a number of enrolling officers were shot in Indiana and Illinois. In Blackford county, Indiana, an attack was made upon the court-house, and the books connected with the draft were destroyed. In several counties of the State a considerable military force was required for the protection of the United States officials, and a large number of arrests were made, including that of one Reynolds, an ex-Senator of the Legislature, for publicly urging upon the populace to resist the conscription—an offence of the same character, in fact, as that upon which Vallandigham was apprehended in Ohio. These outbreaks were no doubt, in most cases, fomented by the Order and engaged in by its members. In Indiana nearly 200 persons were indicted for conspiracy against the Government, resisting the draft, &c., and about sixty of these were convicted.

Where members of the Order were forced into the army by the draft, they were instructed, in case they were prevented from presently escaping, and were obliged to go to the field, to use their arms against their fellow-soldiers rather than the enemy, or if possible to desert to the enemy, by whom, through the signs of the Order, they would be recognized and received as friends. Whenever a member volunteered in the army he was at once expelled from the Order.

3. Circulation of Disloyal and Treasonable Publications.—The Order, especially in Missouri, has secretly circulated throughout the country a great quantity of treasonable publications, as a means of extending its own power and influence, as well as of giving encouragement to the disloyal and inciting them to treason. Of these, some of the principal are the following: "Pollard's Southern History of the War," "Official Reports of the Confederate Government," "Life of Stonewall Jackson," Pamphlets containing articles from the "Metropolitan Record," "Abraham Africans, or Mysteries of the White House," "The Lincoln Catechism, or a Guide to the Presidential Election of 1864," "Indestructible Organics," by Targa. These publications have generally been procured by formal requisitions drawn upon the grand commander by leading members in the interior of a State. One of these requisitions, dated June 10th last, and drawn by a local secretary of the Order at Gentryville, Missouri, is exhibited in the testimony. It contains a column of the initials of subscribers, opposite whose names are entered the number of disloyal publications to be furnished, the particular book or books, &c., required being indicated by fictitious titles.

4. Communicating with, and Giving Intelligence to, the Enemy.—Smith, Grand Secretary of the Order in Missouri, says, in his confession: "Rebel spies, mail-carriers, and emissaries have been carefully protected by this Order ever since I have been a member." It is shown in the testimony to be customary in the rebel service to employ members of the Order as spies, under the guise of soldiers furnished with furloughs to visit their homes within our lines. On coming within the territory occupied by our forces, they are harbored and supplied with information by the Order. Another class of spies claim to be deserters from the enemy, and at once seek an opportunity to take the oath of allegiance, which, however, though voluntarily taken, they claim to be administered while they are under a species of duress, and, therefore, not to be binding. Upon swearing allegiance to the Government, the pretended deserter engages, with the assistance of the Order, in collecting contraband goods or procuring intelligence to be conveyed to the enemy, or in some other treasonable enterprise. In his official report of June 12th last, Colonel Sanderson remarks: "This department is filled with rebel spies, all of whom belong to the Order."

In Missouri regular mail communication was for a long period maintained through the agency of the Order from St. Louis to Price's army, by means of which private letters, as well as official despatches between him and the Grand Commander of Missouri were regularly transmitted.

The mail-carriers started from a point on the Pacific railroad, near Kirkwood Station, about fourteen miles from St. Louis, and, travelling only by night, proceeded (to quote from Colonel Sanderson's report) to "Mattox Mills, on the Maramee river, thence past Mineral Point to Webster, thence to a point fifteen miles below Van Buren, where they crossed the Black river, and thence to the rebel lines." It is, probably, also by this route that the secret correspondence, stated by the witness Pitman to have been constantly kept up between Price and Vallandigham, the heads of the Order at the North and South, respectively, was successfully maintained.

A similar communication has been continuously held with the enemy from Louisville, Kentucky. A considerable number of women in that State, many of them of high position in rebel society, and some of them outwardly professing to be loyal, were discovered to have been actively engaged in receiving and forwarding mails, with the assistance of the Order and as its instruments. Two of the most notorious and successful of these, Mrs. Woods and Miss Cassell, have been apprehended and imprisoned.

By means of this correspondence with the enemy the members of the Order were promptly apprized of all raids to be made by the forces of the former, and were able to hold themselves prepared to render aid and comfort to the raiders. To show how efficient for this purpose was the system thus established, it is to be added that our military authorities have, in a number of cases, been informed through members of the Order employed in the interest of the Government, of impending raids and important army movements of the rebels, not only days, but sometimes weeks, sooner than the same intelligence could have reached them through the ordinary channels.

On the other hand, the system of espionage kept up by the Order, for the purpose of obtaining information of the movements of our own forces, &c., to be imparted to the enemy, seems to have been as perfect as it was secret. The Grand Secretary of the Order in Missouri states, in his confession: "One of the special objects of this Order was to place members in steamboats, ferry-boats, telegraph offices, express offices, department headquarters, provost marshal's office, and, in fact, in every position where they could do valuable service;" and he proceeds to specify certain members who, at the date of his confession, (August 2d last), were employed at the express and telegraph offices in St. Louis.

5. Aiding the Enemy, by recruiting for them, or assisting them to recruit, within our lines.—This has also been extensively carried on by members of the Order, particularly in Kentucky and Missouri. It is estimated that 2,000 men were sent South from Louisville alone during a few weeks in April and May, 1864. The Order and its friends at that city have a permanent fund, to which there are many subscribers, for the purpose of fitting out with pistols, clothing, money, &c., men desiring to join the Southern service; and, in the lodges of the Order in St. Louis and Northern Missouri, money has often been raised to purchase horses, arms, and equipments for soldiers about to be forwarded to the Southern army. In the latter State, parties empowered by Price, or by Grand Commander Hunt as his representative, to recruit for the rebel service, were nominally authorized to "locate lands," as it was expressed, and in their reports, which were formally made, the number of acres, &c., located represented the number of men recruited. At Louisville, those desiring to join the Southern forces were kept hidden, and supplied with food and lodging until a convenient occasion was presented for their transportation South. They were then collected, and conducted at night to a safe rendezvous of the Order, whence they were forwarded to their destination, in some cases stealing horses from the United States corrals on their way. While awaiting an occasion to be sent South, the men, to avoid the suspicion which might be excited by their being seen together in any considerable number, were often employed on farms in the vicinity of Louisville, and the farm of one Grant, in that neighborhood, (at whose house, also, meetings of the Order were held), is indicated in the testimony as one of the localities where such recruits were rendezvoused and employed.

The same facilities which were afforded to recruits for the Southern army were also furnished by the Order to persons desiring to proceed beyond our lines for any illegal purpose. By these Louisville was generally preferred as a point of departure, and, on the Mississippi river, a particular steamer, the Graham, was selected as the safest conveyance.

6. Furnishing the Rebels with Arms, Ammunition, &c.—In this, too, the Order, and especially its female members and allies, has been sedulously engaged. The rebel women of Louisville and Kentucky are represented as having rendered the most valuable aid to the Southern army, by transporting large quantities of percussion caps, powder, &c., concealed upon their persons, to some convenient locality near the lines, whence they could be readily conveyed to those for whom they were intended. It is estimated that at Louisville, up to May 1st last, the sum of $17,000 had been invested by the Order in ammunition and arms, to be forwarded, principally in this manner to the rebels. In St. Louis several firms, who are well known to the Government, the principal of which is Beauvais & Co., have been engaged in supplying arms and ammunition to members of the Order, to be conveyed to their Southern allies. Mary Ann Pitman, a reliable witness, and a member of the O. A. K., who will hereafter be specially alluded to, states in her testimony that she visited Beauvais & Co. three times, and procured from them on each occasion about $30 worth of caps, besides a number of pistols and cartridges, which she carried in person to Forrest's command, as well as a much larger quantity of similar articles which she caused to be forwarded by other agents. The guerillas in Missouri also received arms from St. Louis, and one Douglas, one of the most active conspirators of the O. A. K. in Missouri, and a special emissary of Price, was arrested while in the act of transporting a box of forty revolvers by railroad to a guerilla camp in the interior of the State. Medical stores in large quantities were likewise, by the aid of the Order, furnished to the enemy, and a "young doctor" named Moore, said to be now a medical inspector in the rebel army, is mentioned as having "made $75,000 by smuggling medicines"—principally from Louisville—through the lines of our army. Supplies were, in some cases, conveyed to the enemy through the medium of professed loyalists, who, having received permits for that purpose from the United States military authorities, would forward their goods, as if for ordinary purposes of trade, to a certain point near the rebel lines, where, by the connivance of the owners, the enemy would be enabled to seize them.

7. Co-operating with the Enemy in Raids and Invasions.—While it is clear that the Order has given aid, both directly and indirectly, to the forces of the rebels, and to guerilla bands, when engaged in making incursions into the border States, yet because, on the one hand, of the constant restraint upon its action exercised by our military authorities, and, on the other, of the general success of our armies in the field over those of the enemy, their allies at the North have never thus far been able to carry out their grand plan of a general armed rising of the Order, and its co-operation on an extended scale with the Southern forces. This plan has been two-fold, and consisted, first, of a rising of the Order in Missouri, aided by a strong detachment from Illinois, and a co-operation with a rebel army under Price; second, of a similar rising in Indiana, Ohio, and Kentucky, and a co-operation with a force under Breckinridge, Buckner, Morgan, or some other rebel commander, who was to invade the latter State. In this case the Order was first to cut the railroads and telegraph wires, so that intelligence of the movement might not be sent abroad and the transportation of Federal troops might be delayed, and then to seize upon the arsenals at Indianapolis, Columbus, Springfield, Louisville, and Frankfort, and furnishing such of their number as were without arms, to kill or make prisoners of department, district, and post commanders, release the rebel prisoners at Rock Island, and at Camps Morton, Douglas, and Chase, and thereupon join the Southern army at Louisville or some other point in Kentucky, which State was to be permanently occupied by the combined force. At the period of the movement it was also proposed that an attack should be made upon Chicago by means of steam-tugs mounted with cannon. A similar course was to be taken in Missouri, and was to result in the permanent occupation of that State.

This scheme has long occupied the minds of members of the Order, and has been continually discussed by them in their lodges. A rising somewhat of the character described was intended to have taken place in the spring of this year, simultaneously with an expected advance of the army of Lee upon Washington; but the plans of the enemy having been anticipated by the movements of our own generals, the rising of the conspirators was necessarily postponed. Again, a general movement of the Southern forces was expected to occur about July 4, and with this the Order was to co-operate. A speech to be made by Vallandigham at the Chicago Convention was, it is said, to be the signal for the rising; but the postponement of the convention, as well as the failure of the rebel armies to engage in the anticipated movement, again operated to disturb the programme of the Order. During the summer, however, the grand plan of action above set forth has been more than ever discussed throughout the Order, and its success most confidently predicted, while at the same time an extensive organization and preparation for carrying the conspiracy into effect have been actively going on. But up to this time, notwithstanding the late raids of the enemy in Kentucky, and the invasion of Missouri by Price, no such general action on the part of the Order as was contemplated has taken place—a result, in great part, owing to the activity of our military authorities in strengthening the detachments at the prisons, arsenals, &c., and in causing the arrest of the leading conspirators in the several States, and especially in the seizure of large quantities of arms which had been shipped for the use of the Order in their intended outbreak. It was doubtless on account of these precautions that the day last appointed for the rising of the Order in Indiana and Kentucky (August 16) passed by with but slight disorder.

It is, however, the inability of the public enemy, in the now declining days of the rebellion, to initiate the desired movements which has prevented the Order from engaging in open warfare; and it has lately been seriously considered in their councils whether they should not proceed with their revolt, relying alone upon the guerilla bands of Sypher, Jesse, and others, for support and assistance.

With these guerillas the Order has always most readily acted along the border, and in cases of capture by the Union forces of Northern members of the Order engaged in co-operating with them, the guerillas have frequently retaliated by seizing prominent Union citizens and holding them as hostages for the release of their allies. At other times our Government has been officially notified by the rebel authorities that if the members of the Order captured were not treated by us as ordinary prisoners of war, retaliation would be resorted to.

An atrocious plan of concert between members of the Order in Indiana and certain guerilla bands in Kentucky, agreed upon last spring, may be here remarked upon. Some 2,500 or 3,000 guerillas were to be thrown around into the border counties, and were to assume the character of refugees seeking employment. Being armed, they were secretly to destroy Government property wherever practicable, and subsequently to control the elections by force, prevent enlistments, aid deserters, and stir up strife between the civil and military authorities.

A singular feature of the raids of the enemy remains only to be adverted to, viz: that the officers conducting these raids are furnished by the rebel Government with quantities of United States Treasury notes for use within our lines, and that these are probably most frequently procured through the agency of members of the Order.

Mary Ann Pitman states that Forrest, of the rebel army, at one time exhibited to her a letter to himself from a prominent rebel sympathizer and member of the Order in Washington, D. C., in which it was set forth that the sum of $25,000 in "greenbacks" had actually been forwarded by him to the rebel Government at Richmond.

8. Destruction of Government Property.—There is no doubt that large quantities of Government property have been burned or otherwise destroyed by the agency of the Order in different localities. At Louisville, in the case of the steamer Taylor, and on the Mississippi river, steamers belonging to the United States have been burned at the wharves, and generally when loaded with Government stores. Shortly before the arrest of Bowles, the senior of the major generals of the Order in Indiana, he had been engaged in the preparation of "Greek Fire," which it was supposed would be found serviceable in the destruction of public property. It was generally understood in the councils of the Order in the State of Kentucky, that they were to be compensated for such destruction by the rebel Government, by receiving a commission of ten per cent. of the value of the property so destroyed, and that this value was to be derived from the estimate of the loss made in each case by Northern newspapers.

9. Destruction of Private Property and Persecution of Loyal Men.—It is reported by General Carrington that the full development of the Order in Indiana was followed by "a state of terrorism" among the Union residents of "portions of Brown, Morgan, Johnson, Rush, Clay, Sullivan, Bartholomew, Hendricks, and other counties" in that State; that from some localities individuals were driven away altogether; that in others their barns, hay, and wheat-ricks were burned; and that many persons, under the general insecurity of life and property, sold their effects at a sacrifice and removed to other places. At one time in Brown county, the members of the Order openly threatened the lives of all "Abolitionists" who refused to sign a peace memorial which had prepared and addressed to Congress. In Missouri, also, similar outrages committed upon the property of loyal citizens are attributable in a great degree to the secret Order.

Here the outbreak of the miners in the coal districts of eastern Pennsylvania, in the autumn of last year, may be appropriately referred to. It was fully shown in the testimony adduced, upon the trials of these insurgents, who were guilty of the destruction of property and numerous acts of violence, as well as murder, that they were generally members of a secret treasonable association, similar in all respects to the K. G. C., at the meetings of which they were incited to the commission of the crimes for which they were tried and convicted.

10. Assassination and Murder.—After what has been disclosed in regard to this infamous league of traitors and ruffians, it will not be a matter of surprise to learn that the cold-blooded assassination of Union citizens and soldiers has been included in their devilish scheme of operations. Green B. Smith states in his confession that "the secret assassination of United States officers, soldiers, and Government employes has been discussed in the councils of the Order and recommended." It is also shown in the course of the testimony that at a large meeting of the Order in St. Louis, in May or June last, it was proposed to form a secret police of members for the purpose of patrolling the streets of that city at night and killing every detective and soldier that could be readily disposed of; that this proposition was coolly considered, and finally rejected, not because of its fiendish character—no voice being raised against its criminality—but because only it was deemed premature. At Louisville, in June last, a similar scheme was discussed among the Order for the waylaying and butchering of negro soldiers in the streets at night; and in the same month a party of its members in that city was actually organized for the purpose of throwing off the track of the Nashville railroad a train of colored troops, and seizing the opportunity to take the lives of as many as possible. Again, in July, the assassination of an obnoxious provost marshal, by betraying him into the hands of guerrillas, was designed by members in the interior of Kentucky. Further, at a meeting of the Grand Council of Indiana at Indianapolis on June 14 last, the murder of one Coffin, a Government detective, who, as it was supposed, had betrayed the Order, was deliberately discussed and unanimously determined upon. This fact is stated by Stidger in his report to General Carrington of June 17 last, and is more fully set forth in his testimony upon the trial of Dodd. He deposes that at the meeting in question, Dodd himself volunteered to go to Hamilton, Ohio, where Coffin was expected to be found, and there "dispose of the latter." He adds that prior to the meeting, he himself conveyed from Judge Bullitt, at Louisville, to Bowles and Dodd, at Indianapolis, special instructions to have Coffin "put out of the way"—"murdered"—"at all hazards."

The opinion is expressed by Colonel Sanderson, under date of June 12 last, that "the recent numerous cold-blooded assassinations of military officers and unconditional Union men throughout the military district of North Missouri, especially along the western border," is to be ascribed to the agency of the Order. The witness Pitman represents that it is "a part of the obligation or understanding of the Order" to kill officers and soldiers "whenever it can be done by stealth," as well as loyal citizens when considered important or influential persons; and she adds that while at Memphis, during the past summer, she knew that men on picket were secretly killed by members of the Order approaching them in disguise.

In this connexion may be recalled the wholesale assassination of Union soldiers by members of the Order and their confederates at Charleston, Illinois, in March last, in regard to which, as a startling episode of the rebellion, a full report was addressed from this office to the President, under date of July 26 last. This concerted murderous assault upon a scattered body of men, mostly unarmed—apparently designed for the mere purpose of destroying as many lives of Union soldiers as possible—is a forcible illustration of the utter malignity and depravity which characterize the members of this Order in their zeal to commend themselves as allies to their fellow-conspirators at the South.

11. Establishment of a Northwestern Confederacy.—In concluding this review of some of the principal specific purposes of the Order, it remains only to remark upon a further design of many of its leading members, the accomplishment of which they are represented as having deeply at heart. Hatting New England, and jealous of her influence and resources, and claiming that the interests of the West and South, naturally connected as they are through the Mississippi valley, are identical, and actuated further by an intensely revolutionary spirit as well as an unbridled and unprincipled ambition, these men have made the establishment of a Western or Northwestern Confederacy, in alliance with the South, the grand aim and end of all their plotting and conspiring. It is with this steadily in prospect that they are constantly seeking to produce discontent, disorganization, and civil disorder at the North. With this in view, they gloat over every reverse of the armies of the Union, and desire that the rebellion shall be protracted until the resources of the Government shall be exhausted, its strength paralyzed, its currency hopelessly depreciated, and confidence everywhere destroyed. Then, from the anarchy which, under their scheme, is to ensue, the new Confederacy is to arise, which is either to unite itself with that of the South, or to form therewith a close and permanent alliance. Futile and extravagant as this scheme may appear, it is yet the settled purpose of many leading spirits of the secret conspiracy, and is their favorite subject of thought and discussion. Not only is this scheme deliberated upon in the lodges of the Order, but it is openly proclaimed. Members of the Indiana Legislature, even, have publicly announced it, and avowed that they will take their own State out of the Union, and recognize the independence of the South. A citizen captured by a guerilla band in Kentucky last summer, records the fact that the establishment of a new confederacy as the deliberate purpose of the Western people was boastfully asserted by these outlaws, who also assured their prisoner that in the event of such establishment there would be "a greater rebellion than ever!"

Lastly, it is claimed that the new confederacy is already organized; that it has a "provisional government," officers, departments, bureaus, &c., in secret operation. No comment is necessary to be made upon this treason, not now contemplated for the first time in our history. Suggested by the present rebellion, it is the logical consequence of the ardent and utter sympathy therewith which is the life and inspiration of the secret Order.

VIII. THE WITNESSES AND THEIR TESTIMONY.

The facts detailed in the present report have been derived from a great variety of dissimilar sources, but all the witnesses, however different their situations, concur so pointedly in their testimony, that the evidence which has thus been furnished must be accepted as of an entirely satisfactory character.

The principal witnesses may be classified as follows:

1. Shrewd, intelligent men, employed as detectives, and with a peculiar talent for their calling, who have gradually gained the confidence of leading members of the Order, and in some cases have been admitted to its temples and been initiated into one or more of the degrees. The most remarkable of these is Stidger, formerly a private soldier in our army, who, by the use of an uncommon address, though at great personal risk, succeeded in establishing such intimate relations with Bowles, Bullitt, Dodd, and other leaders of the Order in Indiana and Kentucky, as to be appointed grand secretary for the latter State, a position the most favorable for obtaining information of the plans of these traitors and warning the Government of their intentions. It is to the rare fidelity of this man, who has also been the principal witness upon the trial of Dodd, that the Government has been chiefly indebted for the exposure of the designs of the conspirators in the two States named.

2. Rebel officers and soldiers voluntarily or involuntarily making disclosures to our military authorities. The most valuable witnesses of this class are prisoners of war, who, actuated by laudable motives, have of their own accord furnished a large amount of information in regard to the Order, especially as it exists in the South, and of the relations of its members with those of the Northern section. Among these, also, are soldiers at our prison camps, who, without designing it, have made known to our officials, by the use of the signs, &c., of the Order, that they were members.

3. Scouts employed to travel through the interior of the border States, and also within or in the neighborhood of the enemy's lines. The fact that some of these were left entirely ignorant of the existence of the Order, upon being so employed, attaches an increased value to their discoveries in regard to its operations.

4. Citizen prisoners, to whom, while in confinement, disclosures were made relative to the existence, extent, and character of the Order by fellow-prisoners who were leading members, and who in some instances, upon becoming intimate with the witness, initiated him into one of the degrees.

5. Members of the Order, who, upon a full acquaintance with its principles, have been appalled by its infamous designs, and have voluntarily abandoned it, freely making known their experience to our military authorities. In this class may be placed the female witness, Mary Ann Pitman, who, though in arrest at the period of her disclosures, was yet induced to make them for the reason that, as she says, "at the last meeting which I attended they passed an order which I consider as utterly atrocious and barbarous; so I told them I would have nothing more to do with them." This woman was attached to the command of the rebel Forrest, as an officer under the name of "Lieutenant Rawley;" but, because her sex afforded her unusual facilities for crossing our lines, she was often employed in the execution of important commissions within our territory, and, as a member of the Order, was made extensively acquainted with other members, both of the Northern and Southern sections. Her testimony is thus peculiarly valuable, and, being a person of unusual intelligence and force of character, her statements are succinct, pointed, and emphatic. They are also especially useful as fully corroborating those of other witnesses regarded as most trustworthy.

6. Officers of the Order of high rank, who have been prompted to present confessions, more or less detailed, in regard to the Order, and their connexion with it. The principals of these are Hunt, Dunn, and Smith, grand commander, deputy grand commander, and grand secretary of the Order in Missouri, to whose statements frequent reference has been made. These confessions, though in some degree guarded and disingenuous, have furnished to the Government much important information as to the operations of the Order, especially in Missouri, the affiliation of its leaders with Price, &c. It is to be noted that Dunn makes the statement in common with other witnesses that, in entering the Order, he was quite ignorant of its ultimate purposes. He says: "I did not become a member understandingly; the initiatory step was taken in the dark, without reflection and without knowledge."

7. Deserters from our army, who, upon being apprehended, confessed that they had been induced and assisted to desert by members of the Order. It was, indeed, principally from these confessions that the existence of the secret treasonable organization of the K. G. C. was first discovered in Indiana, in the year 1862.

8. Writers of anonymous communications, addressed to heads of departments or provost marshals, disclosing facts corroborative of other more important statements.

9. The witnesses before the grand jury at Indianapolis, in 1863, when the Order was formally presented as a treasonable organization, and whose testimony has been recently introduced upon the trial of Dodd.

It need only be added that a most satisfactory test of the credibility and weight of much of the evidence which has been furnished is afforded by the printed testimony in regard to the character and intention of the Order, which is found in its national and State constitutions and its ritual. Indeed, the statements of the various witnesses are but presentations of the logical and inevitable consequences and results of the principles therein set forth.

IN CONCLUDING this review, it remains only to state that a constant reference has been made to the elaborate official reports, in regard to the Order, of Brigadier General Carrington, commanding District of Indiana, and of Colonel Sanderson, Provost Marshal General of the Department of Missouri. The great mass of the testimony upon the subject of this conspiracy has been furnished by these officers; the latter acting under the orders of Major General Rosecrans, and the former co-operating, under the instructions of the Secretary of War, with Major General Burbridge, commanding District of Kentucky, as well as with Governor Morton, of Indiana, who, though at one time greatly embarrassed, by a Legislature strongly tainted with disloyalty, in his efforts to repress this domestic enemy, has at last seen his State relieved from the danger of a civil war.

But, although the treason of the Order has been thoroughly exposed, and although its capacity for fatal mischief has, by means of the arrest of its leaders, the seizure of its arms, and the other vigorous means which have been pursued, been seriously impaired, it is still busied with its plottings against the Government, and with its perfidious designs in aid of the Southern rebellion. It is reported to have recently adopted new signs and pass-words, and its members assert that foul means will be used to prevent the success of the Administration at the coming election, and threaten an extended revolt in the event of the re-election of President Lincoln.

In the presence of the rebellion and of this secret Order—which is but its echo and faithful ally—we cannot but be amazed at the utter and wide-spread profligacy, personal and political, which these movements against the Government disclose. The guilty men engaged in them, after casting aside their allegiance, seem to have trodden under foot every sentiment of honor and every restraint of law, human and divine. Judas produced but one Judas Iscariot, and Rome, from the sinks of her demoralization, produced but one Cataline; and yet, as events prove, there has arisen together in our land an entire brood of such traitors, all animated by the same partricial spirit, and all struggling with the same relentless malignity for the dismemberment of our Union. Of this extraordinary phenomenon—not paralleled, it is believed, in the world's history—there can be but one explanation, and all these blackened and fetid streams of crime may well be traced to the same common fountain. So fiercely intolerant and imperious was the temper engendered by Slavery, that when the Southern people, after having controlled the national councils for half a century, were beaten at an election, their leaders turned upon the Government with the insolent fury with which they would have drawn their revolvers on a rebellious slave in one of their negro quarters; and they have continued since to prosecute their warfare, amid all the barbarisms and atrocities naturally and necessarily inspired by the infernal institution in whose interests they are sacrificing alike themselves and their country. Many of these conspirators, as is well known, were fed, clothed, and educated at the expense of the nation, and were loaded with its honors, at the very moment they struck at its life with the horrible criminality of a son stabbing the bosom of his own mother while impressing kisses on his cheeks. The leaders of the traitors in the loyal States, who so completely fraternize with these conspirators, and whose machinations are now unmasked, it is as clearly the duty of the Administration to prosecute and punish as it is its duty to subjugate the rebels who are openly in arms against the Government. In the performance of this duty, it is entitled to expect, and will doubtless receive, the zealous co-operation of true men everywhere, who, in crushing the truculent foe ambushed in the haunts of this secret Order, should rival in courage and faithfulness the soldiers who are so nobly sustaining our flag on the battle-fields of the South.

Respectfully submitted.

J. HOLT, Judge Advocate General.

Opinions on the Legal Tender Act.

Subjoined is a statement made up from the Philadelphia North American, of a case recently decided by Judges Grier and Cadwallader, on the legal tender act, voted upon as recorded on pages 357, 358:

The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company vs. Charles Morrison et al., executors, trustees, &c. This was a bill in equity, filed by the complainants to compel the defendants to accept the principal sum of certain ground rents and the arrears thereof in notes issued by the Government of the United States, and made lawful money, and a "legal tender in payment of all debts," in payment and extinguishment of the said ground rents and all arrears thereof, and that it be decreed that contemporaneously with said payment they shall execute a valid and sufficient deed of extinguishment, lawfully releasing, discharging and extinguishing the said rents. And further, that in the meantime the defendants be restrained from attempting the recovery of any alleged arrears of rent by suit at law, or by distress, and from entering upon the premises for non-payment.

The bill sets out the conveyance to the company of four certain lots of ground in this city, in fee, subject to the payment of yearly ground rents of $10,500, $1,200, $4,200, and $1,800 respectively, in "lawful money of the United States of America." That by certain other conveyances these ground rents became vested in James Morrison, of Berks county, England, who subsequently died, having first made his last will and testament, and thereby, among other things, appointed Charles Morrison, Alfred Morrison, John Dillon and Mary Ann Morrison his executors. The last three named were subsequently appointed trustees of all the ground rents secured upon lands in Pennsylvania, and have entered upon their duties.

The complainants aver that upon the 21st of December, 1863, they offered payment of the principal of said ground rents ($300,000) and all arrearages thereon, and tendered the money therefor in lawful money of the United States, viz.: in notes issued by the Government of the United States, and declared to be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, (the covenants in said deeds provide for the extinguishment of the principal on the payment of lawful money in the United States,) to John Welsh and others, attorneys in fact for and substitutes to the place of William Smith, attorney in fact for the defendants, who denied for himself and others any authority to receive the same. That the defendants are aliens, and non-residents of the State of Pennsylvania, residing in England; and complainants are informed, and believe, that they deny their right to pay off and extinguish the said rents with the money aforesaid, and deny that they are bound to receive the same and execute the necessary deeds for the purpose of extinguishing the same, and are about to bring suit for the same, or to make distress upon the property on the premises for the collection of the rents as they become due and payable; which threatened proceedings the complainants, being ready and willing to pay, and having tendered payment as aforesaid, aver to be inequitable, and in respect thereto they need the interference of the Court. To that end this bill has been filed, praying as we have above set forth.

The case is one of great importance, not only on account of the large amount at stake, but also by reason of the great questions of constitutional law which are involved in it. It is the first time, too, we believe, that the question of the constitutionality of the act of Congress making these notes lawful money and a legal tender has been presented in a United States Court; and the great ability of the legal gentlemen conducting it will ensure a full and able discussion of it. Messrs. Charles Gibbons and St. Geo. T. Campbell appear for complainants, and Geo. M. Wharton and Geo. W. Biddle for the defendants.

Nov. 10—Judge Grier delivered this opinion:

Coined money, in modern times, forms but a very small portion of the current money used in commercial transactions. Paper money, representing credit, has long been used as current and lawful money. But no one could be compelled to accept the promise of a bank to pay money, instead of the coin itself. The notes of the Bank of the United States, issued under the authority of the Government, were current money and lawful money, because issued by such authority, but were never made a legal tender for the payment of debts.

A contract made in the United States for the payment of a certain number of dollars would be construed as meaning, not Prussian dollars or Spanish milled dollars, but lawful coin of the United States. The addition of the description "lawful money of the United States" is entirely superfluous, and does not change the nature of the obligation.

The statutes of Congress always take a distinction between lawful or current money and that which shall be a tender for payment of debts. Hence, we find when such is the intention, the language is, "and shall be a legal tender," &c.

Some coins of the Government are a legal tender below a certain amount, but not beyond. Thus, by act of 9th of February, 1793, after the expiration of three years all foreign coins except Spanish milled dollars shall cease to be a legal tender.

By act of April, 1806, "foreign gold and silver coins shall pass current as money, within the United States," and be a legal tender for the payment of all debts, &c., at the several respective rates following, &c.

Again, by act of 28th of June, 1834, "the following gold coins shall pass as current money, and be receivable in all payments by weight at the following rates," &c.

Hence we find that in all cases where other money than the coinage of the United States ordered to be received as current or lawful money, the statute carefully provides the rate and conditions under which they are made a legal tender for payment of debts. It is clear, therefore, that Congress has always observed the distinction between current and lawful money, which may be received in payment of debts, if the creditor sees fit to accept it, and that which he may be compelled to accept as a legal tender.

It is clear, also, that if Congress make any other thing than their own coin a legal tender, it may be used as such. Thus, in the act authorizing the National Banks, their notes are made a legal tender for certain debts due to the Government, for taxes, &c., but not for debts due from one citizen to another.

The treasury notes are made lawful or current money, "and a legal tender for debts," &c., as between individuals. As this is the first act in which this high prerogative of sovereignty has been exercised, it should be construed strictly. It is doubtful in policy and dangerous as a precedent.

The only question then is whether this case comes within the letter of the statute.

Is the money which may be paid to extinguish a ground rent within the category of the act?

Is it a debt? The owner of the land is not bound to pay it. The owner of the rent cannot compel him to pay it. There is no obligation as between the parties. It cannot be converted into an obligation by the election of one of the parties without the consent of the other. A man may execute his bond to me voluntarily, but unless I accept it he does not become my debtor.

These ground rents, in the nature of a rent service, are somewhat peculiar to Pennsylvania, and little known in other States. But the Supreme Court of the State has very clearly settled and determined their nature. The cases are too well known to the legal profession to need quotation. "A rent service (say the court in Bosler vs. Kuhn, 8 Watts & Sergeant, 186) is not a debt, and a covenant to pay it is not a covenant to pay a debt. The annual payments spring into existence and for the first time become debts when they are demandable."

I am of opinion, therefore, that the tender offered by the bill in this case is not authorized by the statute, and that the respondents cannot be compelled to extinguish their estate in the land by such a tender as that now made. The bill must, therefore, be dismissed.

The reporter of the North American adds:

Questions of a similar character have been discussed and variously decided in our State Courts.

In the case of Patterson vs. Blight, in the Common Pleas of this city, a bill similar to the above, to compel the extinguishment of ground rents payable in "lawful silver money of the United States," of a "peculiar fineness and weight," was dismissed by Judge Allison, who held that a ground rent was not a debt within the meaning of the act of Congress.

The case of Kroner vs. Colhoun, before the same court, was precisely similar to the Reading Railroad Company vs. Morrison, and the bill was also dismissed. The point was there discussed as to how far Congress had made their notes lawful money in all cases, and it was held that they were only made lawful money in payment of debts, and that therefore the condition precedent to the extinguishment by the payment in lawful money had not been performed by payment in these notes.

The case of Sailor vs. Martin, in the District Court, was an action to recover damages for the non-payment of certain ground rent arrears, payable in silver dollars, each dollar weighing seventeen penny weights and six grains, at the rate of the premium upon silver, and it was held that payment of such arrears in legal tender notes was sufficient.

In the case of Shollenberger vs. Brinton, before the Supreme Court at Nisi Prius, similar to Patterson vs. Blight, it was held by Judge Agnew that upon the tender by the ground tenant of the principal money of the ground rent, his election fixed it as a debt, and the prayer of the bill was granted.

It may be remarked here that Judge Grier, though the cases are not alike so far as the covenants in the ground rent deeds are concerned, arrives at the same conclusions, and in almost the same language as Judge Allison did in deciding the case of Patterson vs. Blight, the first that had then arisen under the act of Congress.

Relating to Peace.

MR. BENJAMIN TO MR. MASON.

On page 307 is found the closing statement made by Jefferson Davis to Col. Jacques and J. R. Gilmore, on the occasion of their visit to Richmond in August last.

August 25—Mr. Benjamin issued a circular from the State Department to James M. Mason, "Commissioner of the Continent, &c., &c., &c., Paris," giving the substance of the interview referred to, as understood by him. The important part is contained in the following summary of Mr. Davis's views:

The President came to my office at 9 o'clock in the evening, and Colonel Ould came a few moments later, with Messrs. Jacques and Gilmore. The President said to them that he had heard, from me, that they came as messengers of peace from Mr. Lincoln; that as such they were welcome; that the Confederacy had never concealed its desire for peace, and that he was ready to hear whatever they had to offer on that subject.

Mr. Gilmore then addressed the President, and in a few minutes had conveyed the information that these two gentlemen had come to Richmond impressed with the idea that this Government would accept a peace on a basis of a reconstruction of the Union, the abolition of slavery, and the grant of an amnesty to the people of the States as repentant criminals. In order to accomplish the abolition of slavery, it was proposed that there should be a general vote of all the people of both federations, in mass, and the majority of the vote thus taken was to determine that as well as all other disputed questions. These were stated to be Mr. Lincoln's views. The President answered, that as these proposals had been prefaced by the remark that the people of the North were a majority, and that a majority ought to govern, the offer was, in effect, a proposal that the Confederate States should surrender at discretion, admit that they had been wrong from the beginning of the contest, submit to the mercy of their enemies, and avow themselves to be in need of pardon for their crimes; that extermination was preferable to dishonor.

He stated that if they were themselves so unacquainted with the form of their own Government as to make such propositions, Mr. Lincoln ought to have known, when giving them his views, that it was out of the power of the Confederate Government to act on the subject of the domestic institutions of the several States, each State having exclusive jurisdiction on that point, still less to commit the decision of such a question to the vote of a foreign people; that the separation of the States was an accomplished fact; that he had no authority to receive proposals for negotiation except by virtue of his office as President of an independent Confederacy; and on this basis alone must proposals be made to him.

Nov. 7—President Davis thus closes his Annual Message, at the opening of the second session of the Second Rebel Congress:

The disposition of this Government for a peaceful solution of the issues which the enemy has referred to the arbitration of arms has been too often manifested and is too well known to need new assurances. But while it is true that individuals and parties in the United States have indicated a desire to substitute reason for force, and by negotiation to stop the further sacrifice of human life, and to arrest the calamities which now afflict both countries, the authorities who control the Government of our enemies have too often and too clearly expressed their resolution to make no peace, except on terms of our unconditional submission and degradation, to leave us any hope of the cessation of hostilities until the delusion of their ability to conquer us is dispelled. Among those who are already disposed for peace, many are actuated by principle and by disapproval and abhorrence of the iniquitous warfare that their Government is waging, while others are moved by the conviction that it is no longer to the interest of the United States to continue a struggle in which success is unattainable.

Whenever this fast-growing conviction shall have taken firm root in the minds of a majority of the Northern people, there will be produced that willingness to negotiate for peace which is now confined to our side. Peace is manifestly impossible unless desired by both parties to this war, and the disposition for it among our enemies will be best and most certainly evoked by the demonstration on our part of ability and unshaken determination to defend our rights, and to hold no earthly price too dear for their purchase. Whenever there shall be on the part of our enemies a desire for peace, there will be no difficulty in finding means by which negotiation can be opened; but it is obvious that no agency can be called into action until this desire shall be mutual. When that contingency shall happen, the Government, to which is confided the treaty-making power, can be at no loss for means adapted to accomplish so desirable an end.

In the hope that the day will soon be reached when, under Divine favor, these States may be allowed to enter on their former peaceful pursuits, and to develop the abundant natural resources with which they are blessed, let us then resolutely continue to devote our united and unimpaired energies to the defence of our homes, our lives, and our liberties. This is the true path to peace. Let us tread it with confidence in the assured result.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE LEGISLATURE OF ALABAMA.

The Richmond Enquirer of the 14th October, 1864, publishes the annexed resolutions:

Whereas this General Assembly did, on the 20th August, 1863, adopt the two resolutions following, to wit:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Alabama, in General Assembly convened, That the war now being waged against the people and property of the Confederate States, by the United States, is unprovoked and unjust, and is being conducted by our enemies in utter disregard of the principles which should control and regulate civilized warfare; that our oft-repeated purpose never to submit to Abolition rule remains unshaken; that our late reverses are not attributable to any want of courage or heroic self-sacrifice on the part of our brave armies, and should not discourage our people or produce doubts as to the final success; and that we hereby pledge to the cause of independence and perpetual separation from the United States all the resources of the State of Alabama.

Be it further resolved, That, in order to insure a speedy triumph of our cause and the firm establishment of our independence, it is the paramount duty of every citizen in the Confederate States to sustain, invigorate, and render effective our gallant armies to the full extent of his ability, by encouraging enlistments, by furnishing subsistence to the families of soldiers at prices corresponding with the means of such families, and by upholding the credit and currency of the Confederate Government; and that to dishearten the people and the soldiers at a period like this, to enfeeble the springs of action and destroy the elasticity requisite to rise superior to the pressure of adverse circumstances, is to strike the most insidious, and yet the most fatal blow at the very life of the Confederacy.

And whereas this General Assembly still entertains the opinion and cherishes the spirit herein expressed; therefore,

It is resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Alabama, in General Assembly convened, 1, That the resolutions above copied be and the same are hereby re-asserted and re-adopted as expressive of the feelings, sentiments, wishes, and determination of this General Assembly at the present time and in the present exigency.

2, That in the military events of last year no cause for despondency is found, and that neither patriotism nor wisdom can tolerate any termination of the present war without the maintenance of the independence of the Confederate States.

VOTE IN THE REBEL HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1864, Nov. 21—Mr. Russell, of Virginia, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this House deem it proper, in view of recent events, to repeat the views expressed in the resolution adopted by the last Congress, declaring the sense of Congress in reference to reuniting with the United States; that it is the unalterable determination of the Confederate States, who are suffering all the horrors and cruelties of a protracted war, that they will never, on any terms, politically affiliate with a people who are engaged in the invasion of their soil and the butchery of their citizens.

Mr. Clark, of Missouri, desired to submit a substitute for the resolution, embodying the same views, but in a more extended form.

Mr. Russell declined to withdraw the call for the question, but asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baldwin, Barksdale, Batson, Bell, Blandford, Boyce, Bradley, Branch, Bridgers, E. M. Bruce, H. W. Bruce, Burnett, Chambers, Chilton, Chrisman, Clark, Clifton, Cluskey, Colyar, Conrow, Cruikshank, Darden, De Jarnette, Dickinson, Dupre, Elliott, Farrow, Foote, Fuller, Gaither, Garland, Gohison, Goode, Hanly, Hartridge, Hatcher, Herbert, Hilton, Holder, Halladay, Johnston, Keeble, Konner, Lumpkin, Leach, J. M., Leach, J. T., Lester, Logan, Lyon, Machen, McMullen, Meneses, Miles, Miller, Montague, Moore, Murray, Norton, Orr, Perkins, Ramsay, Read, Rives, Rogers, Russell, Sexton, Simpson, Smith, J. M., Smith, W. E., Smith of Ala., Smith of N. C., Snead, Staples, Swan, Triplett, Turner, Vest, Villers, Welsh, Wickham, Wilkes, Witherspoon, Mr. Speaker—83.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, &c., &c.:

HON. SIR: In reply to your letter of to-day, permit me to state that the address which I have had the honor of being deputed by the parties signing it to bring to this country, and containing the signatures of some three hundred and fifty thousand of my countrymen—from the peer to the artisan—is not from the Government of Great Britain nor from any political party. It is simply an expression of the earnest desire of the masses of the people of Great Britain to see peace again restored to this continent.

Waiting your favor, I am, Hon. sir,

Yours, most obediently,

JOSEPH PARKER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, November 26, 1864.

To JOSEPH PARKER, Esq., Metropolitan Hotel:

SIR: The Government of the United States cannot receive the address which was mentioned in your notes of this morning. Your request for an interview with the President to present the address is therefore declined.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

"PEACE" IN THE REBEL CONGRESS.

1864, November 26—Mr. J. T. Leach, of North Carolina, offered the following resolutions:

Whereas the unfriendly, unjustifiable, and unpatriotic interference of citizens of the non-slaveholding States in their popular assemblies, from the pulpit, and by legislative enactments, with the reserved rights of the States, provided in the Constitution of the United States, and by the laws of Congress, has been the prolific cause of a cruel, bloody, and relentless war, that has no parallel in point of atrocity, in the annals of the world, between a people professing the Christian religion:

And whereas the citizens of the slave States, at an ungaurded moment, under the influence of unwise counsel, without mature deliberation as to the fearful consequence, made the election of Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency of the United States the occasion for precipitating the Confederate States out of the Union, which has been followed by a train of fearful consequences not contemplated by those who advocated the measure:

And whereas, we, the representatives of the people of the Confederate States, desiring to place ourselves fairly before our constituents, our enemies, and the civil world, declare that it is our earnest desire that proper measures should be adopted by the respective Governments to secure an honorable, just, and permanent peace, not incompatible with the principles as laid down in the Constitution of the United States, nor with the inalienable rights of freemen:

Resolved, That the reserved rights of the States should be guarded with watchful and jealous vigilance, and that any attempt to infringe upon those rights should be resisted by all lawful and proper means.

Resolved, That whenever the Government of the United States shall signify its willingness to recognize the reserved rights of the States, and guarantee to the citizens of the States their rights of property, as provided in the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of Congress, to the end that peace may be restored, and our future happiness and prosperity perpetuated, we will agree to treat for peace; and that such terms of peace as may be agreed to by commissioners appointed by the respective Governments, or by the States acting in their sovereign and independent character, and ratified by a majority of the people, shall constitute the bond of peace between the North and the South.

Mr. Leach said: Mr. Speaker, the resolutions that I hold in my hand, and that I propose to read, by the permission of the Chair, are not intended as an apple of discord in our midst. I trust, sir, that they may not produce discord in our midst. All I ask is, that they may have a calm, careful, unprejudiced hearing.

I do not offer them unadvisedly. I have consulted my friends as to the propriety of introducing them, as well as the proper time and circumstances. There is a different opinion as to the propriety of time and circumstances.

I do not offer them for the purpose of strengthening the arm of the enemy. That has been effectually done by the President in his speech at Macon, Ga., and more effectually strengthened by the Governors of the Confederate States and the President when they recommended the use of negroes as soldiers in the Confederate army. I do not offer them for the purpose of discouraging our heroic soldiers, who have braved the leaden hail of death upon the bloody battle-field. I believe it will arouse them to know that they are fighting for something more dear to them than the negro.

I offer them because I believe there is something practical in them. I offer them because I am satisfied that my constituents, both citizens and soldiers, desire an honorable peace. I offer them because I am satisfied that the prayers of Christians, statesmen, and patriots have been poured out for peace, and that the great heart of the nation is pulsating for peace. I offer them because I know that war is a relentless, cruel, blind monster, killing where he cannot make alive, and reaping where he has not sown.

[Mr. Leach desires to be understood as not including the "Border States" in his resolutions, the ordinances of secession having been adopted in the "Cotton States" long before the "Border States" went out. The latter acted under the pressure of circumstances over which they had no control.]

Mr. Montague (Va.) said that he had not designed saying anything when he entered the hall to-day, but he was unwilling to let the resolutions of the gentleman from North Carolina pass without a protest. He reviewed them eloquently and earnestly, and moved that they be rejected.

Numerous gentlemen called the question.

Mr. Leach asked that the vote be taken by yeas and nays, and the House seemed to rise simultaneously to sustain the call.

The roll being called, all the members voted in the affirmative, except Messrs. Fuller, J. M. Leach, J. T. Leach, Logan, Ramsay, and Turner, all of North Carolina.

Messrs. Fuller, Ramsay, and J. M. Leach, after the vote was announced, asked leave to change their votes, as they had voted in the negative under the apprehension that it would be regarded as a discourtesy to an honorable colleague.

Their votes were, with the consent of the House, recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. J. M. Leach stated that he knew there was no member on the floor from North Carolina who desired peace upon any other terms than eternal separation from the North. [Applause in the galleries which was checked by the chair.]

A SECOND LETTER FROM HON. W. W. BOYCE.

WINNEBAGO, S. C., October 20.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your note, I beg leave to say that I think the course I recommend the best possible course to attain the great object we are aiming at, the establishment of our independence. It proceeds upon two leading ideas:

1. To reconcile the North, or such portion as may be rational, to our independence, by harmonizing as much as possible our independence with their material interest.

2. To avail ourselves of the division of sentiment at the North.

It was to give potency to these two ideas at the South that I insisted so strenuously in my letter to the President on the danger to our republican institutions from the indefinite continuance of the war.

Let me call attention to this striking fact, that, of all the world, the only political organization which proposes to intervene between us and the war party North, is the party which adopted the Chicago platform. Now, should we pursue a policy to build up that party or not? I think most decidedly we should.

Let me call your attention to another fact. In the event of the assembling of a Congress of the States, it is manifest that, in that Congress, from the Northern States, would be represented two adverse systems of ideas—one having the animus of the Chicago platform, the other of the Lincoln programme.

The first of these would be in the ascendancy because the very convening of the Congress necessarily implies the defeat of Lincoln and his system, as it is well understood that Lincoln and the party he represents are utterly opposed to the assembling of this Congress.

Under this state of facts, an abrupt division of sentiment would be found in the Congress between the opponents and the supporters of Lincoln. From this there might result events of the vastest advantage to us, if our councils were guided by a masterly wisdom.

If, under that conjecture, we could dig up the head of Richelieu or Louis XI, or even the head of Elizabeth, the great Queen of England, and put it, full of its original brains, upon the shoulders of the man who would have the direction of our diplomacy in that Congress, the chances would be a thousand to one that our country would emerge from the clouds which now enshroud it, "redeemed, regenerated, disenthralled." War is but a blind giant, striking at random, unless the genius of diplomacy directs the blows. Ideas are the true divinities of this sublunary world. Let us consult these our oracles.

As regards the instructions to our delegates, I have no objection to their being of the character you indicate.

My great purpose is to break down the wall of fire which separates us from the influences of peace North. I have great faith that if Lincoln and his policy were once repudiated, and negotiations for peace entered upon, that every moment we would approach nearer and nearer to an auspicious result. With great respect, &c.,

WILLIAM W. BOYCE.

MR. JAMES G. HOLMES.

SECOND LETTER FROM ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

Mr. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, the Confederate Vice President, has published the following letter in further explanation of his views on the peace question. It originally appeared in the Augusta Constitutionalist of the 16th November, 1864, prefaced by a note from Mr. Stephens, by which it appears that this letter was not intended for the public eye, but that its publication has been induced by the strictures of the public press upon a prior letter of Mr. S. on the same subject. Some portions of the letter, as is indicated by asterisks, are omitted. Of these Mr. Stephens says that some are omitted from public considerations, and others because they relate exclusively to individual affairs.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, (Ga.), November 5, 1864.

Hon. THOMAS J. SENMES, C. S. Senate, Richmond.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just read a report of your speech at Mobile. From that report I am persuaded you are greatly mistaken as to my views upon the subject of a Convention of the States, and I trust you will excuse and pardon me for this letter upon that subject.

I have by no means invited such a convention by any thing that I have said or written upon the subject. It is not at all a favorite idea with me as a mode of inaugurating negotiations for peace. I see many difficulties attending it. But as so respectable a body as the Chicago Convention, representing so large a portion of the enemy, had pledged themselves, if brought into power, to tender such a proposition, I did think, and do still think, that it was highly politic and wise on our part to respond favorably to that proposition, inasmuch as I saw no insuperable objection to it with the limitations and restrictions stated in my letter. Indeed, with those limitations I saw no objection at all, under present circumstances, to acceding to such a proposition (if it should be made) as the initiation of negotiations. It would be the first step, and in all such cases the first step is often the most difficult.

If the Federal Government should propose to ours a convention of the States, I do not see why it might not be accepted simply as an advisory body, as I suggested. I see no constitutional difficulties in the way. The treaty-making power in both Governments is ample to provide for it. The treaty-making power on both sides might agree to submit the questions at issue to the consideration of any set of men on earth, if they choose, and hear the report without any pledge in advance to be bound by that report. In personal quarrels, such submission is often made, and to the honor of humanity it may be said that, in most cases of this kind, the result is an amicable and honorable settlement. Whether such would be the result of a convention of the States in our case, is of course uncertain. The probabilities, I am free to say, in my judgment, are that it would be. At any rate there is a possibility that it might. When we look at the elements of such a body, if it should be tendered on the other side and accepted on ours, and the true nature of the controversy, I am not without strong hopes that it would so result.

There is no prospect of such a proposition being tendered unless McClellan should be elected. He cannot be elected without carrying a sufficient number of the States, which, if united with those of the Confederacy, would make a majority of the States. In such a Convention then, so formed, have we not strong reasons to hope and expect that a resolution could be passed denying the constitutional power of the Government, under the compact of 1787, to coerce a State? The Chicago platform virtually does this already. Would not such a Convention most probably reaffirm the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions of 1793 and 1799? Are there not strong reasons, at least, to induce us to hope and believe that they might? If even that could be done it would end the war. It would recognize as the fundamental principle of American institutions the ultimate, absolute sovereignty of the several States. This fully covers our independence—as fully as I wish ever to see it covered. I wish no other kind of recognition, whenever it comes, than that of George III. of England, viz: the recognition of the sovereignty and independence of each State, separately and by name.

Our Confederation was formed by sovereign and independent States. It was formed for the defence and maintenance of the sovereignty of each. We have unity of name and unity of action, simply because the cause of each has become the cause of all. If, then, a majority of the States should, in solemn convention, settle this great principle, would it not virtually settle the controversy and end the war, covering everything for which we are contending? Would not the terms of a final treaty of peace be easily adjusted after the settlement of this great principle? And are there not sufficient reasons to hope that such might be the result, in case a convention should be proposed as I have stated, and accepted as a mode of inaugurating negotiations of peace, to justify our making a favorable response to the tender of the party at Chicago, in case they should be brought into power? To my mind it seems clear that they are.

You will also allow me to say, that I look upon the election of McClellan as a matter of vast importance to us in every view of the case, and hence I thought it judicious, patriotic, and wise to do everything that could be properly done to aid in his election. Whatever may be his individual opinions, he is the candidate of the State rights party at the North, in opposition to the Centralists and Consolidationists, whose hobby now is Abolitionism. I have thought from the beginning that our true policy was to build up and strengthen such a party at the North by all means in our power. Not only upon the wise maxim of Philip, of Macedonia, to divide the enemy as a question of policy merely, but from a higher and much nobler motive. Not only an early peace, but our future safety, security, and happiness required it.

The people of the North are obliged to be our neighbors. It matters not how this war may terminate, they are alongside of us, and must, with the generations after them, there remain forever. It is of the utmost importance to us and our posterity that they should be good neighbors, whatever be the relations existing between them and us. To be good neighbors they must have a good Government. It is almost as vital to us that they have a good Government as that we have such ourselves. It is much better to govern, if it can be done, by ideas than the sword. If this war shall result in the establishment, permanently, of the fundamental principle lying at the foundation of American constitutional liberty, that is, the absolute, ultimate sovereignty of the States, it will more than compensate for all its sacrifices of blood and treasure, great as these have been, or may be. It will secure peace on the continent for ages to come. We therefore have a great interest in fostering, cherishing, and building up and raising to power at the North any party favoring these principles.

If the proper line of policy had been pursued by our authorities toward that element of popular sentiment at the North from the beginning, I believe the States rights party there would have been triumphant at the approaching election. I believe an out and out State rights man might and would have been nominated at Chicago and elected. But the policy of our authorities seems to me, as far as I can judge of it, to have been directed with a view to weaken, cripple, and annihilate that party. So far from acting even upon the policy of dividing the enemy, their object seems to have been to unite and inflame them. I do, moreover, verily believe that if President Davis, even after McClellan's nomination, had made a favorable response to the Chicago resolution looking to a Convention of the States, as a mode of inaugurating negotiations of peace, that it would greatly have aided his election. It might have secured it. All that he need have said in some public manner was, that if such proposition should be tendered by the Federal Government he would accede to it, with some such limitations and restrictions as stated by me in the letter before alluded to. The idea that this could not be constitutionally done is strange to me. In the most objectionable view of the subject, delegates, one or more from each State, would be but commissioners or plenipotentiaries from each Government respectively to initiate negotiations, &c. Their acts would be subject to the approval or disapproval of their Governments respectively. Why commissioners could not be appointed in this way as well as any other, without any violation of the Constitution, I do not see. The treaty-making power in both Governments is ample for this purpose. At least it seems so to me. Indeed, as I have said before, it seems to me that it is ample on both sides to submit the questions in issue to the consideration merely of any body on earth. But enough of this. * * *

I know that there are many persons among us, whose opinions are entitled to high consideration, who do not agree with me on the question of McClellan's election. They prefer Lincoln to McClellan. Perhaps the President belongs to that class. Judging from his acts, I should think that he did. Those of the class to whom I refer with whom I have met, think that if what they term a conservative man should be elected, or any on the Chicago platform even, that such terms for a restoration of the Union would be offered as our people would accept. The ghost of the Union haunts them. The spectre of reconstruction rears its ghastly head at every corner, to their imagination. These apprehensions, I doubt not, are sincere. But I entertain none such myself. I am no believer in ghosts of any kind. The old Union and the old Constitution are both dead—dead forever, except in so far as the Constitution has been preserved by us. There is, for the Union as it was, no resurrection by any power short of that which brought Lazarus from the tomb. There may be, and doubtless are, many at the North and some at the South who look forward to a restoration of the Union and the Constitution as it was; but such ideas are vain and illusory as the dreamy imaginings of the Indian warrior, who in death clings to his weapons in fond expectation that he will have use for them beyond the grave in other lands and new hunting grounds.

These fears of voluntary reconstruction are but chimeras of the brain. No one need entertain any such from McClellan's election. But, on the contrary, I think that peace, and peace upon the basis of a separation of the States and our independence, would be the almost certain ultimate result, if our authorities should act wisely, in the event of his election. My reasons for this opinion are briefly these: A proposition for an armistice and a Convention of the States might be expected from him soon after his induction into office. This, on our side, being acceded to, as it ought to be, some time would elapse before the conference could meet. The passion of the day on both sides would considerably subside in the interim. The Convention might adopt such a resolution as I have stated. Looking to its probable composition, as before stated, there is strong probability that it would. That, as before stated, would end the matter, and to our entire satisfaction. But, take the worst supposable view of it. Suppose that they should wrangle, do nothing, and adjourn, and that no other mode of settlement by negotiation should be proposed. How would matters then stand?

McClellan would doubtless, as his letter of acceptance indicates he would do, renew the war for the restoration of the Union and the old Constitution with all its guaranties. The moment he should do this, the whole abolition element at the North, now the life and the soul of the war, would turn against it. The old Union with the old Constitution is just what they do not want. They have always regarded it as no better than "a league with Satan and a covenant with Hell." This right arm of the war-spirit of the North will be paralyzed the moment the war is put upon that footing. Besides this at least two-thirds of McClellan's own party manfully hold and proclaim the doctrine that there is no power in the central Government constitutionally to coerce a State. These two elements would constitute an overwhelming majority at the North decidedly against the further prosecution of the war. Meanwhile financial embarrassments would be doing their work. The war would inevitably fail in consequence. When all efforts to persuade our people to go back into the Union voluntarily failed, as they would, if our authorities shall so act as to secure the hearts and affections of the people as they ought, then McClellan would ultimately be compelled to give up the restoration of the Union as a forlorn hope. Peace would come slowly but surely upon our own terms and without any more fighting.

But this is not all. Other causes would operate to the same result, which, of themselves, even without considering those above stated, would effect the same thing. The moment McClellan should renew the war with the avowed object of restoring the Union with the old Constitution and all its guaranties, that moment, or as soon as possible, our recognition abroad would come. The silent sympathy of England, France, and other European Powers, at present with Lincoln, arises entirely from their mania upon the subject of negro slavery. * * * * *

Lincoln had either to witness our recognition abroad, the moral power of which alone, he saw, would break down the war, or to make it an emancipation war. He chose the latter alternative, and the more readily because it chimed in so accordantly with the feelings and views of his own party. This, in my opinion, is the plain English of the whole matter; and just as soon as McClellan should renew the war with a view to restore the Union, the old Constitution, with slavery, &c., would England, France, and other European Powers throw all the moral power and influence of their recognition on our side. I am not certain that they would not go further, rather than see the Union thus restored, if it should become necessary. But it would not become necessary. The other causes alluded to would completely effect our deliverance without any material aid from them.

So, in any and every view I can take of the subject, I regard the election of McClellan and the success of the State rights party of the North, whose nominee he is, of the utmost importance to us. With these views, you readily perceive how I regarded the action of the Chicago Convention as "a ray of light, the first ray of real light I had seen from the North since this war began." You can also, from these views, more correctly appreciate my motives for giving what I considered a favorable response to that action. I bespeak your careful attention to the language of that response. From the report of your speech I am led to infer that you entertained the opinion that I was favoring and inviting a Convention of the States in some outside way, and not through the organized channels of the two Governments. No such idea was ever in my mind, and never can be until I am prepared for another revolution—if secession be a revolution; for the States could not go into such a Convention as you seem, from the report of your speech, to think I favored, without first seceding from their present alliance. This, to my mind, is as clear as it is to yours. Of course what I said had to be brief, covering only general points. I could not go into a full explanation of my reasons for what I said, because that would have done damage instead of good to the cause which I wished to aid.

I know that many of our people know that any allusion to peace on our side, or any public expression of a desire for peace, or the offer of terms upon which we ought to be willing to make peace, is injurious to our cause; that it has a bad effect upon our armies and encourages the enemy to fight on under the belief that such declaration indicates a disposition on our part to yield. Some go so far as to maintain that we cannot, consistently with our purpose to secure independence at all hazards, entertain any propositions unless they be based upon our independence, or unless this be promised and granted in the offer. I concur in none of this reasoning. Nothing would give us more strength at home or abroad, with our armies and the world, than to keep constantly before the public what we are fighting for and the terms upon which the contest forced upon us may be ended. The right is with us. The right always has of itself great moral power if properly used and wielded. This depends upon what may be styled diplomacy. Diplomacy does not necessarily involve interchange of views or intercourse between parties. It should not be neglected in wars, even though the enemy should refuse to receive any communications. The result of most wars depends as much upon diplomatic skill in its proper sense as it does upon arms. The real statesman knows when and how to use the pen as well as the sword. The constant proclamation to the world of what we are fighting for can never weaken our cause with those who are periling their lives in that cause, especially if all our acts toward them and all others show that our professions are true; nor is there the slightest inconsistency, in my opinion, between the most fixed determination on our part to end the war upon no terms short of independence, and, at the same time, entertaining, hearing, and accepting offers to negotiate upon any other basis whatever. The doors to treat, to negotiate, to confer, to reason, should always be kept widely open. Those who have the right on their side should never shun or avoid reason. They should never decline an encounter on that arena.

I have been led to these remarks more with a view to self-vindication than to the expression or utterance of any unrecognized truths. * * * * *

On the question of reconstruction, I stand now just where I did in October, 1861, when I wrote to a gentleman in answer to a letter from him, stating that I was charged with such sentiments, and desiring me to give a public denial of it. I told him, in reply, that I looked upon such "a charge as no less an imputation upon my intelligence than upon my integrity. The issue of this war, in my judgment, was subjugation or independence. I so understood it when the State of Georgia seceded, and it was with a full consciousness of this fact, with all its responsibilities, sacrifices, and perils, that I pledged myself, then and there, to stand by her and her fortunes, whatever they might be, in the course she had adopted." "As for making any public denial of such a charge, I felt too much self-respect to do it." * * *

Yours truly,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

P. S. It is but proper that I should add, even by post-script, to this letter, long as it is, that I was highly pleased with the general character and tone of your speech at Mobile, as reported. It was well calculated to do much good, and I doubt not it will. A. H. S.

Miscellaneous.

THE FREE CONSTITUTION OF MARYLAND.

The Free Constitution of Maryland, containing the provision for emancipation stated on page 227, was adopted at an election held on Wednesday and Thursday, October 9th and 10th, 1864. On the 29th of October, Governor A. W. Bradford issued a proclamation announcing the adoption of the Constitution, and that it would supersede the old Constitution on the 1st of November, 1864. The whole vote, as officially declared by him, was:

For the Constitution.....	30,174
Against the Constitution.....	29,799
Blank ballots.....	61
Ballots reported as against the Constitution, but not counted because the persons offering them refused to take the oath required by said Constitution....	33
Total vote.....	60,067

The vote of the soldiers, counted by the Governor, was:

For the Constitution.....	2,633
Against the Constitution.....	263

Four returns from the army were rejected by the Governor, for reasons stated by him in his published opinion, which gave :

For the Constitution.....285
Against the Constitution..... 5

Application was made, before the issue of the Governor's proclamation, to the Court of Appeals, for a mandamus to prevent its issue; which the court refused, unanimously, to grant.

In addition to other features, the new Constitution of Maryland contains this article :

ARTICLE 5.—The Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, being the supreme law of the land, every citizen of this State owes paramount allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States, and is not bound by any law or ordinance of this State in contravention or subversion thereof.

In incorporating into her fundamental law this declaration of the duty of perpetual fidelity, and paramount allegiance to the United States, Maryland is in advance of all other States.

ADMISSION OF NEVADA.

1864, October 31—President LINCOLN issued a proclamation declaring that the people of NEVADA had complied with the act of Congress of March 21, 1864, to enable them "to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," and that the State of NEVADA is so admitted.

BRITISH AID TO THE REBELLION.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Seward.

No. 617.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
LONDON, Nov. 18, 1864.

SIR: I have received from Lord Wharncliffe, the chairman of the British association organized to give aid and comfort to the rebel cause, a note, a copy of which is transmitted herewith.

I append a copy of my reply.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Hon. WM. H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Lord Wharncliffe to Mr. Adams.

WORTLEY HALL,
SHEFFIELD, November 12, 1864.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: A bazaar has been held in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, to provide a fund for the relief of Southern prisoners of war. It has produced a clear sum of about £17,000. In preference to any attempt to reach the intended object by circuitous means, a committee of English gentlemen has been formed to address you on the subject.

As chairman of this committee I venture to ask your excellency to request the permission of your government that an accredited agent may be sent out to visit the military prisons within the Northern States, and minister to the comfort of those for whom this fund is intended, under such supervision as your government may direct.

Permit me to state that no political end is aimed at by this movement. It has received support from many who were opposed to the political action of the South. Nor is it intended to impute that the Confederate prisoners are denied such attentions as the ordinary rules enjoin. But these rules are narrow and stern. Winter is at hand, and the clothing which may satisfy the rules of war will not protect the natives of a warm climate from the severe cold of the North.

Sir, the issue of this great contest will not be determined by individual suffering, be it greater or less; and you, whose family name is interwoven with American history, cannot view with indifference the suffering of American citizens, whatever their state or their opinions.

On more than one occasion aid has been proffered by the people of one country to special classes, under great affliction, in another. May it not be permitted to us to follow these examples, especially when those we desire to solace are beyond the reach of their immediate kinsmen? I trust these precedents, and the voice of humanity, may plead with your excellency, and induce you to prefer to the Government of the United States the request which I have the honor to submit.

I am, sir, your obedient, humble servant,

WHARNCLIFFE.

His Excellency Hon. C. F. ADAMS.

Mr. Adams to Lord Wharncliffe.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
LONDON, Nov. 18, 1864.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your letter of the 12th instant, asking me to submit to the consideration of my government a request of certain English gentlemen, made through your lordship, to send out an accredited agent to visit the military prisoners held by the United States, and afford them such aid, additional to that extended by the ordinary rules of war, as may be provided by the fund which has been raised here for the purpose.

I am sure that it has never been the desire of my government to treat with unnecessary or vindictive severity any of the misguided individuals, parties in this deplorable rebellion, who have fallen into their hands in the regular course of war. I should greatly rejoice were the effects of your sympathy extended to the ministering to the mental ailment not less than the bodily sufferings of these unfortunate persons, thus contributing to put an end to a struggle which otherwise is too likely to be only procrastinated by your labors.

Be that as it may, I shall be happy to promote any humane endeavor to alleviate the horrors of this strife, and in that sense shall very cheerfully comply with your lordship's desire so far as to transmit, by the earliest opportunity, to my government a copy of the application which has been addressed to me.

I beg your lordship to receive the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

LORD WHARNCLIFFE, &c.

Mr. Seward to Mr. Adams.

No. 173.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, December 5, 1864.

SIR: I have received your dispatch of the 18th of November, No. 897, together with the papers therein mentioned, namely, a copy of a letter which was addressed to you on the 12th of November last by Lord Wharncliffe, and a copy of your answer to that letter.

Your proceeding in the matter is approved. You will now inform Lord Wharncliffe that permission for an agent of the committee described by him to visit the insurgents detained in military prisons of the United States, and to distribute among them seventeen thousand pounds of British gold, is disallowed. Here it is expected that your correspondence with Lord Wharncliffe will end.

That correspondence will necessarily become public. On reading it, the American people will be well aware that, while the United States have ample means for the support of prisoners, as well as for every other exigency of the war in which they are engaged, the insurgents, who have blindly rushed into that condition, are suffering no privations that appeal for relief to charity either at home or abroad.

The American people will be likely also to reflect that the sum thus insidiously tendered in the name of humanity constitutes no large portion of the profits which its contributors may be justly supposed to have derived from the insurgents by exchanging with them arms and munitions of war for the coveted productions of immoral and enervating slave labor. Nor will any portion of the American people be disposed to regard the sum thus ostentatiously offered for the relief of captured insurgents as a too generous equivalent for the devastation and desolation which a civil war, promoted and protracted by British subjects, has spread throughout States which before were eminently prosperous and happy.

Finally, in view of this last officious intervention in our domestic affairs, the American people can hardly fail to recall the warning of the father of our country, directed against two great and intimately connected public dangers, namely, sectional faction and foreign intrigue. I do not think that the insurgents have become debased, although they have sadly wandered from the ways of loyalty and patriotism. I think that, in common with all our countrymen, they will rejoice in being saved by their considerate and loyal government from the grave insult which Lord Wharncliffe, and his associates in their zeal for the overthrow of the United States, have prepared for the victims of this unnecessary, unnatural, and hopeless rebellion.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1861, (OLD SCHOOL.)

May 16—The body met in Philadelphia.

May 18—Dr. Spring offered a resolution, that a Special Committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of this Assembly making some expression of their devotion to the Union of these States, and their loyalty to the Government; and if in their judgment it is expedient so to do, they report what that expression shall be.

On motion of Mr. Hoyte, this resolution was laid on the table by a vote of 123 to 102.

A call for the yeas and nays, to be recorded, was made by Mr. Robertson, after the members had begun to vote by rising, which the Moderator declared to be out of order.

After the result of the vote had been announced, Mr. H. K. Clarke moved to take this resolution up from the table, and on this motion called for the yeas and nays. Points of order were discussed on this motion, until the Moderator called for the order of the day, to hear delegates from corresponding bodies.

May 22—Dr. Spring offered a paper with resolutions respecting the appointment of religious solemnities for the 4th of July next, and the duty of ministers and churches in relation to the present condition of our country.

May 24—Dr. Hodge proposed a substitute.

May 27—Dr. Hodge withdrew his substitute, and Dr. Wines moved one. A motion to table the whole subject was lost—yeas 87, (63 ministers, 24 elders,) nays 153, (76 ministers, 67 elders.)

May 28—Drs. Musgrave, Hodge, Yeomans, Anderson, and Wines, ministers, and Messrs. Ryerson, Giles, White, and H. K. Clarke, ruling elders, were appointed a Special Committee on the subject. Same day, the Committee reported—Dr. Musgrave presenting the report of the majority (8 of the 9,) and Dr. Anderson the minority, being Dr. Spring's resolution, with a slight alteration.

THE MAJORITY REPORT.

Gratefully acknowledging the distinguished bounty and care of Almighty God towards this favored land, and also recognising our obligation to submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, this General Assembly adopts the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That in view of the present agitated and unhappy condition of this country, Monday, the first day of July next, be hereby set apart as a day of prayer throughout our bounds, and that on that day ministers and people are called upon humbly to confess and bewail our national sins, to offer our thanks to the Father of lights for his abundant and undeserved goodness to us as a nation, to seek His guidance and blessing upon our rulers and their counsels, as well as upon the Congress then about to assemble, and to implore Him, in the name of Jesus Christ, the Great High Priest of the Christian profession, to turn away His anger from us, and speedily restore to us the blessings of a safe and honorable peace.

Resolved, 2. That the members of this General Assembly, in the spirit of that Christian patriotism which the Scriptures enjoin, and which has always characterized this Church, do hereby acknowledge and declare their obligation, so far as in them lies, to maintain the Constitution of these United States in the full exercise of all its legitimate powers, to preserve our beloved Union unimpaired, and to restore its inestimable blessings to every portion of the land.

Resolved, 3. That in the present distracted state of the country, this Assembly, representing the whole Church, feel bound to abstain from any further declaration, in which all our ministers and members faithful to the Constitution and Standards of the Church might not be able conscientiously and safely to join, and therefore, out of regard as well to the interests of our beloved country, as to those of the Church, the Assembly adopts this Minute as its deliverance upon this subject.

Dr. Musgrave moved to amend by modifying the second resolution, after "the United States," so as to read: "and our constitutional rulers, in the full exercise of their legitimate powers;" which was lost.

The report was then rejected—yeas 84, nays 128, as follows:

THE MINORITY REPORT.

Gratefully acknowledging the distinguished bounty and care of Almighty God towards this favored land, and also recognising our obligations to submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, this General Assembly adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That in view of the present agitated and unhappy condition of this country, the first day of July next be hereby set apart as a day of prayer throughout our bounds; and that on this day ministers and people are called on humbly to confess and bewail our national sins; to offer our thanks to the Father of light for his abundant and undeserved goodness towards us as a nation; to seek his guidance and blessing upon our rulers and their counsels, as well as on the Congress of the United States about to assemble; and to implore Him, in the name of Jesus Christ, the great High Priest of the Christian profession, to turn away His anger from us, and speedily restore to us the blessings of an honorable peace.

Resolved, 2. That this General Assembly, in the spirit of that Christian patriotism which the Scriptures enjoin, and which has always characterized this Church, do hereby acknowledge and declare our obligations to promote and perpetuate, so far as in us lies, the integrity of these United States, and to strengthen, uphold, and encourage the Federal Government in the exercise of all its functions under our noble Constitution; and to this Constitution, in all its provisions, requirements, and principles, we profess our unabated loyalty.

And, to avoid all misconception, the Assembly declare that by the term "Federal Government," as here used, is not meant any particular administration, or the peculiar opinions of any particular party, but that central administration which, being at any time appointed and inaugurated according to the forms prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, is the visible representative of our national existence.

Which was adopted—yeas 156, nays 66, as follows:

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1862, (OLD SCHOOL.)

May 15—The body met in Columbus, Ohio.

May 19—Dr. R. J. Breckinridge having previously submitted a paper on the state of the country, it, after being slightly amended on his own motion, was adopted, as follows:

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, now in session at Columbus, in the State of Ohio:

Considering the unhappy condition of the country in the midst of a bloody civil war, and of the Church agitated everywhere, divided in sentiment in many places, and openly assailed by schism in a large section of it; considering, also, the duty which this chief tribunal, met in the name and by the authority of the glorified Saviour of sinners, who is also the Sovereign Ruler of all things, owes to Him, our Head and Lord, and to His flock committed to our charge, and to the people whom we are commissioned to evangelize, and to the civil authorities who exist by His appointment; do hereby, in this deliverance, give utterance to our solemn convictions and our deliberate judgment, touching the matters herein set forth, that they may serve for the guidance of all over whom the Lord Christ has given us any office of instruction, or any power of government.

I. Peace is amongst the very highest temporal blessings of the Church, as well as of all mankind; and public order is one of the first necessities of the spiritual as well as the civil commonwealth. Peace has been wickedly superseded by war, in its worst form, throughout the whole land; and public order has been wickedly superseded by rebellion, anarchy, and violence, in the whole Southern portion of the Union. All this has been brought to pass in a disloyal and traitorous attempt to overthrow the National Government by military force, and to divide the nation, contrary to the wishes of the immense majority of the people of the nation, and without satisfactory evidence that the majority of the people in whom the local sovereignty resided, even in the States which revolted, ever authorized any such proceeding, or ever approved the fraud and violence by which this horrible treason has achieved whatever success it has had. This whole treason, rebellion, anarchy, fraud, and violence, is utterly contrary to the dictates of natural religion and morality, and is plainly condemned by the revealed will of God. It is the clear and solemn duty of the National Government to preserve, at whatever cost, the national Union and Constitution, to maintain the laws in their supremacy, to crush force by force, and to restore the reign of public order and peace to the entire nation, by whatever lawful means that are necessary thereunto. And it is the bounden duty of the people who compose this great nation, each one in his several place and degree, to uphold the Federal Government, and every State Government, and all persons in authority, whether civil or military, in all their lawful and proper acts, unto the end herein before set forth.

II. The Church of Christ has no authority from him to make rebellion, or to counsel treason, or to favor anarchy in any case whatever. On the contrary, every follower of Christ has the personal liberty bestowed on him by Christ, to submit, for the sake of Christ, according to his own conscientious sense of duty, to whatever government, however bad, under which his lot may be cast. But while patient suffering for Christ's sake can never be sinful, treason, rebellion, and anarchy may be sinful—most generally, perhaps, are sinful; and, probably, are always and necessarily sinful, in all free countries, where the power to change the government by voting, in the place of force, which exists as a common right, is constitutionally secured to the people, who are sovereign. If in any case, treason, rebellion, and anarchy can possibly be sinful, they are so in the case now desolating large portions of this nation, and laying waste great numbers of Christian congregations, and fatally obstructing every good word and work in those regions. To the Christian people scattered throughout those unfortunate regions, and who have been left of God to have any hand in bringing on these terrible calamities, we earnestly address words of exhortation and rebuke, as unto brethren who have sinned exceedingly, and whom God calls to repentance by fearful judgments. To those in like circumstances who are not chargeable with the sins which have brought such calamities upon the land, but who have chosen, in the exercise of their Christian liberty, to stand in their lot and suffer, we address words of affectionate sympathy, praying God to bring them off conquerors. To those in like circumstances, who have taken their lives in their hands, and risked all for their country and for conscience' sake, we say, we love such with all our heart, and bless God such witnesses were found in the time of thick darkness. We fear, and we record it with great grief, that the Church of God, and the Christian people, to a great extent, and throughout all the revolted States, have done many things that ought not to have been done, and have left undone much that ought to have been done, in this time of trial, rebuke, and blasphemy; but concerning the wide schism which is reported to have occurred in many Southern Synods, this Assembly will take no action at this time. It declares, however, its fixed purpose, under all possible circumstances, to labor for the extension and the permanent maintenance of the Church under its care, in every part of the United States. Schism, so far as it may exist, we hope to see healed. If that cannot be, it will be disregarded.

* Then editor of the New Orleans True Witness, which contained, April 27, 1861, this paragraph, quoted in Rev. Dr. Stanton's Church and Rebellion:

"Maryland is kindling with Southern fire, while Baltimore has stood at the font of baptismal blood, in solemn covenant for the Confederate States; and Providence ordered that this thrilling deed, this searing ordinance, should be on the anniversary of the battle of Lexington, Mass., the memorable 19th of April. Thus the same day beheld the first blood of '76 and of '61—fortunate omen of the result."

III. We record our gratitude to God for the prevailing unity of sentiment and general internal peace, which have characterized the Church in the States that have not revolted, embracing a great majority of the ministers, congregations, and people under our care. It may still be called, with emphasis, a loyal, orthodox, and pious Church; and all its acts and words indicate its right to a title so noble. Let it strive for divine grace to maintain that good report. In some respects, the interests of the Church of God are very different from those of all civil institutions. Whatever may befall this, or any other nation, the Church of Christ must abide on earth, triumphant even over the gates of hell. It is, therefore, of supreme importance that the Church should guard itself from internal alienations and divisions, founded upon questions and interests that are external as to her, and which ought not by their necessary workings to cause her fate to depend on the fate of things less important and less enduring than herself. Disturbers of the Church ought not to be allowed; especially disturbers of the Church in States that never revolted, or that have been cleared of armed rebels: disturbers who, under many false pretexts, may promote discontent, disloyalty, and general alienation, tending to the unsettling of ministers, to local schisms, and to manifold trouble. Let a spirit of quietness, of mutual forbearance, and of ready obedience to authority, both civil and ecclesiastical, illustrate the loyalty, the orthodoxy, and the piety of the Church. It is more especially to ministers of the gospel, and amongst them, particularly to any whose first impressions had been, on any account, favorable to the terrible military revolution which has been attempted, and which God's providence has hitherto so singularly rebuked, that these decisive considerations ought to be addressed. And in the name and by the authority of the Lord Jesus we earnestly exhort all who love God, or fear his wrath, to turn a deaf ear to all counsels and suggestions that tend towards a reaction favorable to disloyalty, schism, or disturbance either in the Church or in the country. There is hardly anything more inexcusable connected with the frightful conspiracy against which we testify than the conduct of those office-bearers and members of the Church who, although citizens of loyal States, and subject to the control of loyal Presbyteries and Synods, have been faithless to all authority, human and divine, to which they owed subjection. Nor should any to whom this deliverance may come fail to bear in mind that it is not only their outward conduct concerning which they ought to take heed; but it is also, and especially their heart, their temper, and their motives, in the sight of God, and towards the free and beneficent civil government which he has blessed us withal, and toward the spiritual commonwealth to which they are subject in the Lord. In all these respects, we must all give account to God in the great day. And it is in view of our own dread responsibility to the Judge of quick and dead that we now make this deliverance.

The vote was—yeas 206, nays 20, as follows:

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1863, (OLD SCHOOL.)

May 21—The body met at Peoria, Illinois.

June 1—Dr. Beatty, from the Committee on Bills and Overtures, reported:

Overture No. 16, being a request from the Presbytery of Saline that the General Assembly solemnly reaffirm the testimony of 1818, in regard to slavery: the committee report:

The Assembly has, from the first, uttered its sentiments on the subject of slavery in substantially the same language. The action of 1818 was taken with more care, made more clear, full, and explicit, and was adopted unanimously. It has since remained that true and scriptural deliverance on this important subject by which our church is determined to abide. It has never been repealed, amended, or modified, but has frequently been referred to, and reiterated in subsequent Assemblies. And when some persons fancied that the action of 1845 in some way interfered with it, the Assembly of 1846 declared with much unanimity, that the action of 1845 was not intended to deny or rescind the testimony on the subject, previously uttered by General Assemblies; and by these deliverances we still abide.

Dr. Humphrey moved to insert the word "all" before the words, "these deliverances we still abide." Lost. His motion to table the report was lost; and it was then adopted without amendment.

May 27—Mr. T. H. Nevin moved for a committee of three to cause the national flag to be raised over the church edifice where the Assembly is met. A motion to table this was lost—yeas 93, nays 130, not voting, 1. Referred to a select committee: Drs. J. M. Lowrie, E. P. Humphrey, Loyal Young, and J. I. Brownson; and Messrs. H. H. Leavitt, H. K. Clarke, and R. Carter.

May 30—The committee reported.

June 1—Dr. Humphrey offered a substitute, which was read.

The report of the committee was adopted—yeas 180, nays 19, not voting 1, as follows:

So the report was adopted. It is as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred the resolution which proposed to raise the flag of the United States upon the building in which the Assembly is now convened, and to report in respect to the "State of the Country," respectfully present the following report:

Your Committee believe that the design of the mover of the original resolution, and of the large majority, who apparently are ready to vote for its adoption, is simply to call forth from the Assembly a significant token of our sympathy with this Government, in its earnest efforts to suppress a rebellion, that now for over two years has wickedly stood in armed resistance to lawful and beneficent authority. But as there are many among us who are undoubtedly patriotic; who are willing to express any righteous principle to which this Assembly should give utterance, touching the subjection and attachment of an American citizen to the Union and its institutions; who love the flag of our country, and rejoice in its successes by sea and by land; and who yet do not esteem this particular act a testimonial of loyalty entirely becoming to a church court,—and as many of these brethren, by the pressing of this vote, would be placed in a false position, as if they did not love the Union, of which that flag is the beloved symbol, your Committee deem themselves authorized, by the subsequent direction of the Assembly, to propose a different action to be adopted by this venerable body.

It is well known, on the one hand, that the General Assembly has ever been reluctant to repeat its testimonies upon important matters of public interest: but, having given utterance to carefully considered words, is content to abide calmly by its recorded deliverances. Nothing that this Assembly can say can more fully express the wickedness of the rebellion that has cost so much blood and treasure; can declare in plainer terms the guilt before God and man of those who have inaugurated, or maintained, or countenanced, for so little cause, this fratricidal strife; or can more impressively urge the solemn duty of the Government to the lawful exercise of its authority, and of the people, each in his several place, to uphold the civil authorities, to the end that law and order may again reign throughout this entire nation—than these things have already been done by previous Assemblies. Nor need this body declare its solemn rebukes towards those ministers and members of the church of Christ, who have aided in bringing on and sustaining these immense calamities; or tender our kind sympathies to those who are overtaken by troubles they could not avoid, and who mourn and weep in secret places, not unseen by the Father's eye; or reprove all wilful disturbers of the public peace; or exhort those that are subject to our care to the careful discharge of every duty tending to uphold the free and beneficent Government under which we are, and this specially for conscience' sake, and as in the sight of God—more than, in regard to all these things, the General Assembly has made its solemn deliverances, since these troubles began.

But, on the other hand, it may be well for this General Assembly to reaffirm, as it now solemnly does, the great principles to which utterance has already been given. We do this the more readily, because our beloved church may thus be understood to take her deliberate and well-chosen stand, free from all imputations of haste or excitement: because we recognise an entire harmony between the duties of the citizen, (especially in a land where the people frame their own laws, and choose their own rulers,) and the duties of the Christian to the great Head of the Church; because, indeed, least of all persons, should Christian citizens ever seem to stand back from their duty, when bad men press forward for mischief; and because a true love for our country, in her times of peril, should forbid us to withhold an expression of our attachment, for the insufficient reason that we are not accustomed to repeat our utterances.

And because there are these among us who have scruples touching the propriety of any deliverance of a church-court respecting civil matters, this Assembly would add, that all strifes of party politics should indeed be banished from our ecclesiastical assemblies, and from our pulpits; that Christian people should earnestly guard against promoting partizan divisions; and that the difficulty of accurately deciding, in some cases, what are general and what party principles, should make us careful in our judgments; but that our duty is none the less imperative to uphold the constituted authorities, because minor delicate questions may possibly be involved. Rather, the sphere of the church is wider and more searching, touching matters of great public interest, than the sphere of the civil magistrate, in this important respect—that the civil authorities can take cognizance only of overt acts; while the law of which the church of God is the interpreter, searches the heart, makes every man subject to the civil authority, for conscience' sake, and declares that man truly guilty who allows himself to be alienated, in sympathy and feeling, from any lawful duty, or who does not conscientiously prefer the welfare, and especially the preservation of the Government, to any party or partizan ends. Officers may not always command a citizen's confidence; measures may by him be deemed unwise; earnest, lawful efforts may be made for changes he may think desirable; but no causes now exist to vindicate the disloyalty of American citizens towards the United States Government.

The General Assembly would not withhold from the Government of the United States, that expression of cordial sympathy which a loyal people should offer. We believe that God has afforded us ample resources to suppress this rebellion, and that, with his blessing, it will ere long be accomplished. We would animate those who are discouraged by the continuance and fluctuations of these costly strifes, to remember and rejoice in the supreme government of our God, who often leads through perplexity and darkness. We would exhort to penitence for all our national sins, to sobriety and humbleness of mind before the Great Ruler of all, and to constant prayerfulness for the divine blessing; and we would entreat our people to beware of all schemes implying resistance to the lawfully-constituted authorities, by any other means than are recognised as lawful to be openly prosecuted. And as this Assembly is ready to declare our unalterable attachment and adherence to the Union established by our fathers, and our unqualified condemnation of the rebellion; to proclaim to the world the United States, one and undivided, as our country; the lawfully-chosen rulers of the land, our rulers; the Government of the United States, our civil government, and its honored flag, our flag; and to affirm that we are bound, in the truest and strictest fidelity, to the duties of Christian citizens under a government that has strown its blessings with a profuse hand, your Committee recommend that, as the trustees of this church, concurring in the desire of many members of this Assembly, have displayed from this edifice the American flag, the symbol of national protection, unity, and liberty, the particular action contemplated in the original resolution be no further urged upon the attention of this body.

Dr. Hickok moved now to adopt the paper of Dr. Humphrey.

The paper of Dr. Humphrey was therefore adopted. It is as follows:

The General Assembly of 1861 adopted a minute on the state of the church and the country. The Assembly of 1862 uttered a more formal and comprehensive deliverance. In the meantime, a certain number, perhaps the larger portion of the Presbyteries and Synods, have expressed their judgments on the same subject. This General Assembly is persuaded that the office-bearers and members of this church, within the Presbyteries represented here, are, in a remarkable degree, united in a strict and true allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States; and that they are, as a body, loyal both to the church and the civil government as ordinances of God.

This General Assembly contents itself, on that part of the subject, by enjoining upon all the people of God, who acknowledge this church as their church, to uphold, according as God shall give them strength, the authority of the Constitution and laws of the land, in this time of supreme national peril. But this Assembly would most distinctly and solemnly inculcate upon all its people the duty of humbly confessing before God the great unworthiness, and the many sins of the people of this land, and of acknowledging the holiness and justice of the Almighty in the present visitation. He is righteous in all His ways, and holy in all His works. We exhort our brethren to seek the gift of the Holy Ghost, by prayer and confession and repentance, so that the anger of the Lord may be turned away from us, and that the spirit of piety may become not less predominant and vital in the churches than the spirit of an awakened patriotism.

And this Assembly, connecting the experience of our present trials with the remembrance of those through which the church has passed, does now recall and adopt the sentiments of our fathers in the Church of Scotland, as these are expressed for substance in the Solemn League and Covenant of 1643: "And because the people of this land are guilty of many sins and provocations against God, and his Son Jesus Christ, as is manifest by our present distresses and dangers, the fruits thereof, we profess and declare before God and the world our unguessed desire to be humbled for our own sins and the sins of the people, especially that we have not, as we ought, valued the inestimable benefit of the gospel, nor laboured for the purity and power thereof; and that we have not, as we ought, endeavoured to receive Christ in our hearts, nor to walk worthy of him in our lives, which are the cause of other sins and transgressions so much abounding among us; and our true and unfeigned purpose, desire, and endeavour for ourselves, and all others under our charge, both in public and private, in all duties we owe to God and man, to amend our lives, and each one to go before another in the example of a real reformation, that the Lord may turn away His wrath and heavy indignation, and establish the church and the land in truth and peace."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1864, (OLD SCHOOL.)

May 19—The body met at Newark, N. J.

May 20—Hon. Stanley Matthews, of Cincinnati, came on the Committee on Bills and Overtures—which consisted of Drs. W. L. Breckinridge, J. M. Krebs, J. Greenleaf, J. Kirkpatrick, J. V. Reynolds, A. S. MacMaster, J. D. Paxton, and Rev. Messrs. J. J. Porter, J. A. Steele, and Ruling Elders R. Carter, T. Charlton Henry, A. G. McCandless, S. Matthews, and J. Y. Allison—made a report, which was amended in a few particulars and adopted with almost entire unanimity, as follows:

The Committee on Bills and Overtures report:

Overture No. 12, from the Presbytery of Newton, reciting the former deliverances of the General Assembly upon the subject of slavery in this country, and the duty of emancipation, and asking this General Assembly to take such action as in their wisdom seems proper to meet the present aspects of human bondage in our country, and recommend the adoption of the following:

In the opinion of the General Assembly, the solemn and momentous circumstances of our times, the state of our country, and the condition of our church, demand a plain declaration of its sentiments upon the question of slavery, in view of its present aspects in this country.

From the earliest period of our church, the General Assembly delivered unequivocal testimonies upon this subject, which it will be profitable now to re-affirm.

In the year 1757, the Synod of New York and Philadelphia, in view of movements then on foot looking to the abolition of slavery, and highly approving of them, declared that "inasmuch as men introduced from a servile state to a participation of all the privileges of civil society, without a proper education, and without previous habits of industry, may be, in many respects, dangerous to the community, therefore they earnestly recommend to all the members belonging to their communion to give these persons, who are at present held in servitude, such good education as to prepare them for the better enjoyment of freedom."

"* * * And finally, they recommend it to all their people to use the most prudent measures consistent with the interest and the state of civil society in the countries where they live to procure eventually the final abolition of slavery in America."

In 1795, the General Assembly "assured all the churches under their care, that they view with the deepest concern any vestiges of slavery which may exist in our country."

In 1815 the following record was made:

"The General Assembly have repeatedly declared their cordial approbation of those principles of civil liberty which appear to be recognized by the Federal and State Governments in these United States. They have expressed their regret that the slavery of the Africans and of their descendants still continues in so many places, and even among those within the pale of the church, and have urged the Presbyteries under their care to adopt such measures as will secure, at least to the rising generation of slaves, within the bounds of the church, a religious education, that they may be prepared for the exercise and enjoyment of liberty when God in his providence may open a door for their emancipation."

The action of the General Assembly upon the subject of slavery in the year 1818 is unequivocal, and so well known that it need not be recited at length. The following extracts, however, we regard as applicable to our present circumstances, and proper now to be reiterated:

"We consider the voluntary enslaving of one portion of the human race by another as a gross violation of the most precious and sacred rights of human nature, as utterly inconsistent with the law of God, which requires us to love our neighbor as ourselves, and as totally irreconcilable with the spirit and principles of the gospel of Christ, which enjoins that 'all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.' Slavery creates a paradox in the moral system. It exhibits rational, moral, and accountable beings in such circumstances as scarcely to leave them the power of moral action. It exhibits them as dependent on the will of others, whether they shall receive religious instruction, whether they shall know and worship the true God, whether they shall enjoy the ordinances of the gospel, whether they shall perform the duties and cherish the endearments of husbands and wives, parents and children, neighbors and friends; whether they shall preserve their chastity and purity, or regard the dictates of justice and humanity. Such are some of the consequences of slavery—consequences not imaginary, but which connect themselves with its very existence.

"From this view of the consequences resulting from the practice, into which Christian people have most inconsistently fallen, of enslaving a portion of their brethren of mankind, it is manifestly the duty of all Christians, who enjoy the light of the present day, when the inconsistency of slavery, both with the dictates of humanity and of religion, has been demonstrated, and is generally seen and acknowledged, to use their honest, earnest, and unwearied endeavors to correct the errors of former times, and, as speedily as possible, to efface this blot on our holy religion, and to obtain the complete abolition of slavery throughout Christendom, and if possible throughout the world."

They earnestly exhorted those portions of the Church where the evil of slavery had been entailed upon them, "to continue, and, if possible, to increase their exertions to effect a total abolition of slavery, and to suffer no greater delay to take place in this most interesting concern than a regard to public welfare truly and indispensably demands;" and declare "that our country ought to be governed in this matter by no other consideration than an honest and impartial regard to the happiness of the injured party, uninfluenced by the expense or inconvenience which such a regard may involve;" warning "all who belong to our denomination of Christians against unduly extending this plea of necessity; against making it a cover for the love and practice of slavery, or a pretence for not using efforts that are lawful and practicable to extinguish this evil."

Such were the early and unequivocal instructions of our Church. It is not necessary too minutely to inquire how faithful and obedient to these lessons and warnings those to whom they were addressed have been. It ought to be acknowledged that we have all much to confess and lament as to our short-comings in this respect. Whether a strict and careful application of this advice would have rescued the country from the evil of its condition, and the dangers which have since threatened it, is known to the Omnipotent alone. Whilst we do not believe that the present judgments of our Heavenly Father, and Almighty and Righteous Governor, have been inflicted solely in punishment for our continuance in this sin; yet it is our judgment that the recent events in our history, and the present condition of our Church and country furnish manifest tokens that the time has at length come, in the providence of God, when it is His will that every vestige of human slavery among us should be effaced, and that every Christian man should address himself with industry and earnestness to his appropriate part in the performance of this great duty.

Whatever excuses for its postponement may heretofore have existed, no longer avail. When the country was at peace within itself, and the Church was unbroken, many consciences were perplexed in the presence of this great evil, for the want of an adequate remedy. Slavery was so formidably entrenched behind the ramparts of personal interests and prejudices, that to attack it with a view to its speedy overthrow appeared to be attacking the very existence of the social order itself, and was characterized as the inevitable introduction of an anarchy, worse in its consequences than the evil for which it seemed to be the only cure. But the folly and weakness of men have been the illustrations of God's wisdom and power. Under the influence of the most incomprehensible infatuation of wickedness, those who were most deeply interested in the perpetuation of slavery have taken away every motive for its further toleration.

The spirit of American slavery, not content with its defenses to be found in the laws of the States, the provisions of the Federal Constitution, the prejudices in favor of existing institutions, and the fear of change, has taken arms against law, organized a bloody rebellion against the national authority, made formidable war upon the Federal Union, and in order to found an empire upon the cornerstone of slavery, threatens not only our existence as a people, but the annihilation of the principles of free Christian government; and thus has rendered the continuance of negro slavery incompatible with the preservation of our own liberty and independence.

In the struggle of the nation for existence against this powerful and wicked treason, the highest executive authorities have proclaimed the abolition of slavery within most of the Rebel States, and decreed its extinction by military force. They have enlisted those formerly held as slaves to be soldiers in the national armies. They have taken measures to organize the labor of the freedmen, and instituted measures for their support and government in their new condition. It is the President's declared policy not to consent to the reorganization of civil government within the seceded States upon any other basis than that of emancipa-tion. In the loyal States where slavery has not been abolished, measures of emancipation, in different stages of progress, have been set on foot, and are near their consummation; and propositions for an amendment to the Federal Constitution, prohibiting slavery in all the States and Territories, are now pending in the national Congress. So that, in our present situation, the interests of peace and of social order are identified with the success of the cause of emancipation. The difficulties which formerly seemed insurmountable, in the providence of God, appear now to be almost removed. The most formidable remaining obstacle, we think, will be found to be the unwillingness of the human heart to see and accept the truth against the prejudices of habit and of interest; and to act towards those who have been heretofore degraded as slaves, with the charity of Christian principle in the necessary efforts to improve and elevate them.

In view, therefore, of its former testimonies upon the subject, the General Assembly does hereby devoutly express its gratitude to Almighty God for having overruled the wickedness and calamities of the rebellion, so as to work out the deliverance of our country from the evil and guilt of slavery; its earnest desire for the extirpation of slavery, as the root of bitterness which has sprung rebellion, war, and bloodshed, and the long list of horrors that follow in their train; its earnest trust that the thorough removal of this prolific source of evil and harm will be speedily followed by the blessings of our Heavenly Father, the return of peace, union and fraternity, and abounding prosperity to the whole land; and recommend to all in our communion to labor honestly, earnestly, and unweariedly in their respective spheres for this glorious consummation, to which human justice, Christian love, national peace and prosperity, every earthly and every religious interest, combine to pledge them.

ATTEMPTED CENSURE OF THE ASSEMBLY'S ACTION.

At the meeting of the Synod of New York in Jersey City, in October, the following preamble and resolutions were introduced by Rev. Henry J. Van Dyke, of Brooklyn, on the morning of the first day of the session. They refer to the recent action of the Old School General Assembly, held in the city of Newark, New Jersey, in May last:

Whereas, The General Assembly of 1864, in its action on the subject of slavery, has fully endorsed "the President's declared policy not to consent to the reorganization of civil government in the seceded States upon any other basis than that of emancipation;" affirming that the said policy is in accordance with the will of God, and that all in our communion are pledged by every earthly and every religious interest to labor unweariedly in their respective spheres for its consummation;

And whereas, The Assembly has virtually exerted its influence in support of that political party which has selected the President for its candidate, and adopted his declared policy as its platform in the approaching Presidential election;

And whereas, In the case of the Rev. Dr. McPheeters, the Assembly did apparently sanction the interference of the secular power with the spiritual affairs of our churches, the enforcement of political test oaths as a qualification for members sitting in our church courts, and the proscription of Christian ministers, against whom there is no charge of heresy or crime, upon the ground that they entertain, or are supposed to entertain, certain political opinions; therefore,

Resolved, That this Synod, while disavowing for itself all intention of entering, directly or indirectly, into the political contests of the day, does solemnly affirm and declare—

1. That according to the Word of God and the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church, the General Assembly has authority "to handle or conclude nothing but that which is ecclesiastical;" that it has no right "to intermeddle with civil affairs which concern the Commonwealth, unless by way of humble petition in cases extraordinary, or by way of advice for satisfaction of conscience, if thereunto required by the civil magistrate;" [Confession of Faith, ch. xxxi, sec. 4.] that its "power is wholly moral or spiritual, and that only ministerial and declarative;" that the limits within which this ministerial and declarative power may be lawfully exercised are clearly defined in ch. xii of our Form of Government; and that all acts and declarations of the Assembly which are contrary to, or aside from, these limits are null and void.

2. That all interference of civil magistrates or military commanders with the spiritual affairs of our churches—whether to destroy or restrict the right of the people to choose their own religious teachers, to define the qualification of members of our church courts, or to prescribe to ministers the doctrine they shall preach or the prayers they shall offer to God—is a violation of the true principles of religious liberty, and an invasion of the prerogatives of Jesus Christ, who alone is head of the church. [See Confession of Faith, ch. xxiii, sec. 3.]

3. That the bond of union, the measure of obligation, and the charter of ecclesiastical rights for all the ministers and members of the Presbyterian Church, is the Word of God as expounded and summed up in our Confession of Faith, Form of Government, Book of Discipline, Catechisms, and Directory for Worship; and that no minister or church member can be lawfully impeached or proscribed, except upon conviction of heresy or crime according to the rules therein provided.

4. That the appropriate business of Christ's ambassadors is to preach the Gospel for the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints in their most holy faith, and that for our ministers to devote themselves unweariedly in their respective spheres to the consummation of the declared policy of any political party, would be unwise, unscriptural, injurious to the best interests of the church and of society, and a dereliction from their divine commission, in the discharge of which they are taught by inspired precept and example to "know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified."

After considerable debate the subject was referred to a Special Committee. The committee were Rev. Drs. Krebs, Imbrie, and Snodgrass; Rev. Mr. Knox and Elders Wilkin, Beard and Hubbell.

Two reports were made—the majority by Rev. Dr. Krebs, the minority by Rev. Mr. Knox, for himself.

THE MAJORITY REPORT.

The preamble of the paper submitted by Mr. Van Dyke not only invokes this Synod improperly to arraign the late General Assembly, and to hold it up to censure and reproach, but it is also an entire misrepresentation of the language, spirit, and intent, of the declarations of that body in regard to slavery, to the attitude and aspect of Divine Providence towards it, and to the relation and duty of the Church thereto at this time; and is also a misrepresentation of the Assembly's decision in the case of the Rev. Dr. McPheeters, and of the grounds thereof as set forth by the Assembly itself; because, in the judgment of this Synod, it was not the intention, and is not the legitimate effect of the General Assembly's action on slavery to determine what policy ought to be pursued by any Administration in the reorganization of civil government in the seceded States, nor to endorse any of the candidates for election to the office of Presidency of the United States, nor to express any approbation nor disapprobation of any of the political parties existing in these States, nor to give any intimation to ministers or church members that they should labor or vote for the success of one party rather than another.

And further, because in the case of Rev. Dr. McPheeters the Assembly, in the judgment of this Synod, gave no sanction whatever to the interference of the secular power with the spiritual affairs of our churches; neither did the Assembly sanction the proscription of Christian ministers against whom there is no charge of heresy or scandal, upon the ground that they entertain, or are supposed to entertain, any political opinions whatever. Furthermore—

Whereas the paper as a whole is calculated to make the impression that the Assembly has departed from the principles of our standards concerning the province of the Church and its courts, relative to civil affairs, to the question of religious liberty, and to the prerogatives of the Christian ministry, which principles are alluded to in the resolutions being proposed by the paper aforesaid; therefore,

Resolved, That while we steadfastly maintain the acknowledged principles of our standards referred to, in the resolutions of the paper, we see no necessity for expounding or re-affirming the same, and that the further consideration of the whole subject be and is hereby indefinitely postponed.

MINORITY REPORT.

Whereas, the preamble of the paper submitted by Mr. Van Dyke is calculated to make the impression that the Assembly has departed from the principle of our standards touching the subjects hereinafter mentioned,

Resolved, 1st. That in the judgment of this Synod it was not the intention and is not the legitimate effect of the General Assembly's action on slavery, to determine what policy ought to be pursued by any Administration in the reorganization of civil government in the seceded States, nor to endorse any of the candidates for election to the office of President of the United States, nor to express any approbation or disapprobation of any of the political parties existing in these States, nor to give any intimation to ministers or church members that they should labor or vote for the success of one party rather than the other.

Resolved, 2d. That in the case of the Rev. Dr. McPheeters, the Assembly, in the judgment of this Synod, gave no sanction whatever to the interference of the secular power with the spiritual affairs of our churches, neither did the Assembly sanction the prosecution of church ministers, against whom there is no charge of heresy or scandal, upon the ground that they entertain, or are supposed to entertain, any political opinions whatever.

Resolved, 3d. That in reference to the subjects embraced in the above resolutions, this Synod believes and does hereby solemnly affirm:

1st. That according to the Word of God, &c. (Here follow the four resolutions submitted by Rev. H. J. Van Dyke.)

After debate, the majority report was adopted.

PROTEST.

Against the action of this Synod in indefinitely postponing the whole subject of the action of the last General Assembly in regard to the political aspects of slavery and the mutual relations of Church and State as involved in the case of the Rev. Dr. McPheeters, the undersigned feel compelled to respectfully protest, and do so protest; because, first, the characterization of the preamble of Mr. Van Dyke's paper, passed by the report containing the above action, is unnecessarily denunciatory, unjust, and injurious; and second, in the judgment of the protestants, in view of the sufferings of some of our churches and ministers from the encroachments of civil or military authorities, or both, upon the divine rights of the Church, it is high time for this Synod, without engaging in any way in the political strifes of the day, now to affirm and declare, I, that, &c., &c., (the resolution of Mr. Van Dyke's paper.)

Signed, A. McClelland, D. C. Niven, D. Beattie, A. Harlow, John C. Cook, John P. Knox, Henry J. Van Dyke, W. B. Lee, F. T. Williams, W. A. Scott.

ANSWER.

In answer to the above protest, the Synod deems it sufficient simply to record its judgment, that in view of the charges against the General Assembly made in the paper proposed to us by Mr. Van Dyke, and now recorded in our minutes and published to the world, it was our duty to characterize them, as in fact they are, a perversion and misrepresentation of the Assembly's action in the premises; and further, the Synod does regard itself as having virtually re-affirmed the general principles referred to, although the Synod did not deem it proper or needful at this time formally to rectify and expound specifically and in the abstract those principles, in the form, and manner, and circumstances proposed by Mr. Van Dyke.

OTHER SYNODICAL, AND PRESBYTERIAL ACTION.

In 1861, the Synod of New York and New Jersey, sitting at Newark, appointed Rev.

Messrs. James P. Wilson, D. D., Wm. Adams, D. D., W. W. Newell, D. D., and Hon. Wm. Pennington, and Hon. Edw. A. Lambert, Elders, to prepare a minute on the condition of the country, which expressed the wantonness and wickedness of the rebellion of the Southern States, and the duty of all Christians and all patriots in the crisis. The report was unanimously adopted and transmitted to the Secretary of State, who thus responded:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, November 27, 1861.

To the Synod of New York and New Jersey:

REVEREND GENTLEMEN: The minute containing your resolutions on the condition of the country, which you directed to be sent to me, has been submitted to the President of the United States.

I am instructed to express to you his great satisfaction with those proceedings, which are distinguished equally by their patriotic sentiments and a purely Christian spirit. It is a just tribute to our system of government that it has enabled the American people to enjoy un molested more of the blessings of Divine Providence which affect the material conditions of human society than any other people ever enjoyed, together with a more absolute degree of religious liberty than, before the institution of that Government, had ever been hoped for among men. The overthrow of the Government might therefore justly be regarded as a calamity; not only to this nation, but a misfortune to mankind. The President is assured of the public virtue and of the public valor, but these are unavailing without the favor of God. The President thanks you for your invocations of that indispensable support, and he earnestly solicits the same invocations from all classes and conditions of men. Believing that those prayers will not be denied by the God of our Fathers, he trusts and expects that the result of the most unhappy attempt at revolution will confirm and strengthen the union of the Republic, and ultimately renew the fraternal affections among its members so essential to a restoration of the public welfare and happiness.

I am, very sincerely, your very humble servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SYNOD OF MISSOURI, AND PRESBYTERY OF ST. LOUIS.

This Synod, at its meeting in November, 1861,

Resolved, That the action of the General Assembly in May last, in relation to the political condition of the country, was unscriptural, unconstitutional, unwise, and unjust; and we therefore solemnly protest against it, and declare it of no binding force whatever on this Synod or upon the members of the Presbyterian Church within our bounds.

But at its meeting in the city of St. Louis, October 13, 1864, this same Synod declared the above resolution to be rescinded, and that the Temporary Clerk be authorized and requested, in the presence of Synod, to write across the face of said resolution, where the same is recorded in the minutes, the words: "Rescinded by order of Synod, October 13, 1864," and sign his name thereto as clerk. Whereupon the Temporary Clerk did as authorized and requested, in the presence of Synod, and signed his name thereto.

The St. Louis Presbytery, at a recent session, adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That the Presbytery of St. Louis, acting from a sense of duty to the churches over which we rule, hereby earnestly entreat and warn all members of churches to abstain from all participation in the present rebellion, and from giving countenance or encouragement thereto by word or deed, as such participation by word or deed involves a sin against God, and exposes those engaged in it to the penalties of ecclesiastical discipline.

THE SYNOD OF KENTUCKY OF 1864, ON THE DELIVERANCE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The General Assembly, at different times, but especially in the years 1818 and 1845, set forth the opinions and views of the Presbyterian Church of the United States on the subject of slavery. By these deliverances this Synod was willing and is still willing to abide, and any further or different utterance on that subject, by the last General Assembly, was, in the judgment of this Synod, unnecessary, unwise, and untimely;—unnecessary, because the former deliverances were sufficiently expressive of the views of the Church, and had been acquiesced in, with great unanimity, for many years; unwise, because the whole country was excited upon the subject of slavery, and the means adopted by the President of the United States for its destruction, in regard to which there was great division of sentiment in the public mind;—and the Assembly could not take any action on the subject without at least seeming to cast its influence with the one or the other political parties which divided the country. Moreover, the minute of the Assembly was peculiarly liable to this interpretation, because in the latter part of it, some of its expressions may be misunderstood, and others may be taken in the sense of a political, if not partisan statement.

The action of the Assembly was untimely, because times of high political excitement are not proper occasions for ecclesiastical courts to express opinions upon the topics which constitute the party issues of the day. The mission of the Church of Christ is spiritual, and any interference with matters purely political is a departure from her duty, and without the pale of her authority, as conferred upon her by her Divine Head.

Whilst expressing these views, the Synod deems it timely again to declare, that it adheres with unbroken purpose to the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, and hereby enjoins on all its members, and upon all under its control and care, to avoid all divisive and schismatical courses, to cultivate the peace of the Church, and to practice great mutual forbearance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1861, (NEW SCHOOL.)

May 16—The body met at Syracuse, New York.

May 20—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Henry Kendall, D. D., Asa D. Smith, D. D., John Jenkins, D. D., Samuel M. Blatchford, and J. Mellen Smith—was adopted, as follows:

Whereas a portion of the people of the United States of America have risen up against the rightful authority of the Government; have instituted what they call the "Confederate States of America," in the name and defence of which they have made war against the United States; have seized the property of the Federal Government; have assailed and overpowered its troops in the discharge of their duty; and are now in armed rebellion against it; the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America cannot forbear to express their amazement at the wickedness of such proceedings, and at the bold advocacy and defence thereof, not only in those States in which ordinances of "secession" have been passed, but in several others; and whereas the General Assembly—in the language of the Synod of New York and Philadelphia, on the occasion of the revolutionary war—"being met at a time when public affairs were so threatening an aspect, and when (unless God in His own sovereign providence speedily prevent it) all the horrors of civil war are to be apprehended, are of opinion that they cannot discharge their duty to the numerous congregations under their care without addressing them at this important crisis; and as a firm belief and habitual recollection of the power and presence of the living God ought at all times to possess the minds of real Christians, so in seasons of public calamity, when the Lord is known by the judgments which He executeth, it would be an ignorance or indifference highly criminal not to look up to Him with reverence, to implore His mercy by humble and fervent prayer, and, if possible, to prevent His vengeance by unfeigned repentance;" therefore,

1. Resolved, That inasmuch as the Presbyterian Church, in her past history, has frequently lifted up her voice against oppression, has shown herself a champion of constitutional liberty as against both despotism and anarchy, throughout the civilized world, we should be recreant to our high trust were we to withhold our earnest protest against all such unlawful and treasonable acts.

2. Resolved, That this assembly and the churches which it represents cherish an undiminished attachment to the great principles of civil and religious freedom on which our national Government is based, under the influence of which our fathers prayed and fought and bled; which issued in the establishment of our independence, and by the preservation of which we believe that the common interests of evangelized religion and civil liberty will be most effectually sustained.

3. Resolved, That inasmuch as we believe, according to our form of government, that "God, the Supreme Lord and King of all the world, hath ordained civil magistrates to be under him over the people for his own glory and the public good, and to this end hath armed them with the power of the sword for the defence and encouragement of them that are good and for the punishment of evil-doers," there is, in the judgment of the Assembly, no blood or treasure too precious to be devoted to the defence and perpetuity of the Government in all its constitutional authority.

4. Resolved, That all those who are endeavoring to uphold the Constitution and maintain the Government of these United States in the exercise of its lawful prerogatives are entitled to the sympathy and support of all Christian and law-abiding citizens.

5. Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors and churches to be instant and fervent in prayer for the President of the United States and all in authority under him, that wisdom and strength may be given them in the discharge of their arduous duties; for the Congress of the United States; for the lieutenant-general commanding the army-in-chief, and all our soldiers, that God may shield them from danger in the hour of peril, and by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the army and navy, renew and sanctify them, so that, whether living or dying, they may be the servants of the Most High.

6. Resolved, That in the countenance which many ministers of the gospel and other professing Christians are now giving to treason and rebellion against the Government we have great occasion to mourn for the injury thus done to the kingdom of the Redeemer; and that though we have nothing to add to our former significant and explicit testimonies on the subject of slavery, we yet recommend our people to pray more fervently than ever for the removal of this evil, and all others, both social and political, which lie at the foundation of our present national difficulties.

7. Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the officers of the General Assembly, be forwarded to His Excellency Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1862, (NEW SCHOOL.)

May 15—The body met at Cincinnati.

May 22—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Nathan S. S. Beman, D. D., LL. D., Rev. William Aikman, Rev. Horace Rood, and Mr. J. Culbertson Reynolds—was adopted, as follows:

Whereas this General Assembly is called, in the providence of God, to hold its deliberations at a time when a wicked and fearful rebellion is threatening to destroy the fair fabric of our Government, to lay waste our beloved country, and to blight and ruin, so far as the present life is concerned, all that is most dear to us as Christians; and whereas, as a branch of the Christian Church, (PRESBYTERIANS) have ever been found loyal and the friends of good order, believing, as they do, that civil government is "ordained of God," that "the magistrate is the minister of God for good," that "he beareth not the sword in vain," and they are therefore "subject" to this ordinance of God, "not only for wrath," or under the influence of fear, but also "for conscience sake," or under the influence of moral and Christian principle; and, whereas the particular Church, whose representatives we are, and in whose behalf we are now and here called to act, have inscribed upon our banner, "THE CONSTITUTIONAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH"—having never favored secession, or nullification, either in Church or State, deem it quite becoming and proper in us to express ourselves, with great Christian sincerity and frankness, on those matters which now agitate our country; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we deem the Government of these United States the most benign that has ever blessed our imperfect world; and, should it be destroyed after its brief career of good, another such in the ordinary course of human events, can hardly be anticipated for a long time to come; and for these reasons we revere and love it as one of the great sources of hope, under God, for a lost world; and it is doubly dear to our hearts because it was procured and established by the toil, and sacrifices, and blood of our fathers.

Resolved, 2. That rebellion against such a Government as ours, and especially by those who have ever enjoyed their full share of its protection, honor, and rich blessings of every name, can have no excuse or palliation, and can be inspired by no other motives than those of ambition and avarice, and can find no parallel, except in the first two great rebellions—that which assailed the throne of heaven directly, and that which peopled our world with miserable apostates.

Resolved, 3. That whatever diversity of sentiment may exist among us respecting international wars, or an appeal to the sword for the settlement of points of honor or interest between independent nations, we are all of one mind on the subject of rebellion, and especially against the best Government which God has yet given to the world; that our vast army now in the field is to be looked upon as one great police force, organized to carry into effect the Constitution and laws which the insurgents, in common with other citizens, have ordained by their own voluntary acts, and which they are bound by honor, and oath, and conscience, to respect and obey; so that the strictest advocates of peace may bear an active part in this deadly struggle for the life of the Government.

Resolved, 4. That while we have been utterly shocked at the deep depravity of the men who have planned and matured this rebellion, and who are now clad in arms, manifested in words and deeds, there is another class found in the loyal States who have excited a still deeper loathing—some in Congress, some high in civil life, and some in the ordinary walks of business—who never utter a manly thought or opinion in favor of the Government but they follow it, by way of comment, with two or three smooth apologies for Southern insurrectionists; presenting the difference between an open and avowed enemy in the field, and a secret and insidious foe in the bosom of our own family.

Resolved, 5. That, in our opinion, this whole insurrectionary movement can be traced to one primordial root, and to one only—AFRICAN SLAVERY, and the love of it, and a determination to make it perpetual; and, while we look upon this war as having one grand end in view—the restoration of the Union—by crushing out the last living and manifested fibre of rebellion, we hold that everything—the institution of slavery, if need be—must be made to bend to this one great purpose; and, while under the influence of humanity and Christian benevolence, we may commiserate the condition of the ruined rebels once in fraternity with ourselves, but now—should the case occur—despoiled of all that makes the world dear to them, we must be at the same time constrained to feel that the retribution has been self-inflicted, and must add, "Fiat justitia ruat cælum."

Resolved, 6. That we have great confidence in ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, and in his Cabinet, and in the commanders of our armies and our navy, and the valiant men of this Republic prosecuting a holy warfare under their banners; and, while we bless God that He has stood by them, and cheered them on in what we trust will ever stand as the darkest days of our country's humiliation, and crowned them with many signal victories, and knowing that ultimate success is with God alone, we will ever pray that the last sad note of anarchy and misrule may soon die away, and the OLD FLAG OF OUR COUNTRY, radiant with stripes and brilliant with stars, may again wave over a great, and undivided, and happy people.

Resolved, 7. That we here, in deep humiliation for our sins and the sins of the nation, and in heartfelt devotion, lay ourselves, with all that we are and have, on the altar of God and our country; and we hesitate not to pledge the churches and Christian people under our care, as ready to join with us in the same fervent sympathies and united prayers, that our rulers in the Cabinet and our commanders in the field and on the waters, and the brave men under their leadership, may take courage under the assurance that "THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA" are with them in heart and hand, in life and effort, in this fearful exciting conflict.

Resolved, finally, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the officers of the General Assembly, be forwarded to His Excellency, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States, accompanied by the following respectful letter:

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, holding its annual session in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, in transmitting the accompanying resolutions, beg leave most respectfully to express to your Excellency, in a more personal manner, the sentiments of our church in reference to yourself and the great issues with which you are called to deal.

It is with no desire to bring a tribute of flattery, when we assure you, honored sir, of the affection and the confidence of our church. Since the day of your inauguration, the thousands of our membership have followed you with unceasing prayer, besiging the throne of Heaven in your behalf. In our great church courts, in our lesser judicatories, in our weekly assemblages in the house of God, at our family altars, in the inner place of prayer, you have been the burden of our hourly petitioning.

When we look at the history of your administration hitherto, and at the wonderful way in which this people have been led under your guidance, we glorify God in you. We give praise, not to man, but to God. In your firmness, your integrity, challenging the admiration of even our enemies, your moderation, your wisdom, the timeliness of your acts exhibited at critical junctures, your paternal words, so eminently fitting the chosen head of a great people, we recognize the hand and the power of God; we devoutly and humbly accept it as from Him, an answer to the innumerable prayers which have gone up from our hearts.

We desire, as a Church, to express to you our reverence, our love, our deep sympathy with you in the greatness of your trust, and in the depth of your personal bereavements; and to pledge you, as in the past, so in all the future, our perpetual remembrance of you before God, and all the support that loyal hearts can offer.

We have given our sons to the army and navy; some of our ministers and many of our church-members have died in hospital and field; we are glad that we gave them, and we exult in that they were true, even to death. We gladly pledge as many more as the cause of our country may demand.

We believe that there is but one path before this people: this gigantic and inexpressibly wicked rebellion must be destroyed; the interests of humanity, the cause of God and his church, demand it at our hands. May God give to you his great support, preserve you, impart to you more than human wisdom, and permit you, ere long, to rejoice in the deliverance of our beloved country in its peace and unity.

REPLY OF THE PRESIDENT.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, June 9, 1862.

REVEREND GENTLEMEN: I have had the honor of receiving your address to the President of the United States, and the proceedings of your venerable body on the subject of the existing insurrection, by which that address was accompanied.

These papers have been submitted to the President. I am instructed to convey to you his most profound and grateful acknowledgements for the fervent assurances of support and sympathy which they contain. For many years hereafter, one of the greatest subjects of felicitation among good men will be the signal success of the Government of the United States in preserving our Federal Union, which is the ark of civil and religious liberty on this continent and throughout the world. All the events of our generation which preceded this attempt at revolution, and all that shall happen after it, will be deemed unimportant in consideration of that one indispensable and invaluable achievement. The men of our generation whose memory will be longest and the most honored will be they who thought the most earnestly, prayed the most fervently, hoped the most confidently, fought the most heroically, and suffered the most patiently in the sacred cause of freedom and humanity. The record of the action of the Presbyterian Church seems to the President worthy of its traditions and its aspirations as an important branch of the Church founded by the Saviour of men.

Commending our yet distracted country to the interposition and guardian care of the Ruler and Judge of Nations, the President will persevere steadily and hopefully in the great work committed to his hands, relying upon the virtue and intelligence of the people of the United States, and the candor and benevolence of all good men.

I have the honor to be, reverend gentlemen, your very obedient servant.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

To GEORGE DUFFIELD, D. D., Moderator; and EDWIN F. HATFIELD, Stated Clerk.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1863, (NEW SCHOOL.)

May 21—The body met in Philadelphia.

May 27—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Rev. Albert Barnes, Thomas H. Skinner, D. D., LL. D., Samuel T. Spear, D. D., Hon. Otis Allen, and Walter S. Griffith—was adopted, as follows:

Whereas a rebellion, most unjust and causeless in its origin, and unholy in its objects, now exists in this country, against the Government established by the wisdom and sacrifices of our fathers, rendering necessary the employment of the armed forces of the nation to suppress it, and involving the land in the horrors of civil war; and

Whereas the distinctly avowed purpose of the leaders of this rebellion is the dissolution of our national Union, the dismemberment of the country, and the establishment of a new Confederacy within the present territorial limits of the United States, based on the system of human slavery as its chief corner-stone; and

Whereas from the relation of the General Assembly to the churches which they represent, and as citizens of the Republic, and in accordance with the uniform action of our church in times of great national peril, it is eminently proper that this General Assembly should give expression to its views, in a matter so vitally affecting the interests of good government, liberty, and religion; and

Whereas on two previous occasions, since the war commenced, the General Assembly has declared its sentiments in regard to this rebellion, and its determination to sustain the Government in this crisis of our national existence; and

Whereas unequivocal and decided as has been our testimony on all previous occasions, and true and devoted as has been the loyalty of our ministers, elders and people, this General Assembly deems it a duty to the church and the country, to utter its deliberate judgment on the same general subject; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That this General Assembly solemnly re-affirms the principles and repeats the declarations of previous General Assemblies of our church, so far as applicable to this subject, and to the present aspect of public affairs.

2. That in explanation of our views, and as a further and solemn expression of the sentiments of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America, in regard to the duty of those whom we represent, and of all the American people at the present time, we now declare,

First, That civil government is ordained of God; and that submission to a lawful government, and to its acts in its proper sphere, is a duty binding on the conscience, and required by all the principles of our religion, as a part of our allegiance to God.

Second, That while there is, in certain respects, a ground of distinction between a Government, considered as referring to the Constitution of a country, and an Administration, considered as referring to the existing agencies through which the principles and provisions of the Constitution are administered; yet the government of a country, to which direct allegiance and loyalty are due at any time, is the administration duly placed in power. Such an administration is the government of a nation; having a right to execute the laws, and to demand the entire, unqualified, and prompt obedience of all who are under its authority; and resistance to such a government is rebellion and treason.

Third, That the present administration of the United States, duly elected under the Constitution, is the government in the land, to which alone, under God, all the citizens of this nation owe allegiance; who, as such, are to be honored and obeyed; whose efforts to defend the government against rebellion are to be sustained; and that all attempts to resist, or set aside, the action of the lawfully constituted authorities of the government, in any way, by speech or action, to oppose, or embarrass, the measures which it may adopt to assert its lawful authority, except in accordance with the forms prescribed by the Constitution, are to be regarded as treason against the nation, as giving aid and comfort to its enemies, and as rebellion against God.

Fourth, That, in the execution of the laws, it is the religious duty of all good citizens, promptly and cheerfully to sustain the Government by every means in their power; to stand by it in its peril; and to afford all needful aid in suppressing insurrection and rebellion, and restoring obedience to lawful authority in every part of the land.

3. That, much as we lament the evils, the sorrows, the sufferings, the desolations, the sad moral influences of war, and its effect on the religion and churches of the land; much as we have suffered in our most tender relations; yet the war, in our view, is to be prosecuted with all the vigor and power of the nation, until peace shall be the result of victory, until rebellion is completely subdued, until the legitimate power and authority of the Government is fully re-established over every part of our territorial domain, and until the flag of the nation shall wave as the emblem of its undisputed sovereignty; and that, to the prosecution and attainment of this object, all the resources of the nation in men and wealth should be solemnly pledged.

4. That the Government of these United States, as provided for by the Constitution, is not only founded upon the great doctrine of human rights, as vested by God in the individual man, but is also expressly declared to be the supreme civil authority in the land, forever excluding the modern doctrine of secession as a civil or political right; that, since the existing rebellion finds no justification in the facts of the case, or the Constitution of the United States, in any law human or divine, the Assembly can regard it only as treason against the nation, and a most offensive sin in the sight of God, justly exposing its authors to the retributive vengeance of earth and Heaven; that this rebellion, in its origin, history, and measures, has been distinguished by those qualities which most sadly evince the depravity of our nature, especially in seeking to establish a new nationality on this continent, based on the perpetual enslavement and oppression of a weak and long-injured race; that the National forces are, in the view of the Assembly, called out, not to urge war against another Government, but to suppress insurrection, preserve the supremacy of law and order, and save the country from anarchy and ruin.

5. That, in such a contest, with such principles and interests at stake, not only affecting the peace, prosperity, and happiness of this our beloved country for all future time, but involving the cause of human liberty throughout the world, loyalty, unreserved and unconditional, to the constitutionally-elected Government of the United States, not as the transient passion of the hour, but as the intelligent and permanent state of the public conscience, rising above all questions of party politics, rebuking and opposing the foul spirit of treason, whenever and in whatever form exhibited, speaking earnest words of truth and soberness alike through the pulpit, the press, and in all the walks of domestic and social life, making devout supplications to God, and giving the most cordial support to those who are providentially intrusted with the enactment and execution of the laws, is not only a sacred Christian obligation, but is indispensable, if we would save the nation, and perpetuate the glorious inheritance that we possess, to future generations.

6. That the system of human bondage, as existing in the slaveholding States, so palpably the root and cause of this whole insurrectionary movement, not only is a violation of the dearest rights of human nature, but is essentially hostile to the letter and spirit of the Christian religion: that the evil character and demoralizing tendencies of this system, so properly described, and justly condemned, by the General Assemblies of our Church, especially from 1818 to the present time, have been placed in the broad light of day by the history of this existing rebellion; that, in the sacrifices and desolations, the cost of treasure and blood caused thereby, the Assembly recognizes the chastening hand of God, applied to the punishment of national sins, especially the sin of slavery; that, in the Proclamation of Emancipation issued by the President as a war-measure, and submitted by him to the considerate judgment of mankind, the Assembly recognizes with devout gratitude that wonderful providence of God, by which military necessities become the instruments of justice, in breaking the yoke of oppression, and causing the oppressed to go free: and further, that the Assembly beseeches Almighty God in His own time to remove the last vestiges of slavery from this country, and give to the nation, preserved, disciplined, and purified, a peace that shall be based on the principles of eternal righteousness.

7. That this General Assembly commends the President of the United States, and the members of his Cabinet, to the care and guidance of the Great Ruler of Nations, praying that they may have that wisdom which is profitable to direct; and, also, that the patriotism and moral sense of the people may give to them all that support and co-operation, which the exigencies of their position and the perils of the nation so urgently demand.

8. That, in the ardor with which so many members of our Churches, and of the churches of all the religious denominations of our land, have gone forth to the defence of our country, placing themselves upon her altars in this struggle for national life, we see an illustration, not only of the principle of patriotism, but of the principles of our holy religion; that, in the readiness with which such vast numbers have, at the call of their country, devoted themselves to its service, we see a demonstration, which promises security to our institutions in all times of future danger: that we tender the expression of our admiration and hearty thanks to all the officers and men of our Army and Navy; that those who have nobly fallen, and those who survive, have secured an imperishable monument in the hearts of their countrymen; and that this Assembly regards all efforts for the physical comfort, or spiritual good, of our heroic defenders, as among the sweetest charities, which gratitude can impose, or grateful hearts can minister.

9. That this General Assembly exhorts all the churches and ministers connected with this branch of the Presbyterian church, and all our countrymen, to stand by their country; to pray for it; to discontinue all forms of complicity with treason; to sustain those who are placed in civil or military authority over them; and to adopt every means, and at any cost, which an enlightened, self-sacrificing patriotism may suggest, as appropriate to the wants of the hour; having on this subject one heart and one mind; waiting hopefully on Providence; patient amid delays; undaunted by reverses; persistent and untiring in effort, until, by the blessing of God, the glorious motto, "ONE COUNTRY, ONE CONSTITUTION, AND ONE DESTINY," shall be enthroned, as the sublime fact of the present, and the more sublime harbinger of the future.

10. That the General Assembly tenders its affectionate condolence and heartfelt sympathy, to the bereaved families of all the heroic men who have fallen in this contest for national life; and especially to the families of the officers and members of our churches, who have poured out their lives on the altar of their country, with the assurance that they will not be forgotten, in their bereavement, by us, or by a grateful people.

11. That a copy of this action, duly authenticated, be transmitted to the President of the United States, by the hands of those members of the Assembly, who are about to visit Washington city; and that this paper be read in all our pulpits.

REPLY OF THE PRESIDENT.

Upon the adjournment of the Assembly, about sixty-five of the members proceeded to Washington city, and presented the resolutions to the PRESIDENT, to whom they were introduced by John C. Smith, D. D., of that city. The Chairman, John A. Foote, of Cleveland, Ohio, read the resolution, when the PRESIDENT responded:

It has been my happiness to receive testimonies of a similar nature, from I believe, all denominations of Christians. They are all loyal, but perhaps not in the same degree, or in the same numbers; but I think they all claim to be loyal. This to me is most gratifying, because from the beginning I saw that the issues of our great struggle depended on the Divine interposition and favor. If we had that, all would be well. The proportions of this rebellion were not for a long time understood. I saw that it involved the greatest difficulties, and would call forth all the powers of the whole country. The end is not yet.

The point made in your paper is well taken as to "the Government" and the "administration" in whose hands are these interests. I fully appreciate its correctness and justice. In my administration I might have committed some errors. It would be, indeed, remarkable if I had not. I have acted according to my best judgment in every case. The views expressed by the Committee accord with my own; and on this principle "the Government" is to be supported though the administration may not in every case wisely act. As a pilot, I have used my best exertions to keep aloft our ship of State, and shall be glad to resign my trust at the appointed time to another pilot more skillful and successful than I may prove. In every case, and at all hazards, the Government must be perpetuated. Relying, as I do, upon the Almighty Power, and encouraged as I am by these resolutions which you have just read, with the support which I receive from Christian men, I shall not hesitate to use all the means at my control to secure the termination of this rebellion, and will hope for success.

I sincerely thank you for this interview, this pleasant mode of presentation, and the General Assembly for their patriotic support in these resolutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1864, (NEW SCHOOL.)

May 19—The body met in Dayton, Ohio.

May 23—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Howard Crosby, D. D., Daniel W. Poor, D. D., Robert W. Patterson, D. D., George W. Simons, and Edward D. Mansfield—was adopted, as follows:

1. Resolved, That this General Assembly heartily reaffirms the principles and renews the declarations of previous General Assemblies, so far as applicable to the present aspect of public affairs.

2. That we recognise clearly the good hand of our God in all the victories of the national arms, whereby the limits of the rebellion have been contracted, and its vitality impaired; and we look humbly and confidently to the same Divine source for further success until the nation shall be vindicated, and peace established on the grave of treason.

3. That we also recognise the same good hand of our God in the disappointments and delays of the war, by which He has made more sure the complete destruction of the vile system of human bondage, and rendered less self-confident and more religious the heart of the nation.

4. That in such recognition and hope we do by no means lose sight of our national and individual sins, which render us so utterly unworthy of the Divine favor, but confess them with penitent hearts, and trust to a covenant God in Christ Jesus, that this unworthiness will not hinder the might of God's grace in behalf of the cause of right and order.

5. That we exhort all our churches to renewed zeal and faithfulness in supplication to God for the deliverance of the land, and prosperity of Christ's kingdom, through the blessings of national peace and fraternity.

6. That we cordially uphold the government with our sympathies and prayers in its energetic efforts for the suppression of this most causeless and cruel rebellion, urge all Christians to refrain from weakening the authority of the Administration by ill-timed complaints and unnecessary criticism, fully believing that in such a crisis all speech and action which tend to difference should be sedulously avoided for the sake of the common weal.

7. That a copy of these resolutions, duly authenticated, be sent to the President of the United States by a special committee.

The pastors of the churches were requested to read the same to their congregations.

The special Committee provided for above, were Thomas Brainerd, D. D., Howard Crosby, D. D., Robert W. Patterson, D. D., Edwin F. Hatfield, D. D., Samuel H. Perkins, and Walter S. Griffith.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, (OLD SCHOOL,) 1862.

In December, a committee of this Church presented to President LINCOLN this address:

*To His Excellency Abraham Lincoln,
President of the United States:*

We visit you, Mr. President, as the representatives of the Reformed Presbyterian, or, as it is frequently termed, "Scotch Covenanter" Church—a Church whose sacrifices and sufferings in the cause of civil and religious liberty are a part of the world's history, and to which we are indebted, no less than to the Puritans, for those inestimable privileges so largely enjoyed in the free States of this Union, and which, true to its high lineage and ancient spirit, does not hold within its pale a single secessionist or sympathizer with rebellion in these United States.

Our church has unanimously declared, by the voice of her highest court, that the world has never seen a conflict in which right was more clearly wholly upon the one side, and wrong upon the other, than in the present struggle of this Government with the slaveholders' rebellion. She has also unanimously declared her determination to assist the Government, by all lawful means in her power, in its conflict with this atrocious conspiracy, until it be utterly overthrown and annihilated. Profoundly impressed with the immense importance of the issues involved in this contest, and with the solemn responsibilities which rest upon the Chief Magistrate in this time of the nation's peril, our brethren have commissioned us to come and address you words of sympathy and encouragement; also, to express to you views which, in their judgment, have an important bearing upon the present condition of affairs in our beloved country, to congratulate you on what has already been accomplished in crushing rebellion, and to exhort you to persevere in the work until it has been finally completed. Entertaining no shadow of doubt as to the entire justice of the cause in which the nation is embarked, we nevertheless consider the war a just judgment of Almighty God for the sin of rejecting his authority and enslaving our fellow-men, and are firmly persuaded that His wrath will not be appeased, and that no permanent peace will be attained, until His authority be recognized and the abomination that maketh desolate utterly extirpated. As an anti-slavery Church of the most radical school, believing slavery to be a heinous and aggravated sin both against God and man, and to be placed in the same category with piracy, murder, adultery, and theft, it is our solemn conviction that God, by His word and providence, is calling the nation to immediate, unconditional, and universal emancipation. We hear His voice in the thunders of war, saying to us, "Let my people go." Nevertheless, we have hailed with delighted satisfaction the several steps which you have taken in the direction of emancipation; especially do we rejoice in your late proclamation declaring your intention to free the slaves in the rebel States on the 1st day of January, 1863—an act which, when carried out, will give the death-blow to rebellion, strike the fetters from millions of bondmen, and secure for its author a place among the wisest of rulers and noblest benefactors of the race.

Permit us, then, Mr. President, most respectfully, yet most earnestly, to urge upon you the importance of enforcing that proclamation to the utmost extent of that power with which you are vested. Let it be placed on the highest grounds, Christian justice and philanthropy; let it be declared to be an act of national repentance for long complicity with the guilt of slavery; permit nothing to tarnish the glory of the act, or rob it of its sublime moral significance and grandeur, and it cannot fail to meet a hearty response in the conscience of the nation, and to secure infinite blessings to our distracted country. Let not the declaration of the immortal Burke be verified in this instance: "Good works are commonly left in a rude and imperfect state, through the lame circumspection with which a timid prudence so frequently enervates beneficence. In doing good we are cold, languid, and sluggish, and of all things afraid of being too much in the right." We urge you by every consideration drawn from the Word of God and the present condition of our bleeding country, not to be moved from the path of duty on which you have so auspiciously entered, either by the threats or blandishments of the enemies of human progress, nor to permit this great act to lose its power through fears of timid friends.

There is another point which we esteem of paramount importance, and to which we wish briefly to call your attention. The Constitution of the United States contains no acknowledgment of the authority of God, of His Christ, or of His law, as contained in the Holy Scriptures. This we deeply deplore as wholly inconsistent with all claims to be considered a Christian nation, or to enjoy the protection and favor of God. The Lord Jesus Christ is above all earthly rulers. He is King of Kings and Lord of Lords. He is the one mediator between God and man, through whom alone either nations or individuals can secure the favor of the Most High. God is saying to us in these judgments: "Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way when His wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that trust in Him. For the nation and kingdom that will not serve Thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall appear to be utterly wasted."

This time appears to us most opportune for calling the nation to a recognition of the name and authority of God; to the claims of Him who will overturn, overturn, and overturn, until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ. We indulge the hope, Mr. President, that you have been called, with your ardent love of liberty, your profound moral convictions manifested in your Sabbath proclamations, and in your frequent declarations of dependence upon Divine Providence, to your present position of honor and influence, to free our beloved country from the curse of slavery, and secure for it the favor of the great Ruler of the universe. Shall we not now set the world an example of a Christian state, governed, not by the principles of mere political expediency, but acting under a sense of accountability to God and obedience to those laws of immutable morality which are binding alike upon nations and individuals.

Praying that you may be directed in your responsible position by Divine wisdom; that God may throw over you the shield of His protection; that we may soon see rebellion crushed, its cause removed, and our land become Immanuel's land, we subscribe ourselves, in behalf of the Reformed Presbyterian Church,

Yours, respectfully,
J. R. W. SLOANE,
A. M. MILLIGAN.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN (OLD SCHOOL) SYNOD, 1864.

At Philadelphia, June 1, the following resolutions offered by Mr. Sloane were unanimously adopted:

ON THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

Whereas the nation is now suffering from those inflictions of the Divine wrath which are the necessary result of its forgetfulness of God and oppression of man; and whereas, in our judgment, love to our country is best manifested not by flattery but by faithful warning and reproofs; and whereas Reformed Presbyterians have from the first existence of this nation predicted the present calamities, as the inevitable consequence of the course which it was pursuing; therefore,

Resolved, That we call this nation to an humble acknowledgment of its sins and a speedy national repentance as the only means of averting present and still greater judgments; to recognise in its Constitution the name and authority of God, the Scriptures as its fundamental law, and Christ as Ruler over the nations.

2. That we demand in the great name of that God, with whom there is no respect of persons, the immediate, unconditional emancipation of all persons held in slavery in the United States; the abolition of all laws making odious distinctions on account of color, and such amendment to the Constitution as will forever prevent involuntary servitude, except for crime, in the United States.

3. That while we cannot, until these demands be met, identify ourselves with the government by oaths of allegiance or any other acts which involve complicity in the guilt of the nation; that, nevertheless, in the present fearful conflict, our entire sympathies are with the North, and that we will exert our influence in all ways consistent with a faithful practical testimony, and with our well-considered and long-established principles, to secure the suppression of rebellion.

4. That we hold in utter abhorrence the present rebellion, as the most impious attempt to establish mischief by law that the world has ever seen; that we express our utter detestation of it, in all its purposes and principles, and will hold no fellowship—political or ecclesiastical—with its aiders and abettors, north or south.

5. That we deprecate the tardiness of the nation in meeting out absolute justice to the colored race, as calculated to provoke Heaven, to protract the war, to intensify our present calamities, and to endanger our very existence as a nation.

6. That in the noble devotion of the colored race to the nation in this day of its calamity, their patient endurance of wrong, their sublime trust in Providence, their insatiable thirst for knowledge, their undaunted heroism and courage on the field of battle, and their forbearance under persecution, we find the refutation of the malignant slanders which have been heaped upon them—another illustration of the great truth, that God has “made of one blood all nations of men,” and the signs of the approaching day in which “Ethiopia shall stretch out her hand to God.”

7. That we have great cause to rejoice, thank God and take courage, that since our last meeting so many efforts have been made both among the people and in Congress, as well as by several ecclesiastical bodies, to effect amendments to the United States Constitution, and that such noble testimonies have been borne in favor of the rights of God and man, in which we clearly see how the testimony of the church has been leavening society, and how, under God, the present civil war is an educator of the people.

8. That we especially notice the late action of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, one of the largest religious denominations in the United States, as particularly significant and encouraging; inasmuch as said Conference has not only resolved so to change the general rule of the discipline as to forbid slaveholding altogether, but has also unanimously passed the following resolutions, viz :

That we will use our efforts to make such a change in the Constitution of our country as shall recognise the being of God, our dependence upon Him for prosperity, and also His word as the foundation of civil law.

That we regard slavery as abhorrent to the principles of our holy religion, humanity and civilization; and that we are decidedly in favor of such an amendment to the Constitution, and such legislation on the part of the States, as shall prohibit slavery or involuntary servitude, except for crime throughout all the States and Territories of the country.

As friends of God and humanity, of Christ and the slave, we owe to them constant and untiring efforts to bring the nation into subjection to the Mediator and the enslaved to freedom; and therefore it is very desirable that the National Mass Convention for effecting amendments to the United States Constitution, to meet in Philadelphia on the 6th of July coming, be attended by all the friends of reformation possible, and that these should advocate in said convention nothing less than what Covenanters have always demanded—that the United States Constitution be unequivocally and fully Christian, scriptural and free.

GENERAL SYNOD OF THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, MAY, 1863.

Whereas there is a God revealed to man in Holy Scripture as the Creator, Preserver, Redeemer, and Moral Governor of the world; and

Whereas nations, as well as individuals, are the creatures of his power, the dependants of his providence, and the subjects of his authority; and

Whereas civil government is an ordinance of God, deriving its ultimate sanctions from his appointment and permission; and

Whereas it is the duty of all men to acknowledge the true God in all the relations they sustain; and

Whereas there is no specific mention of the authority of God in the Federal Constitution of the United States of America, the fundamental law of their existence as a nation; and

Whereas that Constitution and the Government which it organizes and defines are now undergoing the trial of a defensive civil war against a rebellion of a large portion of its own citizens and for its own national existence; and

Whereas the exigencies of the war have brought the authorities of the nation, civil and military, subordinate and supreme, to formal recognitions of the being, providence, and grace of God and of Jesus Christ his Son, to an extent and with a distinctness, such as the country has never witnessed before; therefore Resolved, 1. That in the judgment of this Synod the time is come for the proposal of such amendments to the Federal Constitution, in the way provided by itself, as will supply the omissions above referred to, and secure a distinct recognition of the being and supremacy of the God of Divine revelation.

2. That in the judgment of Synod the amendments or additions to be made to the national Constitution should provide not only for a recognition of the existence and authority of God, but also of the mediatorial supremacy of Jesus Christ his Son, “the Prince of the kings of the earth and the Governor among the nations.”

3. That, as several articles of the Federal Constitution have been and are construed in defence of slavery, Synod do earnestly ask the appropriate authorities to effect such change in them as will remove all ambiguity of phraseology on this subject, and make the Constitution, as its framers designed it to be, and as it really is in spirit, a document on the side of justice and liberty.

4. That Synod will petition the Congress of the United States, at its next meeting, to take measures for proposing and securing the amendments referred to according to the due order.

5. That Synod will transmit a copy of such action as they may themselves adopt, to the several religious bodies of the country, with the respectful request that they will take order on the subject.

6. That a Committee be appointed, composed of a member from each of the Presbyteries in Synod, to whom this matter shall be referred, and whose duty it shall be to correspond with such Christian statesmen and other individuals of influence as they may find disposed to further this dutiful and momentous object.

GENERAL SYNOD OF THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, 1864.

May 18—The body met in Philadelphia, and adopted these resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That it is the duty of the Church of Christ to encourage and sustain the Government of the country in all that they do for the honor of God, the freedom of the enslaved, the mitigation of the inevitable evils of war, and the preservation, at all hazards, of the national life, integrity, and power.

2. That, in the judgment of Synod, the present war is one of defence against a criminal rebellion, commenced and carried on under the auspices of a slaveholding aristocracy, whose success would eventuate in anarchy and the destruction of God's ordinance of civil government among us.

3. That the warmest sympathies of Synod are extended to the soldiers and sailors on the field and on the sea, in the camp and in the hospital, and that the prayer of Synod shall continue to be, that while they are periling and laying down their lives for their country, they may themselves be saved through Him who laid down his life for the world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, MAY, 1863.

Whereas this General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in the United States of America cannot conceal from itself the lamentable truth that the very existence of our Church and nation is endangered by a gigantic rebellion against the rightful authority of the General Government of the United States, which rebellion has plunged the nation into the most dreadful civil war; and

Whereas the church is the light of the world, and cannot withhold her testimony upon great moral and religious questions, and upon measures so deeply affecting the great interests of Christian civilization, without becoming justly chargeable with the sin of hiding her light under a bushel; therefore

Resolved, That loyalty and obedience to the General Government, in the exercise of its legitimate authority, are the imperative Christian duties of every citizen, and that treason and rebellion are not mere political offenses of one section against another, but heinous sins against God and His authority.

2. That the interest of our common Christianity, and the cause of Christian civilization and national freedom throughout the world, impels us to hope and pray God (in whom is all our trust) that this unnatural rebellion may be put down, and the rightful authority of the General Government re-established and maintained.

3. That we deeply sympathize with our fellow-countrymen and brethren who, in the midst of great temptation and sufferings, have stood firm in their devotion to God and their country, and also with those who have been driven, contrary to their judgment and wishes, into the ranks of the rebellion.

4. That in this time of trial and darkness, we re-endorse the preamble and resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Clarksville, Tennessee, on the 24th day of May, 1850, which are as follows:

Whereas, in the opinion of this General Assembly, the preservation of the Union of these States is essential to the civil and religious liberty of the people, and it is regarded as proper and commendable in the Church, and more particularly in the branch we represent (it having had its origin within the limits of the United States of America, and that soon after the blood of our Revolutionary fathers had ceased to flow, in that unequal contest through which they were successfully conducted by the strong arm of Jehovah), to express its devotion, on all suitable occasions, to the Government of their choice: therefore,

Resolved, That this General Assembly look with censure and disapprobation upon attempts, from any quarter, to dissolve the Union, and would regard the success of any such movement as exceedingly hazardous to the cause of religion as well as civil liberty. And this General Assembly would strongly recommend to all Christians to make it a subject of prayer to Almighty God to avert from our beloved country a catastrophe so direful and disastrous.

On the subject of American slavery, your committee submit that we should not view it as if it were about to be introduced, but as already in existence. We do not hesitate to declare that the introduction of slavery was an enormous crime, surpassed by few crimes that have disgraced the history of the world, and that there are at present great evils connected with it, and that we believe will more or less be connected with it while it exists. As to the remedy for these, the greatest and best minds of our country and the world have greatly differed and been much perplexed; therefore, we would recommend to those who, in the providence of God, have been placed in connection with this institution, to continue prayerfully to study the word of God, to determine their duty in regard to their slaves and slavery; and to those who are not thus situated, that they exercise forbearance towards their brethren who are connected with slavery, as the agitation of this subject at the present time in that part of the Church where slavery does not exist, cannot result in any good either to the master or slave. Touching the subject of American slavery as set forth in the memorial before us, your committee are not prepared to make the simple holding of slaves a test of church-membership, as they understand the memorial before them to propose.

Resolved, That we disavow any connection with, or sympathy for, the extreme measures of ultra-abolitionists, whose efforts, as we believe, have been, and are now, aimed at the destruction of our civil government in order to abolish slavery. The committee would say, in conclusion, that the report herein submitted is agreed upon as a compromise measure, to unite the energies of our beloved Church, and harmonize all our interests in the future, and to bind the entire membership of our Church, if possible, in close bonds of Christianity and fellowship.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, 1861.

May 15—The body met at Monmouth, Illinois, and adopted a report and resolutions, from which the subjoined is extracted:

Slaveholding is the great and immediate cause of the present trouble, though seldom thought of as an evil by those who are directly concerned in it. Slavery must be exceedingly flagrant in the sight of the Great Parent and Ruler of men. If it is murder, the blackest of crimes, to violate the image of God estamped on man, what is it to debase and trample on that image, and treat it as a brutal thing? To tear asunder the tender ties of nature and affection—what is it but horrible cruelty? To work a man, and give him no wages, or no sufficient wages, is nothing but robbery and oppression. To forbid the great God to speak to His own creatures, that they may be saved, is bidding defiance to the very heavens. To deprive a people of the ordinance and privileges of marriage, is to keep them in beastly conchenance. It should not be thought that we, in the Free States, have nothing to do with this monstrous iniquity. Have we not countenanced those who practised it? Have we not contributed to extend and establish and fortify it?

In view of these things, we doubt not but the Lord is calling us, in this day, to fasting and mourning and supplication; and we, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That the General Assembly do advise and exhort all the people under her inspection to "search and try their ways, and turn to the Lord. Let them cease to do evil, and learn to do well."—Isaiah, i. 16.

2. That the clerk of the Assembly be directed, and hereby is directed, to forward to the President of the United States a letter in behalf of this Assembly, and assure him of our earnest sympathy, and the sympathy of our people, and our and their readiness to co-operate with him, in his endeavors to maintain the Constitution and the integrity of the nation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, 1862.

May—The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, our country suffers under a desolating civil war, and calamities not often equalled in the history of the world are now endured by our fellow-countrymen; and whereas the ministers of the gospel, as witnesses for Christ and watchmen on the walls of Zion, are bound by their testimony to give the trumpet a certain and distinct sound in order to warn the people of their danger, and direct them in the way of duty: therefore,

Resolved, That we recognize in the defeats and disasters of our forces in the beginning of the conflict a deserved visitation of God's wrath upon us for our complicity in the sin of slavery; and while we have reason to fear further reverses to our arms, yet we feel and hereby express our gratitude to God for the recent victories and advantages obtained over the enemy, and cherish the hope and belief that God will continue his favor until rebellion shall be forever crushed and peace restored.

2. That, believing that, so long as slavery lives, no permanent peace can be enjoyed, we express our highest gratification at the emancipation policy indicated in the President's recent proposition, to aid the slave States in the "abolishment" of slavery. We thank God for the deliverance of the District of Columbia from the national curse and disgrace of slavery, and would hail with pleasure the proclamation of universal liberty; and we trust our worthy President and Congress will pursue the course of emancipation till liberty shall be proclaimed throughout all the land to all the inhabitants thereof.

3. That, believing compromise with wrong to be the rock on which our Union has been in danger of spitting, we warn our fellow-citizens, politicians, and statesmen, that a compromise with rebellion in behalf of slavery will be no less dangerous to the stability of our Government than to the cause of human freedom.

4. That, believing it to be a duty specially incumbent on the Church to let her light shine, and that her ministry are particularly bound in the present perilous crisis of our country's history to declare the counsel of God regarding the sin and crime of slavery, we trust that all the preachers of that gospel which proclaims liberty to the captive of every denomination, will hear and obey God's voice, now calling upon them louder than ever before, to open their mouth in behalf of the dumb. And we would especially urge upon our brethren under our care, to give a clear testimony on this subject, in order to instruct our people and the nation in the great truth that righteousness exalteth a nation, whilst sin is a reproach to any people.

5. That, as we can only succeed by depending entirely on Divine agency, we will call upon the Lord in our trouble, and ask Him to so overrule the present war, inaugurated for the purpose of extending and perpetuating slavery, that it shall issue in its final and complete overthrow; and that we will bear on our spirits continually, the Congress, the army and navy, and pray especially that God would preserve those who have enlisted in the cause of their country from the perils of the camps and the field, and restore them to their families and friends in peace and safety, and prepare those who may have to die in the conflict, for a victory over death and hell, and a triumphant entrance into heaven.

BAPTIST.

MEETING OF THE BAPTISTS AT BROOKLYN, N. Y., MAY 29, 1861.

A. B. Capwell, Esq., presided, and the following officers were appointed:

Vice-Presidents—Hon. George N. Briggs, Rev. G. S. Webb, D. D., Thomas Watson, Esq., A. Hubble, E. q.

Secretaries—Rev. W. H. Shailer, D. D., Rev. J. B. Simmons.

Rev. George C. Baldwin, D. D., opened the proceedings with prayer, after which the Committee, appointed at a preliminary meeting—Rev. Dr. William R. Williams, N. Y., Rev. Dr. Rufus Babcock, N. J., Rev. Dr. E. E. Cummings, New Hampshire, Rev. Dr. Samuel Baker, Rev. J. Hyatt S. Smith, of Pa., Rev. Dr. W. H. Shailer, Maine, and Rev. Dr. S. B. Swain, Mass—presented, through the Chairman, Rev. Dr. Williams, the following report, which was adopted:

The Assembly of Baptists gathered from the various Northern States of the Union would, in the present solemn crisis of our national history, put on record some expression of their judgment as Christians, loving their country, and seeking, in the fear and from the grace of God, its best interests. We are threatened to be rent as a people into two hostile camps; several States of the Union have claimed to release themselves by their own act from the national Constitution and Union, having formed what they designate as a Confederacy. They have seized the national forts, armaments, and ships. Such proceedings on the part of a neighboring community would be held actual war. Yet there has been no precedent such as in modern conflicts inaugurates ordinary hostilities. They have bombarded a national garrison. The General Government at Washington have refused to recognize the right of secession, and have procured alike their own right and their own purpose to occupy the national property and defences now usurped. One of the foremost statesmen in the new movement, and himself the executive officer of the new assumed Confederacy, had declared African slavery the immediate cause of the revolution thus attempted. He has alleged that the old—and, as the North deems it, the only existing Constitution—regarded such slavery as wrong in principle, and that the founders of this Constitution expected the bondage, in some way, and at some time, to vanish. He declares of the new Confederate States that they assume, as their basis, the fundamental erroneousness of such original estimate and expectation on the part of the authors of our land. Accepting not only the propriety, but the perpetuity of such servitude, he places the new government on the alleged inferiority of the negro race, as its corner-stone. He claims for the new Confederacy that it is the first government in all history thus inaugurated on this new truth, as he would call it. He invites the North-western States to enter the Confederacy. But he anticipated the disintegration of the older States; and he declares that in case of these last, admission to the new Confederacy must not be merely by reconstruction, but reorganization and assimilation. In other words, African bondage seems required as the mortar that is to agglutinate, and the rock that is to sustain the re-combined and re-built sovereignty that shall include even these last. Men in high position in the new organization of the South, have proclaimed their intent of seizing the national Capitol, and planting their flag on the seats of Northern State Government. The President of the United States has summoned a large, formidable force to the metropolis of the Union, rallying to the defence of the General Government. Remembering their own character, as the servants of the Prince of Peace, this Assembly would speak fraternal, not heedlessly exasperating strife, but also with a frankness and decision as not indorsing injustice. The Church is a kingdom not of the world. But the men of the Church are not the less bound to recognize and loyally to uphold all rightful secular government.

The powers that be are ordained of God, and the magistracy is by His will to bear the sword not in vain. Christ, in His Messiahship, would not be made a judge or a divider as to the statutes and estates of this earth; but He did not, therefore, abrogate the tribunals of earthly judgment. To Caesar He bade us render Caesar's dues. He cherished and exemplified patriotism when answering to the appeal made to Him in the behalf of that Gentile ruler, as far as one who loved "our" (Jewish) nation. He showed it when weeping as He predicted the coming woes of His own people and of their chief city. The Gospel of Christ, then, sanctions and consecrates true patriotism. Shall the Christians of the North accept the revolution thus to be precipitated upon them, as warranted and necessary? or shall they acquiesce in it as inevitably dismissing the question of its origin in the irrecoverable past? Shall they wait hopefully the verdict of the nations and the sentence of Providence upon the new basis of this extemporized confederacy? Meanwhile shall they submit passively to the predicted disintegration of their own North, pondering wistfully upon the possibilities of their own reorganization to qualify them for admission on the novel platform, and for their initiation into the new principles of this most summary revolution? The memories of the past and the hopes of the future; history and Scripture; the fear of God and regard to the well-being of man; the best interests of their own estranged brethren at the South, and their own rights and duties, not to themselves and their children only, but as the stewards of constitutional liberty in behalf of all other nations, encouraged by our success, as such remotest nations are baffled and misled, as by our failure such nations would necessarily be,—all considerations unite in shutting up the Christians of the North to one course. The following resolutions present correspondingly what, in our judgment, is the due course of our churches and people:

Resolved, That the doctrine of secession is foreign to our Constitution, revolutionary, suicidal,—setting out in anarchy and finding its ultimate issue in despotism.

2. That the National Government deserves our loyal adhesion and unstinted support in its wise, forbearing, and yet firm maintenance of the national unity and life; and that, sore, long, and costly as the war may be, the North has not sought it, and the North does not shun it, if Southern aggressions press it; and that a surrender of the national Union and our ancestral principles would involve sorer evils and longer continuance, and vaster costliness.

3. That the wondrous uprising, in strongest harmony and largest self-sacrifice, of the whole North to assert and vindicate the national unity, is the cause of grateful amazement and devoutest acknowledgment to the God who sways all hearts and orders all events; and that this resurgent patriotism, wisely cherished and directed, may, in God's blessed discipline, correct evils that seemed chronic and irremediable in the national character.

4. That, fearful as is the scourge of war even in the justest cause, we need, as a nation, to humble ourselves before God for the vain-glory, self-confidence, greed, venality, and corruption of manners too manifest in our land; that in its waste of property and life, its invasion of the Sabbath, its demoralization, and its barbarism, we see the evils to which it strongly tends; but that, waged in a good cause and in the fear of God, it may be to a people, as it often in past times has been, a stern but salutary lesson for enduring good. In this struggle, the churches of the North should, by prayer for them, the distribution of Scripture and tract, and the encouragement of devout chaplains, seek the religious culture of their brave soldiers and mariners.

5. That the North seek not, in any sense, the subjugation of the South, or the horrors of a servile war, or the devastation of their homes by reckless and imbruted mercenaries, but believe most firmly the rejection, were it feasible, of the Constitution and Union, would annihilate the best safeguard of Southern peace.

6. That the churches of our denomination be urged to set apart the last Friday in June as a day of solemn humiliation and prayer for the interposition of God's gracious care to hinder or to limit the conflict, to stay the wrath, and to sanctify the trial; and that one hour also in the Friday evening of each week be observed as a season of intercession, privately, for our country during this period of her gloom and peril.

7. That, brought nearer as eternity and judgment are in such times of sharp trial and sudden change, it is the duty of all to redeem the fleeting hour,—the duty of all Christ's people to see that the walls of Zion be built in tribulous times, and to hope only and ever in that wonder-working God who made British missions to India and the South Seas to grow amid the Napoleon wars; who trained, in Serampore missions, Havelock, the Christian warrior, as, two centuries before, He had prepared, in the wars of the Commonwealth, the warrior Baxter, who wrote, as army chaplain, the "Saint's Everlasting Rest," and the Bunyan, who described for all after time, the "Pilgrim's Progress," and "The Holy War."

8. That what was bought at Bunker Hill, Valley Forge, and Yorktown, was not, with our consent, sold at Montgomery; that we dispute the legality of the bargain, and, in the strength of the Lord God of our fathers, shall hope to contest, through this generation, if need be, the feasibility of the transfer.

WEST NEW JERSEY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION, 1861.

Sept. 10.—The body met at Mount Holly.

Sept. 13.—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Samuel Aaron, J. E. Wilton, E. M. Barker, J. M. Carpenter, L. G. Beck, J. H. Lambert, H. J. Mulford, Henry Samuel—was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, all genuine Baptists have ever contended for the principle of civil and religious liberty, (see Acts iv. 19, 20); and whereas that liberty is most fully secured to a people under the form of a Democratic Republic; and whereas our Fathers, with the help of God, by the sacrifice of their fortunes and their lives, established such a Government for these "United States;" and whereas this Government is now assailed by armed traitors in the Slave States, and by their insidious accessories in the Free—the one set robbing and butchering the loyal—the other attempting to delude and divide them, and both co-operating to subvert the Government and annihilate the Union; Therefore,

Resolved, That it is our duty as citizens, as Baptists, and as Christians, to resist such traitors, North and South, by speech, with the pen and with the press; and, if need be, with the implements of death on the field of battle, pledging to the Government and the Constitution, as our fathers did, "Our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

2. If the Rebels raise the issue between slavery and the Constitution, that we will support the Government in sweeping from the country that infamous outrage on the rights of man.

3. That we approve of the President's appointment of a "national fast-day," and earnestly request the churches to observe the day by fasting, and by prayer, and by sermons or addresses, calculated to instruct the people and attach them to our noble institutions, the best ever enjoyed.

WEST NEW JERSEY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION OF 1862.

The President made the following reply to the resolutions of this body passed at its session of 1862 :

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Sept 29, 1862.

REVEREND GENTLEMEN: The resolutions concerning the state of public affairs, which you have transmitted to me, have been communicated to the President of the United States. I am instructed by him to reply that he accepts, with the most sincere and grateful emotions, the pledges they offer of all the magnanimous endeavors and all the vigorous efforts which the emergencies of the country demand. The President desires, also, that you may be well assured that, so far as it belongs to him, no vigor and no perseverance shall be wanting to suppress the existing insurrection, and to preserve and maintain the Union of the States and the integrity of the country. You may further rest assured that the President is looking for a restoration of peace on no other basis than that of the unconditional acquiescence by the people of all the States in the constitutional authority of the Federal Government. Whatever policy shall lead to that result will be pursued; whatever interest shall stand in the way of it, will be disregarded.

The President is, moreover, especially sensible of the wisdom of your counsels in recommending the cultivation by the Government and people of the United States, of a spirit of meekness, humiliation, and dependence on Almighty God, as an indispensable condition for obtaining that Divine aid and favor without which all human power, though directed to the wisest and most benevolent ends, is unavailing and worthless. In a time of public danger like this, a state, especially a republic, as you justly imply, ought to repress and expel all personal ambitions, jealousies, and asperities, and become one united, harmonious, loyal, and devotional people.

Your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WEST NEW JERSEY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION, 1864.

September 13—The body met at Pemberton.

September 14—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Samuel Aaron, A. J. Hires, S. C. Dare, M. Jones, J. Hammett, T. G. Wright, and Joseph H. Kain—was adopted:

Resolved, That Civil Government, whether among Christian or Pagan nations, is an ordinance of God, intended to establish natural justice among men, and that our American Government is the nearest approach to right since the Institutions of Moses.

2. Therefore, that this Southern conspiracy against our nation's life is the greatest political atrocity since Israel rebelled against Jehovah.

3. That as the Lord appointed war, pestilence, and famine to humble and subjugate the Jews, so we believe this nation has His sanction for making the costliest sacrifice of treasure and blood that history records, in order to exterminate, even with fire and sword, those devoted agents of disunion and barbarism, who perseveringly swear that they will destroy the Union or themselves.

4. That the measures thus far employed by our public representatives and sanctioned by the people, have, for the most part, been right and expedient, and that their results do, just now, afford abundant promise and glorious hope of the triumph of liberty, justice and humanity.

5. That any terms of peace short of unqualified submission by the rebels, would be an act of unparalleled treason against the industrial, social, and moral interests of man; and a mockery of the Divine Providence, which has so eminently exalted us in the political heavens, to be the pole-star of liberty to the human race.

NEW JERSEY BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION, 1864.

November 10—The body met in Bordentown.

November 11—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Messrs. Wheelock H. Parmlly, Henry C. Fish, Lewis Smith, J. Perry Hall, Robert F. Young—was accepted, "with remarkable unanimity," as follows:

Resolved, That we recognize, with deepest gratitude, the hand of God in the signal successes which have attended our gallant army and navy during the past year in their efforts to overthrow the present rebellion.

2. That we also recognize the same Divine hand in moving the hearts of the loyal masses of the country to rebuke, with unmistakable emphasis, through the agency of the ballot-box, the atrocious attempts of designing and corrupt men in the North to embarrass the General Government, and lend effectual aid and comfort to armed traitors.

3. That, since the war into which we have been forced is essentially a conflict between freedom and slavery, we see no method of terminating this conflict, and desire no other, than by the utter extinction of the system of slavery throughout all the national territory.

4. That God is calling us as Christians to put forth the most vigorous exertions for the religious welfare of the millions of oppressed people whom the fortunes of this war are bringing within the reach of our evangelical effort.

5. Inasmuch as success can come from God alone, we still feel the need of continued prayer for the further interposition of His power in our behalf, that this cruel conflict may be settled at last in such a manner as to heal all our differences, exalt us in righteousness, and bind all parties and sects into a firm and indissoluble Union.

6. That we heartily approve the President's Proclamation of Thanksgiving on the last Thursday of this month, and recommend that it be observed by all the churches represented in this body.

PHILADELPHIA BAPTIST ASSOCIATION, 1862.

On motion of Rev. J. Wheaton Smith, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That, as members of the Philadelphia Baptist Association, we reaffirm our unswerving loyalty to the Government of these United States.

2. That in the trials through which we are passing as a nation, we recognize the guidance of the Almighty, and see, not dimly, the purpose of his love to purify the fountains of our national life, and develop in righteousness the elements of our national prosperity.

3. That, as Christian citizens of this Republic, it is our bounden duty to renounce all sympathy with sin, to rebuke all complicity with evil, and cherish a simple, cheerful confidence in Him whose omnipotence flowed through a strapping arm and sank into the forehead of the Philistine.

4. That, in pursuance of this spirit, we hail with joy the recent proclamation of our Chief Magistrate, declaring freedom on the first day of January next to the slaves in all the then disloyal States, and say to him, as the people said to Ezra, "Arise, for the matter becometh unto thee; we, also, will be with thee; be of good courage and do it."

5. That, in the name of Liberty, which we love; in the name of Peace, which we would make enduring; in the name of humanity and of religion, whose kindred hopes are blended, we protest against any compromise with rebellion; and for the maintenance of the war on such a basis, whether for a longer or a shorter period, we pledge, in addition to our prayers, our "lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

6. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President and his advisers, with assurances of the honor in which, as Christians, we hold them, and with our solemn entreaty that no one of them will, in the discharge of duties however faithful for his country, neglect the interests of his own personal salvation.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

WASHINGTON, October 18, 1862.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge for the other heads of departments, as well as in my own behalf, the reception of the resolutions which were adopted by your venerable association during the last week, and to assure you of our high appreciation of the personal kindness, patriotic fervor, and religious devotion which pervade their important proceedings. You seem, gentlemen, to have wisely borne in mind, what is too often forgotten, that any government—especially a republican one—cannot be expected to rise above the virtue of the people over whom it presides. Government is always dependent on the support of the nation from whom it derives all its powers and all its forces, and the inspiration which can give it courage, energy, and resolution, can come only from the innermost heart of the country which it is required to lead or to save. It is indeed possible for our Administration in this country to conceive and perfect policies which would be beneficial, but it could not carry them into effect without the public consent; for the first instruction which the statesman derives from experience is, that he must do, in every case, not what he wishes, but what he can.

In reviewing the history of our country, we find many instances in which it is apparent that grave errors have been committed by the Government; but candor will oblige us to own that heretofore the people have always had substantially the very kind of Administration which they at the time desired and preferred. Political, moral, and religious teachers exercise the greatest influence in forming and directing popular sentiments and resolutions. Do you, therefore, gentlemen, persevere in the inculcation of the principles and sentiments which you have expressed in your recent proceedings, and rest assured that, if the national magnanimity shall be found equal to the crisis through which the country is passing, no efforts on the part of the Administration will be spared to bring about a peace without a loss of any part of the national territories, or the sacrifice of any of the constitutional safeguards of civil or religious liberty. I need hardly say that the satisfaction which will attend that result will be immeasurably increased if it shall be found also, that in the operations which shall have produced it, humanity shall have gained new and important advantages. Commending ourselves to your prayers, and to the prayers of all who desire the welfare of our country and of mankind, I tender you the sincere thanks of my associates, with whom I have the honor to remain, gentlemen, your very obedient servant.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

PHILADELPHIA BAPTIST ASSOCIATION, 1864.

October 4—The Body met, and adjourned October 6. During the session, Rev. D. C. Eddy, D. D., presented the report of the Committee on the State of the Country, which was unanimously adopted, as follows:

Whereas, the gigantic rebellion which has, for more than three years been deluging the land with fratricidal blood, and sacrificing the lives of fathers, brothers and sons, remains unsubdued; therefore,

Resolved, That it becomes us, on this as on every proper occasion, to express our unswerving loyalty to the Government, our confidence in the perpetuity of the Union, and our steady adherence to the Constitution and the laws.

2. That while a single armed foe remains on our soil, or a single finger is lifted against the Government of our country, or a single element of treason menaces our national existence, it becomes the duty of all Christians to sink party considerations in a firm, hearty, united support of those whom God in his providence, and the people in the exercise of the elective franchise, have placed at the head of the Government, and who are striving to crush the rebellion and restore the unity of the States.

3. That whatever dire calamity may fall upon the States in rebellion, however severe may be the penalties of war, however bitter and heartrending the condition of besieged cities and desolated communities, they only are responsible who have lifted the sword of anarchy against a righteous Government; and, if they perish, their blood will be upon their own heads.

4. That American slavery (never to be justified by the mild, temporary, patriarchal servitude of the Old Testament), the enormity and brutality of which has few parallels in the history of ages, lies at the basis of the wicked attempt to overthrow the Government, is responsible for the bloodshed and crime of the past three years, and should be held accountable before God and man for every life sacrificed and every drop of blood shed.

5. That no permanent peace, no lasting Union, and no public safety can be expected while slavery exists; and as an outlaw upon civilization, a pirate on human rights, the foe of God and man, alike the enemy of the white and black, it should be utterly, immediately, unconditionally and eternally blotted out, as one of the foulest stains that ever rested upon any civilized land.

6. That the only road to peace, and the only hope of Union, lie in the subjugation of the rebellion, the extermination of its cause, and the overthrow of its supporters; and therefore, until the necessity ceases, we should welcome taxation, sacrifice, and if needful, universal conscription—our motto being "First Christ's, then our country's!"

7. That, in the successes which have crowned the Union army, we recognize the hand of God, who only can "organize victory;" that our most earnest thanksgiving be returned to Him, while we pray that in His infinite grace He will roll on the tide of success, and hasten the day when rebellion shall be conquered, slavery abolished, peace restored, the law vindicated, the national honor maintained, and the spirit of Christ shall unite North and South in one holy brotherhood.

8. That any compromise between the Government and the States in rebellion, which would revoke the proclamation of emancipation, and doom again to bondage a race, one hundred thousand of whose sons, clad in the uniform of the republic, have gone into the carnage of battle, displaying a heroism which has won the admiration of the nation which has never recognized their manhood, and to restore the flag which has never given them the protection of citizenship, would be so infamous as to provoke the scorn and merit the denunciation of the whole Christian world.

9. That in the constitutionally-elected President of the United States, we recognize the representative of Union, Liberty and Peace, and we cannot fail to pray that the Government may be sustained until the supremacy of the Constitution shall be established, and the flag of the Union shall wave in peaceful triumph over every inch of soil now polluted by war and cursed by treason.

10. That we appeal, away from every human aim, to the God of battles, and solemnly and unitedly invoke his gracious aid, praying "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered; let them also that hate him flee before him. As smoke is driven away, so drive them away; as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish at the presence of God."

The Moderator and Clerk were instructed to convey a copy of the report to the Secretary of State of the United States, and also the Governor of Pennsylvania.

PENNSYLVANIA BAPTIST CONVENTION, 1862.

November 25—The body met at Harrisburg. November 26—Rev. Dr. Loomis, Rev. S. G. Chace, and Rev. Dr. Jeffery were appointed a Committee on the State of the Country, and, same day, reported these resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this Convention, representing 40,000 of the citizens of Pennsylvania, mindful in the present national crisis of our solemn duties to our country and our God, hereby declare our profound conviction of the intimate relation there is between the cause of human liberty and the cause of pure religion, and also our set purpose as citizens, as Christians, and as Christian ministers, to employ our whole influence in supporting the supremacy of our National Constitution against all enemies whatsoever.

2. That as the institution of Slavery stands before the world as the confessed feeding source of the present mighty and wicked Rebellion against our National Constitution, we most heartily approve of the President's Proclamation of Emancipation, without modification in substance, and without change of time in its execution.

3. That a copy of these resolutions, duly authenticated, be forwarded to the President of the United States.

PENNSYLVANIA BAPTIST CONVENTION, 1863.

October 27—The body met at Salem, Westmoreland county. Same day, Messrs. Mirick, Chace, McNeill, J. W. Smith, Wilder, and Cramer were appointed a Committee on the State of the Country.

October 28—They reported resolutions, which were amended so as to read as follows, and were adopted:

Whereas, The history of Baptists is interwoven with the history and triumphs of civil and religious liberty; and

Whereas, Our national Government grew out of Baptist polity, exemplified by men of whom Roger Williams was the type at the North, and a little Baptist church near the residence of Thomas Jefferson, from whom he declared he obtained his first ideas of Republican Government, was the type at the South:

Resolved, That we should be derelict to our principles as Baptists, and unworthy sons of worthy sires, if, in this crisis in our existence, we withheld our support, influence, and sympathy from our Government.

2. That it is our duty, both as citizens and Christians, to speak boldly our sentiments with regard to the causes of the existing rebellion, that ministers should speak boldly on the subject, and that those who take offence at such utterances are unworthy of a place in the Christian church.

3. That we, the members of this Convention, as patriots, as Baptists, and as Christians, do express our unequalled support of our National and State Governments, in their efforts to suppress the present rebellion.

4. That we have occasion for gratitude, that not only the full apostolic proportion of eleven-twelfths of the Christian ministry among us are truly loyal Government supporters, but that the mass of the piety of our churches and the intelligence of our country occupy the same position.

5. That the recent victories at the ballot-box should be accepted with thanksgiving to God, as exhibiting the loyalty of the people, and as an evidence of the continued blessing of God on us as a nation.

6. That in the President's Proclamation of Emancipation, made valid by the exigency which called it forth, and in his recent declaration to abide by it, we see the progress of Christ's kingdom, which will proclaim liberty to all the earth.

7. That we urge the churches throughout the Commonwealth to observe the last Thursday in November next, according to the recommendation of the President, as a day of public Thanksgiving to God.

Same day—This resolution, offered by Rev. J. Wheaton Smith, was adopted:

Whereas, Rev. Joseph Smith, an enrolled delegate to this body, has declared, in our hearing, his belief that the Gospel has no balm for our beloved and bleeding country, and that, in his public ministrations, he finds no place for allusions to our national griefs; therefore,

Resolved, That we commend our brother to a better reading of his Master's message, and to broader views of pulpit ministration.

OHIO BAPTIST CONVENTION, 1862.

October—The body met, and passed these resolutions, prepared by Rev. Dr. M. Stone:

Whereas, The powers that be are ordained of God, and he that resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, and is threatened with damnation; therefore be it

Resolved, That it is our right and duty, as a body of Christian citizens, in these times of rebellion against our beneficent Government, to tender our hearty sympathy and support to those who are intrusted with it.

2. That we will accord a cheerful and earnest support to our rulers and our armies in their endeavors to crush the wicked rebellion, until that object shall be accomplished, and peace and order restored; and that we will offer up our prayers and supplications daily to the Sovereign Disposer of events for his interposition in this behalf.

3. That since the present terrible civil war was begun by our enemies without any just cause or provocation, for the purpose of extending, strengthening, and perpetuating the wicked institution of slavery, against the moral sense of the civilized world, and though in the beginning we had no intention of interfering with the institutions of the rebellious States, yet the progress of the war clearly indicates the purpose of God to be the summary extinction of slavery, therefore we approve the late proclamation of liberty of our President, and we will sustain him in carrying out that proclamation till our beloved country shall be purged of the accursed blot, both the cause of the war and the chief means in our enemy's hands of carrying it on, and will stand by our country in the adoption of such further measures as may be necessary to put an end to this great rebellion.

NEW YORK BAPTIST CONVENTION, 1862.

October 7—The body met in Ithaca, and unanimously adopted the following:

Whereas, The civil war which is in progress in our country at our last annual meeting is still in existence, threatening the destruction of our Government, with all the precious interests it involves; therefore,

Resolved, That, as a religious body, we deem it our duty to cherish and manifest the deepest sympathy for the preservation and perpetuity of a Government which protects us in the great work of Christian civilization.

2. That, in our opinion, the history of civil governments furnishes no example of more audacious wickedness than is exhibited by the rebellion which has been inaugurated against the free government framed by our fathers, and so eminently in harmony with the conscious and obvious rights of man.

3. That while we see, with the profoundest sorrow, thousands of husbands, fathers, brothers, and sons falling on the battle-field, considering the interests to be preserved and transmitted to future generations, we cannot regard the sacrifice of treasure and of life too much for the object to be secured.

4. That as human slavery in the Southern portion of our country is, in our judgment, the procuring cause of the rebellion now raging among us, having been proclaimed as the corner-stone of the rebellion and as the institution for which they are fighting, as Christian men and citizens we fully and heartily endorse the recent proclamation of the President of the United States, declaring forever free all slaves in the rebel States on the 1st of January, 1863.

5. That the spirit of the age, the safety of the country, and the laws of God require that among the results of the present bloody war shall be found the entire removal of that relic of barbarism, that bane and shame of the nation, American slavery, and that the banner of freedom float triumphantly and truthfully over all the land.

6. That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be signed by the officers of the Convention, and transmitted to the President of the United States.

AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION, 1863.

May—The body met in Cleveland, and adopted the following paper, reported from the Committee by Rev. Dr. Dowling:

Whereas, The officers and members of the American Baptist Missionary Union, at their last annual meeting in May, 1862, unanimously adopted a series of resolutions, characterizing "the war now waged by the national Government to put down the unprovoked and wicked rebellion that has risen against it, and to establish anew the reign of order and of law, as a most righteous and holy one, sanctioned alike by God and all right-thinking men;" and also expressive of their conviction that "the principal cause and origin of this attempt to destroy the Government has been the institution of slavery; and that a safe, solid, and lasting peace cannot be expected short of its complete overthrow;" therefore,

Resolved, That the developments of the year since elapsed, in connection with this attempt to destroy the best Government on earth, have tended only to deepen our conviction of the truth of the sentiments which we then expressed, and which we now and here solemnly reiterate and reaffirm.

2. That the authors, aiders, and abettors of this slaveholders' rebellion, in their desperate efforts to nationalize the institution of slavery and to extend its despotic sway throughout the land, have themselves inflicted on that institution a series of most terrible, and fatal, and suicidal blows, from which, we believe, it can never recover, and they have themselves thus fixed its destiny and hastened its doom; and that for thus overruling what appeared at first to be a terrible national calamity, to the production of results so unexpected and glorious, our gratitude and adoration are due to that wonder-working God who still "maketh the wrath of man to praise Him, while the remainder of wrath He restrains."—Psalm lxxvi. 10.

3. That in the recent acts of Congress, abolishing slavery forever in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and in the noble proclamation of the President of the United States, declaring freedom to the slave in States in rebellion, we see cause for congratulation and joy, and we think we behold the dawn of that glorious day when, as in Israel's ancient jubilee, "liberty shall be proclaimed throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof."—Leviticus xxv. 10.

4. That as American Christians we rejoice in the growing sympathy of the enlightened portion of our Christian brethren in Great Britain and other European nations with the Government and people of the United States in this righteous war, and that while we cordially thank our friends across the water for all expressions of their confidence and approval, we embrace this opportunity of assuring them that, within our judgment, the United States possesses within herself the means, the men, and the courage necessary for the suppression of this rebellion, and that while we ask no assistance from other nations, we will brook no intervention or interference with our national affairs while engaged in this arduous struggle, which we believe will soon be completely successful in utterly suppressing and subduing this rebellion.

5. That we hereby pledge ourselves as ministers, and as Christians and patriots, to sustain the President of the United States and his associates in the administration by our prayers, our influence, and our personal sacrifices, till this rebellion shall be subdued, and peace, upon the basis of justice, freedom, and Union, shall be again restored.

LUTHERAN.

GENERAL SYNOD OF 1862.

May 1—This body met in Lancaster, Pa.

May 6—The Committee on the State of the Country, through the Chairman, submitted this Minute, which was taken up seriatim, discussed, and adopted. The Committee were: W. A. Passavant, C. P. Krauth, H. H. Vandyke, E. W. Hunter, G. F. Stelling, B. C. Suesseroft, F. A. Muhlenberg, B. Pope, D. Sell, H. Eggers, C. Starlzman, J. G. Morris, G. A. Lintner, S. Philson, W. H. Harrison, A. R. Howbert, J. A. Kunkelman, S. W. Harkey, W. G. Harter, H. Wells, A. M. Geiger, A. Hüler:

Whereas our beloved country, after having long been favored with a degree of political and religious freedom, security and prosperity, unexampled in the history of the world, now finds itself involved in a bloody war to suppress an armed rebellion against its lawfully constituted Government; and whereas the Word of God, which is the sole rule of our faith and practice, requires loyal subjection to "the powers that be," because they are ordained of God, to be a terror to evil-doers and a praise to those who do well, and at the same time declares, that they who "resist the power" shall receive to themselves condemnation; and whereas we, the representatives of the Evangelical Lutheran Synods of the United States, connected with the General Synod, assembled in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, recognize it as our duty to give public expression to our convictions of truth on this subject, and in every proper way to co-operate with our fellow-citizens in sustaining the great interests of law and authority, of liberty and righteousness; be it therefore

Resolved, That it is the deliberate judgment of this Synod, that the rebellion against the constitutional Government of this land is most wicked in its inception, unjustifiable in its cause, unnatural in its character, inhuman in its prosecution, oppressive in its aims, and destructive in its results to the highest interests of morality and religion.

2d. That, in the suppression of this rebellion and in the maintenance of the Constitution and the Union by the sword, we recognize an unavoidable necessity and a sacred duty, which the Government owes to the nation and to the world, and that, therefore, we call upon all our people to lift up holy hands in prayer to the God of battles, without personal wrath against the evil doers on the one hand, and without doubting the righteousness of our cause on the other, that He would give wisdom to the President and his counsellers, and success to the army and navy, that our beloved land may speedily be delivered from treason and anarchy.

3d. That while we regard this unhappy war as a righteous judgment of God, visited upon us because of the individual and national sins, of which we have been guilty, we nevertheless regard this rebellion as more immediately the natural result of the continuance and spread of domestic slavery in our land, and therefore hail with unmingled joy the proposition of our Chief Magistrate, which has received the sanction of Congress, to extend aid from the General Government to any State in which slavery exists, which shall deem fit to initiate a system of constitutional emancipation.

4th. That we deeply sympathize with all loyal citizens and Christian patriots in the rebellious portions of our country, and we cordially invite their co-operation in offering united supplications at a Throne of Grace, that God would restore peace to our distracted country, re-establish fraternal relations between all the States, and make our land in all time to come, the asylum of the oppressed, and the permanent abode of liberty and religion.

5th. That our devout thanks are due to Almighty God for the success which has crowned our arms, and while we praise and magnify His name for the help and succor He has graciously afforded our land and naval forces, in enabling them to overcome our enemies, we regard these tokens of His divine favor as cheering indications of the final triumph of our cause.

These resolutions were presented to President LINCOLN by a Committee, consisting of Drs. Sternberg, Lintner, Pohlman, and Stork, and H. H. Vandyke. The Chairman thus addressed him:

MR. PRESIDENT: We have the honor, as a committee of the General Synod of the Lutheran Church in the United States, to present to your Excellency a copy of the preamble and resolutions, in reference to the state of the country, adopted by that body at its late session in the city of Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

We are further charged to assure you that our fervent prayers shall ascend to the God of nations, that Divine guidance and support may be vouchsafed to you in the trying and responsible position to which a benignant Providence has called you.

With your permission the Rev. Dr. Pohlman, of Albany, New York, will briefly express to you the sentiments which animated the committee and the church they represent in view of the present crisis in our national affairs.

The Rev. Dr. Pohlman, of Albany, New York, in his speech, alluded to the fact that the late session of the General Synod of the Lutheran Church at Lancaster was the first that had been held since the troubles in our country commenced; that the General Synod represents twenty-six district synods, scattered over the Middle, Western, and Southern States, from twenty-one of which delegates were in attendance; that from the States in rebellion no delegates were present, except one from Tennessee, who had, in praying for the President, avoided arrest only in consequence of the fact that he conducted divine service in the German language, the vernacular of many in the Lutheran Church. He further expressed his deep conviction that we were greatly indebted for the degree of success that has crowned the efforts of the Government in quelling the rebellion to the prayers of Christians, and concluded by invoking the Divine benediction to rest on the President and on our beloved country.

REPLY OF THE PRESIDENT.

GENTLEMEN: I welcome here the representatives of the Evangelical Lutherans of the United States. I accept with gratitude their assurances of the sympathy and support of that enlightened, influential, and loyal class of my fellow-citizens in an important crisis, which involves, in my judgment, not only the civil and religious liberties of our own dear land, but in a large degree the civil and religious liberties of mankind in many countries and through many ages. You well know, gentlemen, and the world knows how reluctantly I accepted this issue of battle forced upon me, on my advent to this place, by the internal enemies of our country. You all know, the world knows the forces and the resources the public agents have brought into employment to sustain a Government against which there has been brought not one complaint of real injury committed against society at home or abroad. You all may recollect that in taking up the sword thus forced into our hands, this Government appealed to the prayers of the pious and the good, and declared that it placed its whole dependence upon the favor of God. I now humbly and reverently, in your presence, reiterate the acknowledgment of that dependence, not doubting that, if it shall please the Divine Being who determines the destinies of nations, that this shall remain a united people, they will, humbly seeking the Divine guidance, make their prolonged national existence a source of new benefits to themselves and their successors, and to all classes and conditions of mankind.

The following resolutions were also adopted:

Resolved, That this Synod cannot but express its most decided disapprobation of the course of those Synods and ministers, heretofore connected with this body, in the open sympathy and active co-operation which they have given to the cause of treason and insurrection.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our people in the Southern States, who, maintaining their proper Christian loyalty, have in consequence been compelled to suffer persecution and wrong, and we hail with pleasure the near approach of their deliverance and restoration to our Christian and ecclesiastical fellowship.

LUTHERAN GENERAL SYNOD OF 1864.

May 5—The body met in York, Pennsylvania.

May 11—The Committee on the State of the Country—consisting of W. A. Passavant, M. L. Stoever, A. Wetzel, S. Sentman, S. Sechris, N. W. Lilly, G. A. Wenzel, J. Getty, S. L. Endress, S. Yingling, F. Gebhart, D. Summers, S. Sayford, J. K. Bloom, J. Strayer, J. T. Williams, H. M. Brewer, D. J. Hauer, C. F. Heyer, T. W. Sargent, W. Waltman, G. Schmucker, J. I. Burrell, P. Wieting—presented this Minute, which was taken up seriatim, discussed, and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That having assembled a second time, during the prevalence of civil war in our land, this Synod cannot separate, without solemnly re-affirming the declarations, adopted at our last Convention, in reference to the originating cause of the rebellion, the necessity of its forcible suppression, the righteousness of the war which is waged by the Government of the United States for the maintenance of the national life, and the consequent duty of every Christian to support it by the whole weight of his influence, his prayers and his efforts.

Resolved, That we acknowledge with profound gratitude to Almighty God, the various and important successes which have thus far crowned our arms; the merciful interposition of Providence in delivering us from the invasions of the enemy, and in protecting our homes, our churches, and our institutions from the desolations of war; and the cheering progress which has been made by the Government and the nation, in the recognition of the laws of God and the rights of man, in the measures which have been adopted for the suppression of the rebellion.

Resolved, That recognizing the sufferings and calamities of war, as the righteous judgment of a just God, visited upon us for our transgressions, we call upon our pastors and churches to unite with us in the confession of our many and grievous individual and national sins, and in fervent supplications for the Divine forgiveness, that as a people we may break off sins by righteousness, and do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God.

Resolved, That as persistent efforts are making among us, by professedly Christian writers, to prove from the Holy Scriptures the divine institution of American slavery—the principal cause of this wicked rebellion—we, the delegates of the General Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in the United States, hereby express our unqualified condemnation of such a course, which claims the sanction of the merciful God and Father of us all for a system of human oppression, which exists only by violence, under cover of iniquitous laws.

On the last resolution the yeas and nays were called, and were:

CONGREGATIONAL.

GENERAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, NEW JERSEY, AND PENNSYLVANIA, 1864.

The General Association of the Congregational Ministers and Churches of New York has connected with it about twenty churches in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. At the meeting in September, Rev. Dr. Thompson, from the Committee on the State of the Country, reported a set of resolutions, which were adopted unanimously by a rising vote, given with much enthusiasm, and Drs. Thompson and Budington were appointed a committee to lay them before the President of the United States. Rev. H. G. Ludlow led in prayer of thanksgiving for the unanimity and spirit evinced. The resolutions are as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ON THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

1. That the signal victories which have crowned our arms, following so close upon a season of darkness and humiliation, call for present gratitude to Almighty God, who hath regarded the confessions and supplications of His people, and in the midst of righteous judgments hath remembered mercy.

2. That amid the rejoicings of victory which kindle our devotions and give tone to our praises, still having in remembrance the sins that have brought upon the nation the sufferings and sorrows of war, we will not cease to watch and to labor against the reviving of these iniquities with the prospect of peace, and will pray that this overflowing scourge may sweep them utterly away.

3. That, as the momentous issues of this long and eadly contest are approaching their solution in a combined struggle in the field and at the polls, we will sustain with our votes the brave and noble men who are defending our liberties with their lives, and will animate our fellow-citizens, by every consideration of religious hope and duty, of devotion to country and to liberty, to make the decision of the people on the 8th of November next final and fatal to the hopes of traitors in arms and conspirators in political council.

4. That our hopes for the preservation of our liberties a nation, and for the complete emancipation of the African race in the South, depend, under God, upon sustaining the Government in upholding the integrity of the Union, through all the trials and doubts and disasters of the war, and in that policy which looks to "the abandonment of slavery" as the condition of permanent union and peace.

5. That, while we solemnly pledge ourselves before God to fill up, in our measure, that which is behind of suffering and of sacrifice for the redemption of the nation, and with unfaltering purpose to sustain the Government in subjugating the rebellion, we will pray day by day for the coming of peace, untarnished by concession to treason or by compromise with wrong and established injustice, in liberty and unity forever.

CONGREGATIONAL CONFERENCE OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1864.

September 13—The conference met at Fall River.

September 14—The report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Andrew L. Stone, D. D., Rev. Joshua W. Wellman, and Rev. James H. Merrill—was unanimously adopted as follows:

Resolved, That without one feeling either of despondency or of impatience, we watch the progress of the armies of the Union in putting down the most criminal rebellion the world ever saw; without despondency, for we believe God is on our side, and will give us in due time full and crowning success, and without impatience, for we have been instructed to interpret hopefully these divine delays, and have seen the issue ever widening and embracing more and more radical and precious revolutions and deliveries.

Resolved, That there can be no effectual re-establishment of the national authority by any negotiation which confesses the inability of the Government to subdue rebellion by force of arms, and proposes terms of peace to rebels still flying the flag of defiance.

Resolved, That the chief hope of rebellion is in the sympathy and distraction of a divided North, and that the surest and shortest way to peace is not to recall our armies and to relax our grasp upon the enemy, but to present a united loyal front, and an unconquerable determination to prosecute the war till the power of the Government meets no longer with armed resistance.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the recent victories won by our arms on the land and on the sea, as at once revealing the skill of our commanders, and the valor and endurance of our soldiers and sailors, and exhibiting evidence of God's gracious purpose to guide our marches and to give final victory to our cause.

Resolved, That the docility and industry, the discipline and heroism of the thousands of emancipated slaves, whether in scenes of peaceful labor or wearing the uniform of the national soldier, assert their claim to all the elements of a noble manhood, and the increased respect and confidence of all the friends of their race; and that we are moved to regard them with a more tender sympathy, to make them a subject of special prayer, and to do for them whatever is in our power.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the wide blossoming and harvesting of that public charity, by which such streams of treasure and so many products of industry have been contributed to the comfort and relief of our soldiers in the camp, the prison-house, the hospital, and the field; and in the personal labors of so many Christian men and women in bearing those material comforts to the beloved objects, and leading so many souls to Christ.

Resolved, That we believe it is the duty of Christian ministers to set forth by some appropriate public teaching the importance of the great principles at hazard in the impending and progressive political struggle, which is to issue in the choice of our national administration in such an eventful crisis of our national life.

CONFERENCE OF MAINE, 1864.

June 21—The body met in Searsport.

Same day—The Committee on the State of the Country—Rev. Wooster Parker, Rev. Alfred E. Ives, Rev. Henry F. Harding, Rev. Joseph Smith, and Bro. Eben. Steele—made this Report, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in the terrible visitation of domestic war, we recognize the rod of God's chastisement for our manifold sins; and in its fearful and prolonged evils, a solemn admonition to humble ourselves under his mighty hand—to seek His mercy, and to rely on Divine help for a happy issue of our national trouble.

2. That with devout gratitude we recognize God's hand in so ordering the course of events as to lead us to hope, with increasing confidence, that slavery will be utterly annihilated.

3. That we re-affirm our confidence in the general policy of the National Administration, and more than ever feel it our duty to give the government a cordial and earnest support in thoroughly suppressing the rebellion, and restoring the Union on the basis of liberty.

4. That as slavery has so deeply corrupted and dishonored our Christianity, and imperiled the life of the nation, the time has now fully come when Christian patriotism and fidelity to the gospel demand that it should be allowed no toleration, no shield or lurking place in any Christian church.

5. That in common with our noblest patriots and purest statesmen, we feel it our duty to lend our earnest and utmost influence to secure such a judgment of the people, and such an amendment of the Constitution, as shall extinguish and prohibit slavery in the land forever.

6. That the care of the Freedmen—a class so long and deeply wronged—so numerous, so poor, so ignorant, and yet so loyal; so anxious for education and elevation, and so capable of becoming good citizens and important co-laborers in the kingdom of Christ, call for the benevolent action of Christians and philanthropists of this land with unsurpassed urgency and promise of good.

7. That we recognize with grateful admiration the patriotic self-sacrifice and heroic valor of our fellow-citizens and brethren who in the army and navy are struggling for our nationality, and for all the precious interests involved in it; that we deeply sympathize with them in their privations and sufferings, and with their often bereaved friends and kindred; that we bless God for the wonderful work of His grace among them, and for the succor and salvation the gospel has brought them; that we pledge ourselves to stand by them for the war, by our labors, and contributions, and prayers, doing what we can alike for their temporal and spiritual well-being.

Similar resolutions were passed by all the State Congregational Bodies. There is no Central Organization to represent the church.

REPLY OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN TO THE RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL CONVENTION OF THE CONGREGATIONALISTS OF VERMONT.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, July 11, 1862.

To Rev. CLARK E. FERRIN, Moderator, &c.:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your note of the 23d of June, accompanied by a copy of resolutions which were unanimously adopted by the General Convention of Congregational ministers and churches recently assembled at Norwich. In compliance with your request, these resolutions have been submitted to the President of the United States.

I am instructed to express his cordial thanks for the assurance of confidence and support thus tendered to him by a body so deservedly respected and widely influential as the Congregational church of Vermont.

The President is deeply impressed by the fervent and hopeful patriotism and benevolence which pervade the resolutions. It is the Union and the Constitution of this country which are at stake in the present unhappy strife; but that Union is not a mere stringent political band; nor is that Constitution a lifeless or spiritless political body. The Union is a guarantee of perpetual peace and prosperity to the American people, and the Constitution is the ark of civil and religious liberty for all classes and conditions of men.

Who that carefully reads the history of the nations for the period that this republic has existed under this Constitution and this Union can fail to see and appreciate the influence it has exerted in ameliorating the condition of mankind? Who that justly appreciates that influence will undertake to foretell the misfortunes and despondency which must occur on every continent should this republic desist all at once from its auspicious career, and be resolved into a confused medley of small, discordant, and contentious States? The duty of the christian coincides with that of the patriot, and the duty of the priest with that of the soldier, in averting so sad and fearful a consummation.

Be pleased, sir, to express these sentiments of the President to the reverend gentlemen in whose behalf you have addressed me, together with assurances of profound respect, with which I have the honor to be their humble servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

REPLY OF THE PRESIDENT TO THE RESOLUTIONS OF THE CONGREGATIONAL WELSH ASSOCIATION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, October 6, 1862.

To the Congregational Welsh Association of Pennsylvania:

REVEREND GENTLEMEN: I have had the honor to receive the resolutions which you have adopted; and, in compliance with your request, I have submitted them to the consideration of the President of the United States.

The President entertains a lively gratitude for the assurances you have given him of your loyalty to the United States, and your solicitude for the safety of our free institutions, the confidence you have reposed in him, and your sympathy with him in the discharge of responsibilities which have devolved upon the Government. The President directs me to assure you that whenever the Constitution of the United States leads him in that path, he will move as steadily as shall be possible, rejoicing with yourselves whenever it opens the way to an amelioration of the condition of any portion of our fellow-men, while the country is escaping from the dangers of revolution.

The President is deeply touched by your sympathies with those of our fellow-citizens who suffer captivity or disease, and the grief with which you lament those who fall in defence of the country and humanity; and he invokes the prayers of all devotional men that these precious sufferings may not be altogether lost, but may be overruled by our heavenly Father to the advancement of peace on earth and good will to all men.

I have the honor to be, reverend gentlemen, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

CONGREGATIONAL WELSH ASSOCIATION OF PENNSYLVANIA, 1864.

October—The Association met in Pittsburg and Brady's Bend, and passed these resolutions:

1. That we are highly grieved by the continuance of the Rebellion against our Government, and the inhuman treatment of our gallant soldiers by the enemy, into whose hands they unfortunately fell as prisoners of war—a treatment which is without any model for its cruelty in all history of war.

2. That we acknowledge the goodness of the Most High in the great success that has followed the arms of our army and navy in their contests with the enemy; we feel that the Lord hath invested them with unusual energy and courage, and that we shall look to Him for the same success in the future.

3. That we feel grateful to the Almighty for His patronage to the President of our country in protecting his person, and most of all for the wisdom and discretion with which he hath been pleased to invest him, and also for prospering his measures to such an extent.

4. That we humbly request his Excellency, the President, to use all the strength of the Government as the most efficient measure to subdue the rebels, and that no conciliation shall be offered by any gentle and tender means, for that would only continue the rebellion.

5. That we heartily rejoice in the bright light that radiates forth in the platform of the Baltimore Convention in regard to the extension of liberty, and the entire abolition of human bondage.

6. That we congratulate all the friends of liberty on the great victory gained by freedom in Maryland, being a free constitution was adopted by the people of that State.

7. That we shall endeavor to secure the re-election of Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency of our country, as the representative of the great principles of human liberty and equality.

D. R. DAVIES, President.

JOHN E. JONES, Secretary.

GERMAN REFORMED.

PENNSYLVANIA GERMAN REFORMED SYNOD, 1863.

November—The body met at Pittsburg, and unanimously passed this resolution:

Resolved, That, in conformity with the admonition of the Holy Scriptures, and in imitation of the example of our ecclesiastical fathers during the period of the Revolution, this Synod admonish the pastors and members of the churches under its care, to remember that the powers that be are ordained of God, and that it is the solemn duty of all Christians, enjoying the protection of such civil rulers, to pray for them, and we should feel especially obligated to do so during a time of peril like that through which our beloved country is now passing.

PENNSYLVANIA GERMAN REFORMED SYNOD, 1864.

May—The body met in Reading, and passed these resolutions:

Resolved, That this Convention deems it right and proper to give expression to the unflinching devotion with which the German Reformed Church in the United States has hitherto sustained the cause of our common country, and we earnestly urge upon our clergy and laity to continue to labor and pray for the success of the Government, in its efforts to suppress the existing rebellion, and to restore peace and union.

2. That we deeply sympathize with the brave soldiers and sailors who are enduring the dangers and privations of the military service, and we earnestly invoke the blessing of Almighty God upon them, and the patriotic endeavors to uphold the honor of the national flag and the integrity of the Government.

The resolution of 1863, above quoted, was reiterated by the Synod of the Church in the United States, at its Annual Session in Lancaster, October, 1864.

Like resolutions were passed by other State Synods.

REFORMED PROTESTANT DUTCH.

GENERAL SYNOD OF THE REFORMED PROTESTANT DUTCH CHURCH, 1863.

June—The Synod met in Newburgh, N. Y. The Report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Revs. Charles Wiley, J. H. Suydam, C. G. Vanderveer, and Elders C. Dusenberry, and E. Andrews—was adopted, as follows:

Whereas, It is the duty of the Church of Christ, and of all those who minister at her altars, agreeably to the teachings of the Scriptures, and the injunctions of our standards and formularies of doctrine and worship, to yield at all times a cordial support, both by precept and example, to the legitimate Government of the land; and whereas this duty is especially incumbent at a period when the Government is assailed by armed violence and insubordination, and its very existence and integrity are sought to be subverted by a powerful and persevering rebellion; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we tender to the Government of the United States, and those who represent it, the renewed expression of our warmest and deepest sympathy in its present protracted struggle to maintain its lawful authority and to preserve unbroken the integrity and union of these States.

2. That we hold it to be our imperative duty as ministers of the Gospel and members of the Synod, while abstaining from all unseemly mixing up of ourselves with mere party politics, in our own appropriate sphere and by every possible means to strengthen the hands of the Government at the present imminent crisis, wherein are put at stake the national life and the noblest example and experiment of constitutional government the world has ever seen; and that we will yield a cordial support to all such measures, not incompatible with the great law of righteousness, as may be necessary to suppress the existing rebellion and to assert the complete authority of the Union over all proper territory and domain.

3. That we will hail with satisfaction the earliest practicable period for the introduction and establishment of a salutary peace—a peace founded on the full ascendancy of law and rightful authority, and guaranteed in its permanency by the removal or the sufficient coercion and restraint of whatever causes tend necessarily to imperil the existence of the nation and to endanger the preservation of the Union; and until such a peace can be obtained, we hold it to be a sacred duty to ourselves, our children, our country, the Church of God, and also to humanity at large, to prosecute to the last a war forced upon us by an imperative necessity, and waged on our part not in hatred or revenge, but in the great cause of constitutional liberty and national self-government.

4. That we recognize devoutly our dependence upon God for a happy issue and termination to our present troubles; that we accept with profound humility and abasement the chastisements of His hand; that we make mention of our deep unworthiness and sin; and that we endeavor, by continual searching, repentance, and careful walking before God, to conciliate the Divine favor, so that ere long His heavy judgments in our national calamities may be removed, and a restoration may be accorded to us of the blessings of peace, fraternal harmony, fraternal union, and established government.

The Synod directed the following resolutions to be added to the Report of the Committee:

Resolved, That we view with admiration and gratitude those noble men, our sons, brothers and kindred, who have periled and sacrificed their lives in the present crisis in the cause of the country; that we follow them to the camp and to the fields with our warm sympathies and prayers; that we pledge to them our exertions to relieve their sufferings, and to smooth, as far as may be, the rough experience of war; that we honor them while they live, and cherish their names and memory when they die; and esteem these remembrances and respects the smallest return we can make for their personal sacrifices in the great cause of Constitutional liberty, and enlightened and national self-government.

Resolved, That a copy of the above resolutions be presented by the President of the Synod to the President of the United States.

GENERAL SYNOD OF THE REFORMED PROTESTANT DUTCH, 1864.

June—The body met in Schenectady; and the report of the Committee on the State of the Country—Rev. R. D. Van Kleeck, J. Forsyth, O. E. Cobb, and Elders T. Jeremiahs, and R. N. Perlee—was unanimously adopted, as follows:

In view of the duty to recognize the powers that be, as ordained of God, to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; to pray for all men, for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty, and to acknowledge and adore the providence of God, especially in trying and perilous times,

1. That the General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church heartily sympathizes with the government of the United States in its efforts to crush rebellion against its rightful authority, and to restore to this now distressed people their once cherished integrity as a union of states.

2. This Synod gives thanks to God for all the successes which have attended the efforts to suppress this rebellion; and for all the encouragements to hope that peace may soon be restored. And we trust that our sense of gratitude to Him, the author of all good, may not be impaired by an acknowledgment of inexpressible and incalculable indebtedness to the tens of thousands of our fellow citizens, who have devoted their property and their labors, sacrificed their comforts and their lives, and given up their loved ones in our defence and for the salvation of their country. May God bless them with such rewards as He only can give. May He especially grant His grace, mercy, and peace to the sick, the wounded and the dying.

3. Inasmuch as all success depends on the favor of God, and can be hoped for only through His controlling influence upon the hearts and His blessing upon the efforts of the people of our land, our Synod will not cease to pray, and it earnestly urges the Churches under its care that they cease not to pray for repentance and forgiveness of all our sins, whether national or otherwise, for the gift of wisdom to our counselors and rulers, skill to our commanders, courage to our soldiers, and grace to all the people, to the end that success may attend our arms, our government be maintained, and peace make its permanent abode in the land, if God please, never more to be disturbed.

4. In treating of the present state of our country, we cannot lose sight of the acknowledged principal cause of this deplorable rebellion. In time past, the General Synod has not deemed it necessary to give forth a judgment in regard to the system of American slavery, inasmuch as it existed in regions beyond the bounds of our Church; yet, as in the overruling Providence of that God who knows how to make the wrath of man to praise Him, there is a prospect opened for the ultimate and entire removal of that system which embodies so much of moral and social evil, and as by such removal there is opened a wide field of Christian labors to employ the energies of the Christian Church in this land, the Synod expresses its gratitude to God for this bright prospect, and would join in the prayer, that the day may be hastened when liberty shall be effectually and finally proclaimed throughout all the land, to all the inhabitants thereof.

MORAVIAN.

1861, May 30—The Synod of the Moravian Church adopted the following resolutions:

RESOLUTIONS UPON THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

Whereas, We, the Provincial Synod of the Moravian church of the Northern District of the United States, now assembled at Litiz, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, feel it to be just and proper, that, in common with our brethren of other religious denominations, we should express our deep interest in the present unhappy and gloomy condition of our once happy and prosperous country; inasmuch as it is a duty enjoined upon us by the Head of our church, in the commandment "to render to Caesar, the things that are Caesar's, and to God, the things that are God's";—therefore Resolved, 1. That, while, as citizens of the United States, and as members of the Moravian church, we deeply deplore the calamity of civil war in our land, we acknowledge the chastening hand of God, and humbly bow to the decrees of Him, who holds the destinies of nations in his hands.

2. That, while we acknowledge, and submit to that Power, we also acknowledge "the powers that are ordained of God" over us, and therefore declare our continued, faithful, and unabated allegiance to the government and the constitution of the United States, and of the several States of which we are citizens.

3. That in acknowledging our constitutional government, and the liberty and blessings which we have been permitted to enjoy under it, we, as members of the Moravian church, deem it our duty to extend to it, our hearty support in its efforts and measures to uphold the constitution, to maintain the integrity of these United States, and to perpetuate to ourselves and to our children, the liberties and blessings of our republican institutions; so that we, as a church, "may continue to lead under them a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty."

4. That we will continue to unite in ardent prayer, that the Lord may grant unto the government of the United States, in these times of danger, His gracious counsel, and continue to be the gracious Protector of these United States, and of our national constitution; that He may defeat every evil design against us, and continue to show His tender mercies unto these United States as in days past; that He may in His tender mercy stop the effusion of human blood, and make discord and war to cease; and that to this end, He may put into the hearts of all citizens of these United States, thoughts of peace, that we may see it soon established, to the glory of His name.

5. That we will in our prayers, also remember those, who, in obedience to the call of their country, have left their families and homes, and are gone forth to protect our insulted flag, and in support of our constitution and laws—that the Lord of Hosts may strengthen and uphold them, and in the hour of distress, especially when in the arms of death, prove to them their only trust and consolation; and that He may comfort and dry the tears of parents, of brothers, of sisters and of friends, and protect the widows and fatherless children of those who, by His Divine dispensation, sacrifice their lives in the cause of our beloved country.

1864—June 3—In session at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, it adopted the following on

THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

1. That this Synod is profoundly impressed with the peculiar character of the fearful and bloody war, now raging in and desolating large portions of our beloved country, as an awful and deserved judgment of Almighty God upon our people.

2. That this Synod regards it as clear and unquestionable, that African slavery as it now exists in the Southern States, and as formerly connived at by the nation at large, is the primary cause of this war, not only in having generally led to it, but in being a great moral wrong, on account of which, in connection with other heinous sins, such as covetousness, pride, intemperance, profanity, Sabbath-breaking, and the cruel and heartless conduct of our people in their treatment of the aborigines of our land, largely prevalent in our country, God is visiting the nation with His judgments.

3. That this Synod recommends to our churches and people a humble confession and hearty repentance of these and all other sins of which we are guilty, that the judgment which has overtaken the nation may be speedily removed, and peace and prosperity restored to our beloved country.

4. That this Synod emphatically deprecates that interpretation of the Word of God, almost universal in the South, and still largely prevalent in the North, by which the Scriptures of Truth are sought to be perverted into an instrument of oppression, and the pure, sweet wine of the Gospel changed into gall and wormwood.

5. That this Synod considers an earnest support of the Constitution and Laws, which, in God's providence, have come down to us from our forefathers, as well as an earnest support of the General and State Governments under them—a religious duty; and that we, of this Synod, hereby express our willingness to render the constituted authorities of our land all the aid in our power to subdue unrighteous rebellion, and extend the rightful authority of the Government over every portion of our country.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

GENERAL CONVENTION OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES, 1862.

October 1—The body met in New York.

October 4—Rev. William Cooper Mead, D. D., of Norwalk, Rev. Edward Y. Higbee, D. D., of New York, Rev. William D. Wilson, D. D., of Geneva, Rev. Silas Totten, D. D., of Iowa City, Rev. T. C. Thrall, of Burlington, N. J., and Messrs. Robert C. Winthrop, of Boston, Washington Hunt, of Lockport, John N. Conyngham, of Wilkesbarre, and Charles B. Goddard, of Zanesville, were appointed a Committee on the State of the Country and the Church; to whom were referred these propositions:

By Mr. F. R. Brunot, of Pennsylvania:

Whereas, It has pleased the Supreme Ruler of the universe to permit sedition and privy conspiracy in our midst to culminate in an extensive rebellion against the civil power ordained by Him, and for the just punishment of our sins there is war in our land, friend against friend, brother against brother, son against father; and whereas, a portion of our brethren of the Church have attempted to sever by ecclesiastical enactments the visible bonds of Christian sympathy heretofore existing between us and them, thereby grievously rending the body of Christ in His Church; and whereas, we acknowledge that there is no help but from God, and rejoice that we are permitted to fly to Him for succor in our sore distress; therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Bishops is hereby requested to set forth for the use of this Convention during its present session a special form of prayer, confessing and bewailing our manifold transgressions, pleading for God's forgiveness, begging that it may please Him to be the defender and keeper of our national Government, giving it the victory over all its enemies; that He will abate their and our pride, assuage their malice and confound their devices, and, giving them better minds, forgive them for the evils they have wrought; that He will restore our national Union, bring back peace and prosperity to the State, and godly unity to the Church, and that He will keep us thereto by His perpetual mercy, to the honor and glory of His name.

This was laid on the table by this vote: Of the Clergy—ayes, 15; nays, 5; divided, 1. Of the Laity—ayes, 11; nays, 4; divided, 1. It was subsequently referred to the Committee.

By Thomas P. Carpenter, of Camden, N. J.:

Resolved, That in view of the danger of this country from civil war, the House of Bishops be respectfully requested to prepare a form of prayer to be used during the session of this Convention.

By Mr. Murray Hoffman, of New York :

Whereas, A number of the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America are in open resistance to the Government set over them, and others of such members are aiding in such unlawful rebellion; and whereas, the members of this Church in the several States did, through the agencies of parishes, assemblies, or conventions, appoint deputies to a General Convention, in which, in the year 1789, they adopted and declared a constitution for the government of the Church; and whereas, every one admitted to holy orders in such Church has, upon such admission, solemnly engaged "to conform to the doctrines and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States," which doctrine and worship was set forth in the Book of Common Prayer, ratified in the year 1789, and declared to be the Liturgy of the Church, and required to be received as such by all the members of the same; and whereas, it is in such book directed that there shall be read "a prayer for the President of the United States, and all in civil authority," to which the people present are bidden to say Amen, and to which the members of this Church owe obedience; and whereas, the Convention of South Carolina did, in May, 1861, declare itself no longer under any obligation of obedience to the constitution of the Church, and permitted alterations in the Prayer Book to be made by the Bishop of the diocese, and recognized the power of bodies other than the General Convention to change such Book, and, in the month of June, 1861, the Convention of the diocese of Louisiana did resolve that it had ceased to be a diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and, on the 3d of July, 1861, deputies from the Conventions of the dioceses of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Texas passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the secession of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee, from the United States, and the formation by them of a new Government, called the Confederate States of America, renders it necessary and expedient that the dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal Church within these States should form, within themselves, an independent organization;"

And did proceed to adopt and recommend for ratification a Constitution and form of Government independent of this Church; and in the month of July, 1862, the Convention of the diocese of Virginia did adopt such Constitution, and did assent to alterations of the Book of Common Prayer, and did substitute for the prayer for the President of the United States of America, a prayer for one designated as "President of the Confederate States of America," in open rebellion against such United States; therefore

Resolved, That the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America is alone the particular or national Church for all who have acknowledged themselves its members, to which authority is given, as declared by the xxxivth Article, to ordain, change, and abolish rites and ceremonies.

That, in the opinion of this House, all ministers and other persons who have voluntarily united in the acts and proceedings before set forth, have fallen into the sins of rebellion, sedition and schism, and have greatly offended by their separation from this Church.

That the House of Bishops be requested, in their pastoral letter, to call upon the members of the church who have wandered into these offences to return to a better mind, and all others earnestly to pray that God in his mercy would bring them back, so that our Christian region may rest again in quiet and order, and being once more in godly concord, our Church, our land, our government and people may be continually saved and defended by his abounding goodness and almighty power.

And further Resolved, That the House of Bishops be requested to revise the first part of the Homily against "Disobedience and Wilful Rebellion," so that a portion thereof may be read in churches to the effect that "we all make continual prayer unto Almighty God, even from the bottom of our hearts, that he will give his grace, power, and strength unto the President of the United States, and all in authority over us, to vanquish and subdue as well rebels at home as foreign enemies, that all domestic rebellion being suppressed and pacified, and all outward invasions repulsed and abandoned, we may long continue in obedience to our lawful government, and in that peaceable and quiet of life which hitherto we have had; and may altogether in obedience unto God, the King of Kings, and unto his holy laws, lead our lives so in this world that in the world to come we may enjoy his everlasting kingdom."

Resolved, That these resolutions be sent to the House of Bishops.

By John W. Andrews, of Columbus :

Resolved, That loyalty to the government under which we live is a part of the law of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, and that this convention pledges its constituents to stand by the government to the last in the work of putting down the existing rebellion.

By Rev. George Leeds, D.D., of Philadelphia :

Whereas, The absence from this convention of any and all representation from a large number of dioceses that have hitherto participated, under the Constitution of this Church, in its general council, has afflicted our hearts with grief and pain; and whereas, the cause of this absence is civil war and rebellion in that portion of the country in which these dioceses are planted, against the constituted authority of our beloved land; therefore

Resolved, That deeply as we deplore this unhappy strife, in which, also, we recognize the just judgment of God for our many sins, and earnestly as we lament and condemn the causes which have brought it upon us, so we also deprecate that grave error of judgment which has made it the occasion of severing the ties of visible communion and fellowship that have hitherto united us in our ecclesiastical Synod, and we will not abandon the hope that our absent brethren, guided by the grace of God, will retrace their steps for the honor of his name and the benefit of his holy church.

By Rev. Alexander Burgess, of Portland :

Resolved, That, in view of the afflictive state of our beloved nation, the House of Bishops be affectionately requested to prepare for the use of both Houses a form of prayer, invoking the interposition of God to restore us to peace and prosperity upon such a foundation as he shall approve.

By Mr. J. E. Warren, St. Paul, Minnesota :

Resolved, That the Protestant Episcopal Church throughout the world is one and a united Church, and that while there is no defection of faith, the unity of the Church is not violated or impaired by geographical lines, or national disintegrations, or civil or political disturbances.

Resolved, That this is a religious, and not a political body; that having met to legislate for the Church, and not for the State, that its deliberations be confined to this point, and that the introduction and discussion of all political subjects be deprecated and discouraged, as inimical to Christian unity.

October 9—The Committee made the following unanimous

REPORT.

The Committee have been deeply impressed with the importance and with the difficulty of the duty assigned to them. They have examined with care all the various resolutions which have been referred to them, and have not lost sight of the subsequent suggestions, which have been made in debate, by members of this body from many different parts of our country.

In framing the resolutions which they have at length, after much deliberation, agreed upon, they have had three leading objects in view. They have designed to leave no room for honest doubt, or even for invidious misconstruction, as to the hearty loyalty of this body to the government of the United States. They have desired to confirm and strengthen the unity of the Church, as represented in this convention. And they have attempted so to refer to the course of our brethren who are not represented here, as to shut no door of reconciliation which is still open, and to afford the best hope that they may still be induced to reconsider and retrace their steps, and to renew their relations, in Christian love and loyalty, to a common church and a common country.

The committee have felt that it was not fit for this convention to act or to speak as if they despaired, or in any degree doubted, of the ultimate restoration of the legitimate national authority over our whole land. They have felt, too, that the question before them was not so much as to what might be done, or what might be said, by this body, as a matter of stern justice, in vindication of the authority or the dignity of the Church, but as to what it was wise to do or say at this moment, consistently with our own convictions, and with a view to preserve, unbroken and undisturbed, every remaining link or tie of religious association and Christian sympathy, which might be of use hereafter in accomplishing the great end of restoring our National Union.

The committee are unwilling to conclude their report without one other suggestion. While there could have been no hesitation, under any circumstances, in expressing, now and always, our earnest and abiding loyalty and devotion to our country, its constitution and its laws, and to all its duly constituted authorities, they have felt that there yet rested upon this convention the most solemn obligation to abstain from entering upon any narrower questions, which peculiarly belong to the domain of secular politics. Our blessed Lord, in declaring that his kingdom is not of this world, and in directing us to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, has clearly taught us, that, whether as Ministers or as Legislators and Councillors of his Church, we are to refrain from those matters which he has not committed to our care. There is, doubtless, a difficulty in the minds of many, in clearly discerning the precise boundary line between the subjects which come within our jurisdiction and the proper sphere of duty as Christian ministers and ecclesiastical councillors, and such as belong exclusively to secular politics. But the committee can hardly doubt that there will be a general concurrence in the opinion that, in this most critical period in the history of our Church and of our country, when words are things, and when rash utterances at one end of the Union may co-operate with rash acts at the other in extinguishing the best hopes which remain to us, it is wise for such a body as this to err on the safe side, if we must err at all; and to keep ourselves clearly within the limits which the Councils of our Church have hitherto so uniformly observed.

In accordance with these general views, the undersigned recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, By the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies of this stated Triennial Convention, That assembling, as we have been called to do, at a period of great national peril and deplorable civil convulsion, it is meet and proper that we should call to mind, distinctly and publicly, that the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States hath ever held and taught, in the language of one of its Articles of Religion, that "it is the duty of all men who are professors of the Gospel to pay respectful obedience to the civil authority, regularly and legitimately constituted;" and hath accordingly incorporated into its Liturgy "a prayer for the President of the United States and all in civil authority," and a "prayer for the Congress of the United States, to be used during their session;" and hath bound all orders of its ministry to the faithful and constant observance, in letter and in spirit, of these and all other parts of its prescribed ritual.

2. That we cannot be wholly blind to the course which has been pursued, in their ecclesiastical as well as in their civil relations, since this Convention last met in perfect harmony and love, by great numbers of the ministers and members of this Church within certain States of our Union which have arrayed themselves in open and armed resistance to the regularly constituted Government of our country; and that while, in a spirit of Christian forbearance, we refrain from employing towards them any terms of condemnation and reproach, and would rather bow in humiliation before our common Father in Heaven for the sins which have brought His judgment on our land, we yet feel bound to declare our solemn sense of the deep and grievous wrong which they will have inflicted on the great Christian Communion which this Convention represents, as well as on the country within which it has been so happily and harmoniously established, should they persevere in striving to rend asunder those civil and religious bonds which have so long held us together in peace, unity, and concord.

3. That while, as individuals and citizens, we acknowledge our whole duty in sustaining and defending our country in the great struggle in which it is engaged, we are only at liberty, as Deputies to this Council of a Church which hath ever renounced all political association and action, to pledge to the national Government—as we now do—the earnest and devout prayers of all, that its efforts may be so guided by wisdom and replenished with strength, that they may be crowned with speedy and complete success, to the glory of God and the restoration of our beloved Union.

4. That if, in the judgment of the Bishops, any other forms of occasional prayer than those already set forth shall seem desirable and appropriate—whether for our Convention, our Church, or our country, for our rulers or our defenders, or for the sick and wounded and dying of our army and navy and volunteers—we shall gladly receive them and fervently use them.

5. That a certified copy of the foregoing report and resolutions be transmitted to the House of Bishops, in evidence of the views and feelings of this body in reference to the afflicting condition of our Church and of our country.

Mr. Hoffman moved his resolution as a substitute for the report.

Mr. William Welsh, of Philadelphia, moved to amend by striking from the second resolution the word "wholly," and inserting for the words "will have inflicted," the words "are inflicting," and by striking out the words "should they persevere."

October 15—Rev. Dr. Henry M. Mason, of Maryland, moved to table the whole subject, which was lost: of the Clergy, yeas 9, nays 11, divided 2; of the Laity, yeas 7, nays 10.

Mr. Welsh's amendments were lost: of the Clergy, yeas 9, nays 11, divided 2; of the Laity, yeas 7, nays 10.

Mr. Hoffman's substitute was lost: of the Clergy, yeas 7, nays 14, divided 1; of the Laity, yeas 2, nays 13, divided 1.

Rev. S. C. Thrall, D. D., then offered these resolutions, as a substitute:

Whereas this Church, in her thirty-seventh article, hath doctrinally taught the duty of loyalty to regularly constituted authority, and in her prayers for the President and Congress, hath practised that duty in such methods as become her as an ecclesiastical body, and any act of this House cannot add force to the solemn "ratification of the Book of Common Prayer;" and whereas the present affliction of our country arises from questions of civil polity, and as such is within the province of the State only, and any decision on such questions by the Church is a most disloyal assumption of the prerogative of the State; and whereas the alleged action of the members of the Church in the so-called seceded States in what has been done with reference to external order, administration or organization has been done under circumstances of the character and force of which it is impossible for this House to judge, until, by free and unrestrained intercourse and communication, we may hear from them the reasons of their action, and we have no knowledge of any action on their part affecting faith, ministry or sacraments; therefore,

Resolved, That there is no occasion for any action of this House, touching the declared and acknowledged loyalty of the Church.

2. That in the present affliction of this country by civil war, this House has no right, as a part of the Legislature of the Church, to take any action on the subject, as it is purely civil, and as such belongs to the constituted government only.

3. That in the matter of any action of the Church in the so-called seceded States, it is inexpedient for this House to express any opinion till it is in possession of more full and complete information than we can at present obtain.

4. That this preamble and resolutions be sent to the House of Bishops, to inform them of the action of this House.

Which was lost; of the Clergy, yeas 9, nays 12, divided 1; of the Laity, yeas 7, nays 10.

Rev. F. M. McAllister, of California, offered this, as a substitute:

Whereas the introduction of passing national events into this House, as a subject for its deliberation and action, has given pain and mortification to those many members of the Episcopal Church here and throughout the land who heartily believed that she was a kingdom not of this world; and that however as christian men her members might sympathize and suffer with the State in all its trials, triumphs, and adversities, this kingdom of God was one which should not be moved, attained, or assailed by the heavings and distractions of secular dominion; and whereas the very introduction of this subject here has created expectations in the world around us, unacquainted with the nature and constitution of the Church of Christ, that this Convention must necessarily be as any one of the religious bodies of the land, reflecting the transient passions and emotions of the day, thus seriously and painfully embarrassing the action of many members of this body, who are required by the communities in which they respectively live to give some response to the resolutions upon the state of the country which have been introduced here; and whereas the preservation of this Church in its intact integrity as a part of the kingdom of Christ which is not of this world, is bound upon us as well by our loyalty to that Church and to its Divine Head as by the fact that the unshaken manifestation of such loyalty against all the pressure of the world's blandishments and terrorism in this fearful crisis, would exhibit a moral courage and a depth of religious principle that would make this Church of our God a praise and a glory in the land, and a true ark of refuge into which multitudes of the wise and good would gladly come for refuge from the storm and tempest of worldly interests; therefore, for the information of all,

Resolved, That as a legislative Council of the Church of Christ, all secular and national interests are foreign to the deliberations and decisions of this Convention, and that the true and divinely ordained relations of Christian men to the State are amply, constantly, and solemnly affirmed by this Church, in her daily teachings, and in her daily worship.

Which was lost: of the Clergy, yeas 7, nays 14, divided 1; of the Laity, yeas 5, nays 10, divided 2.

The report of the Committee was then adopted: of the Clergy, yeas 13, nays 6, divided 3; of the Laity, yeas 11, nays 5, divided 1, as follows:

PASTORAL LETTER OF THE BISHOPS OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, 1862.

October 1—The House of Bishops met in New York.

October 14—Two Pastoral Letters were reported from the committee, which consisted of the five senior Bishops present, viz: Bishops John H. Hopkins of Vermont, Benjamin Bosworth Smith of Kentucky, Charles Pettit McIlvaine of Ohio, Jackson Kemper of Wisconsin, Samuel Allen McCaskry of Michigan. The committee, "not being fully agreed as to the two letters read before them," presented both for the action of the House.

On motion of Bishop Whittingham, the subjoined was adopted as the Pastoral Letter, as follows:

BRETHREN: We have been assembled together in the Triennial Convention of our Church under most afflicting circumstances. Hitherto, whatever our Church had to contend with from the fallen nature of man, from the power of this evil world, or the enmity of that mighty adversary who is called by St. Paul "the god of this world," her Chief Council has been permitted to meet amidst the blessings of peace within our national boundaries, and as representing a household of faith at unity in itself. Our last meeting was in the metropolis of a State which has long held a high place and influence in the affairs of our Church and Country. Long shall we remember the affectionate hospitality which was then lavished upon us, and the delightful harmony and brotherly love which seemed to reign, almost without alloy, in a Convention composed of representatives of all our Dioceses! Never did the promise of a long continuance of brotherly union, among all parts and sections of our whole Church, appear more assuring. But, alas! what is man? How unstable our surest reliances, based on man's wisdom or will! How unsearchable the counsels of Him who "hath his way in the sea, and his path in the mighty waters, and whose footsteps are not known!" What is now the change? We look in vain for the occupants of seats in the Convention, belonging to the representatives of no less than ten of our Dioceses, and to two of our Bishops. And whence such painful and injurious absence? The cause stands as a great cloud of darkness before us, of which, as we cannot help seeing it, and thinking of it, and that most sorrowfully, wherever we go and whatever we do, it is impossible not to speak when we address you in regard to the condition and wants of our Church. That cause is all concentrated in a stupendous rebellion against the organic law and the constituted Government of the Country, for the dismemberment of our national Union—under which, confessedly, all parts of the land have been signally prospered and blessed; a rebellion which is already too well known to you, brethren, in the vast armies it has compelled our Government to maintain, and in the fearful expense of life and treasure, of suffering and sorrow, which it has cost on both sides, to need any further description here.

We are deeply grieved to think how many of our brethren, clergy and laity, in the regions over which that dark tide has spread, have been carried away by its flood: not only yielding to it, so as to place themselves, as far as in them lay, in severance from our ecclesiastical Union, which has so long and so happily joined us together in one visible communion and fellowship; but, to a sad extent, sympathizing with the movement, and giving it their active co-operation.

In this part of our address, we do not attempt to estimate the moral character of such doings. At present we confine ourselves to the statement of notorious facts, except as to one matter, of which this is the convenient place to speak.

When the ordained Ministers of the Gospel of Christ, whose mission is so emphatically one of peace and goodwill, of tenderness and consolation, do so depart from their sacred calling as to take the sword and engage in the fierce and bloody conflicts of war; when in so doing they are fighting against authorities which, as "the powers that be," the Scriptures declare "are ordained of God," so that in resisting them they resist the ordinance of God; when especially one comes out from the exalted spiritual duties of an Overseer of the flock of Christ, to exercise high command in such awful work,—we cannot, as ourselves Overseers of the same flock, consistently with duty to Christ's Church, His Ministry and people, refrain from placing on such examples our strongest condemnation. We remember the words of our blessed Lord, uttered among His last words, and for the special admonition of His Ministers—"They that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

Returning to this great rebellion, with all its retinue of cost and sacrifice, of tribulation and anguish, of darkness and death, there are two aspects in which we must contemplate it, namely: as it comes by the agency of man, and as it comes from the Providence of God.

We desire, first, to call your attention to it as it proceeds from the Providence of God. So comprehensive is that Providence that it embraces all worlds and all nations; while so minute is it that not a sparrow falleth without the knowledge and will of our Father in Heaven. In its vast counsels, this deep affliction has its place. God's hand is in it. His power rules it. It is His visitation and chastening for the sins of this nation. Who can doubt it? Just as the personal affliction of any of you is God's visitation to turn him from the world and sin, unto Himself, so is this national calamity most certainly His judgment upon this nation for its good. And we trust, dear brethren, we are in no danger of seeming, by such interpretation of our distresses, to excuse, in any degree, such agency as men have had in bringing them upon us. God's Providence has no interference with man's responsibility. He works by man, but so that it is still man that wills and works. The captivities of God's chosen people were, as His Word declares, His judgments upon them for their sins; while the nations that carried them captive were visited of God for heinous guilt in so doing. St. Peter declares that our Lord was "delivered" unto death "by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God;" and that, nevertheless, it was "by wicked hands" that he was "crucified and slain." Thus we need be under no temptation to diminish our estimate of the present dispensation of sorrow, as coming from the hand of God, for the punishment of our sins, whatever the agency of men therein. It is our duty, as Christians and as patriots, so to consider it, that it may do us the good for which it is sent, and may the sooner be taken away.

It is not possible for us, in this address, to set before you, in detail, or in their true proportions, all the national and other sins which make us, as a people, deserve, and need, the chastisements of a holy God. It needs no Daniel, inspired from on high, to discover them. Surely you must all be painfully familiar with many of them, in the profuteness of speech with which God's name and majesty are assailed; in the neglect of public worship which so dishonours His holy day; in the ungodliness of life which erects its example so conspicuously; and especially in that one great sin for which Jerusalem was given over to be trodden down by the heathen, and the people of Israel have ever since been wanderers and a by-word among the nations, namely, the rejection, whether in positive infidelity, or only in practical unbelief of God's great gift of grace and mercy, His beloved Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, to be a sacrifice of propitiation for our sins, and an all-sufficient and all-glorious Saviour of our souls.

But there is a passage in the Scriptures which is of great use as a guide in this consideration of national sinfulness. It is a warning to the nation of Israel, and found in the eighth chapter of the book of Deuteronomy, as follows: "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping His commandments, and His judgments, and His statutes, which I command thee this day, lest when thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses and hast dwelt therein, and when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied, then thy heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God: for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth. And it shall be, that if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God—as the nations which the Lord destroyeth before your face, so shall ye perish, because ye would not be obedient to the voice of the Lord your God."

Now it was because that nation was guilty of precisely such self-gorying, and such forgetfulness of its indebtedness to God and dependence on His favor, as this warning describes, that the grievous calamities which so fill its history, before the advent of Christ, were brought upon it. And it is because there is so much agreement between this description and the aspect which we, as a people, have presented before God, that we place the passage before you.

Marvellously have we been prospered in everything pertaining to national prosperity, riches, and strength. God has loaded us with benefits; and with our benefits have grown our ingratitude, our self-dependence, and self-sufficiency, our pride, our vain-gloriousness, and that sad deficiency, so much felt, in the representative acts and voices of the nation as to all adequate acknowledgment of God and of the Gospel of Christ. Let us mark the words of the prophet Jeremiah: "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me that I am the Lord which exercise loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth."—(Jer. ix. : 23, 24.) How remarkably do these words exhibit our sin as a nation! How seldom, in anything of a representative character, or anything that speaks for the nation, especially in the counsels of our chosen rulers, or in the enactments of our legislatures, do we see any such reference to God, as is here required as the basis on which He blesses a nation! How literally have we gloried in our wisdom, and power, and wealth; and said in our hearts, Our power and our hand have gotten us all these things!

Dear brethren, can we consider these things, so palpable to every eye, and not acknowledge that we deserve God's anger, and need, for our good, His chastening Providence? Is it wonderful that this tribulation hath come upon us? O, that when thus His judgments are upon the land, the inhabitants may learn righteousness! We exhort you, brethren, that, as citizens and as Christians, you will take these things seriously to heart. Search and try yourselves, that you may duly humble yourselves under God's mighty hand, and He may, in due time, exalt us out of the present distress. Such a spirit of humiliation, taking wide possession of the people, especially of those who, as members of the Church of Christ, profess to be His disciples—above all, such a spirit appearing among those whose official position makes their works and acts of eminent weight and responsibility in determining the nation's standing before God—would more encourage us concerning the prospect of a happy removal of our national afflictions, a happy future of stability in our civil institutions, and of peace in the whole land, than if many signal victories were given to our honored armies. Let us pray earnestly and constantly for that spirit, which, above all things, is a nation's wealth, and strength, and praise. "The Lord's hand is not shortened," that it cannot thus bless us. "His ear is not heavy, that it cannot hear" us when we seek so great a blessing. He is "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think;" and prayer is the arm that places our wants on His mighty power.

Let us turn now to the other aspect of our great trial; namely, as it comes from the agency of man. We deeply feel, dear brethren, how momentous is this portion of our subject, and with what carefulness and charity, and at the same time with what decision and plainness of speech, with what faithfulness to Church and Country, and to those arrayed against us, as well as to ourselves, it becomes us to speak. Gholly would your Bishops avoid a subject so painful. But there is no possibility of avoiding it. Should we keep silence, we should not avoid it. Our silence would speak far and wide, and with a meaning by which we are not willing that our minds should be interpreted. At such an alarming crisis of our national and ecclesiastical union, as well as of our whole welfare, when a voice from such a body, occupying such intimate relations to a wide-spread communion, may be of such importance to the strength of the public counsels, through the guidance of the people of that communion,—should we address you on other topics of less prominence at the present time, and yet keep silence on that one which banishes almost every other from the thoughts of the nation, we should not only neglect an opportunity of usefulness which ought to be improved, and subject ourselves to imputations which we are not willing to bear, but we should inflict a serious injury upon a cause we are bound to aid.

It is the first time this Convention has met since these troubles began. God grant they may be ended long before it shall meet again! Ever since our Church had her Litany, we have been praying for deliverance "from sedition, privy conspiracy, and rebellion." And now that all the three are upon us, and in a depth of scheme, a force of action, a strength of purpose, and an extensiveness of sway such as the world never before saw united for the dismemberment of any government, shall we refuse to tell you in what light we regard that gigantic evil?

We are moved the more to speak, because we believe that you, brethren, desire it of us. You feel bound, by your views of duty, to take a position and manifest principles, too decided to be mistaken, in support of the national Constitution and Government in this day of their peril. Our communion is nobly represented wherever the nation's cause has dangers to brave, difficulties to be surmounted, sacrifices to be made, or sufferings to be borne. In the ranks, and through all the grades of command, our Church testifies her loyalty by the devotion of her sons. Many of them are her choice young men, whom it is hard to spare from works of Christian well-doing at home. Many of them are her Sunday-school teachers. They have gone to her armies, not in any bitterness of feeling towards those who have brought on us this war, but in a ready mind to love their enemies and to do good to those that hate them, as well as out of a well-considered and conscientious conviction of duty to their Country, to their Government, and to God. They look to us, their chief Pastors, especially as we are now gathered together here, to give them the support and comfort of our approbation, if we think they have rightly judged the great question of duty to the Government in the present struggle. Amidst the perils of battle, in hospitals and prisons, under privations and wounds, they feel the preciousness of such comfort. Acknowledging the reasonableness of such desires, we have pleasure in complying with them; not apprehending that in touching on this subject it can with reason be objected that we enter amidst questions with which, as Ministers of Him whose "kingdom is not of this world," we have nothing to do. Whatever the Apostles of Christ were inspired by the Holy Ghost to teach the Church; the Ministers and Stewards of the Church are bound to illustrate and enforce, for instruction of her members. "All Scripture is profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness." Whatever is contained therein is part of what has thus been "written for our learning"—part of that spiritual provision which you, brethren, are to "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest;" and which, therefore, God's Stewards must distribute, as varying circumstances shall make it "a word in season."

Then what say the Scriptures touching the subject before us? We have no need to go beyond the words of St. Paul, in the thirteenth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans—"Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. For there is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation."

Now, it is the application of these words to our duties, under present circumstances, of which we have need to inquire, if we would use this portion of Scripture as "a light to our feet." Where, then, do we find those powers and ordinances to which, as "ordained of God," we, recognizing the great truth that "there is no power but of God," are bound, for His sake, to be subject? We answer, IN THE CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES. Under them, the people of all the States, now resisting them, were just as much bound to render obedience, when such resistance began, as we, whose allegiance is still unbroken. According to the Scriptures, that resistance, so far from making null and void those powers, is a resistance to ordinances of God still in force; and, therefore, brings His condemnation on those so engaged.

When St. Paul, in direct connection with the words just cited, exhorts us to "render to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute is due, custom to whom custom, fear to whom fear, honor to whom honor," and that "not only for wrath, but for conscience' sake;" we have no hesitation in teaching that the claim to all these duties and manifestations of allegiance and loyalty from us, and from all those States so recently united in rendering them, is rightfully in that Government which is now by force of arms maintaining such claim. The refusal of such allegiance we hold to be a sin; and when it stands forth in armed rebellion, it is a great crime before the laws of God, as well as man.

Thus, brethren, your Bishops teach, as official expositors of the Word of God. Less, they believe, they could not teach without unfaithfulness to the Scriptures.

If godly submission to the laws and constitutional rulers of the country should be regarded as a matter of less than the most religious obligation; if it shall be held a thing of indifference whether the Government, given us in the Providence of God, be obeyed "for conscience' sake," or be overthrown by conspiracy and armed rebellion, without the pretence of any existing and oppressive wrong, or of any wrong for which the remedy might not be found under, and by, provision of that very Government,—then all the horrors, of which such rebellion may be the prolific parent, may at any time be caused, and even intended, without guilt. But, let us hear what the Fathers of our Church, in one of those Homilies which our Articles declare to contain "a godly and wholesome doctrine," teaches on this head. We can well understand it now and appreciate it, as never before. In the Homily "Against Willful Rebellion" we have these wholesome words: "He that nameth rebellion, nameth not a singular, or one only sin, as is theft, robbery, murder, and such like; but he nameth the whole puddle and sink of all sins against God and man; against his country, his countrymen, his parents, his children, his kinsfolk, his friends, and against all men universally; all sins against God and all men heaped together, nameth he that nameth rebellion." In another passage, after speaking of the general miseries of all war, the Homily proceeds with a still darker description: "But when these mischiefs are wrought in rebellion by them that should be friends, by countrymen, by kinsmen, by those that should defend their country and countrymen from such miseries, the misery is nothing so great as are the mischief and wickedness where the subjects unnaturally do rebel * * * countrymen to disturb the public peace and quietness of their country, for defence of whose quietness they should spend their lives;" "and, universally, instead of all quietness, joy, and felicity, which so follow blessed peace and due obedience, to bring in all trouble, sorrow, disquietness of minds and bodies, and all mischiefs and calamities; to turn all good order upside down; to bring all good laws into contempt, and to tread them under foot; to oppress all virtue and honesty, and all virtuous and honest persons; and to set all vice and wickedness and all vicious and wicked men at liberty to work their wicked wills, which before were bridled by wholesome laws; to weaken, to overthrow, and to consume the strength of the realm, their natural country, which, by their mischief weakened, is thus ready to be a prey and spoil to all outward enemies."

Such is the testimony of our Homilies against "Willful Rebellion."

The reasons which make this so great a crime are the same which make the constituted authority so indispensable to the very existence of human society. God has invested the magistrate with power, and given him the sword to be borne, "not in vain," because he is His Minister "for good;" because, without him, all the floods of ungodliness would be set free; and the only remedy remaining for all social disorders would be that of force overcoming force, and of cunning overreaching cunning.

We have now, brethren, in strict confinement to the testimony of the Scriptures, ascertained a basis of principle and duty on which we may heartily rejoice in all the active and energetic loyalty with which the members of our Churches, in union with their fellow-citizens, of all classes and conditions, are sustaining the Government in its vast efforts to reinstate the rightful control of its laws, wherever they have been disowned. We bid them never to be weary of that well-doing; and particularly would we say to those who, out of love to their country, and not out of any vindictive exasperation towards her enemies, have gone in our armies, be of good cheer! Whatever the dangers you may have to meet, or sufferings to endure, let it be your consolation that you have gone to sustain the power, ordained of God, and which rightfully claims your most devoted loyalty.

And now, we can ask your further attention only to a few concluding words, touching great spiritual interests, which the absorbing claims and the strong excitements of these times endanger. No doubt, dear brethren, you have all been painfully conscious of the powerful tendency of the present anxieties and excitements to draw down your thoughts and affections from daily communion with God; to elevate earthly interests and duties into injurious rivalry with those of the soul and eternity; to carry your minds away on this powerful flood of feeling and active concern for our beloved country, till they become, in a great degree, separated from all earnest engagedness in God's service. With some minds, under divine grace, the tendency of these troubles is to lead them nearer to God; while with others it is to take them away from God, to make His Word less precious, His holy day less sacredly kept, secret prayer less faithfully observed, and less their refuge and consolation; Christian example less decided and exalted.

We desire affectionately to exhort you to increased watchfulness and prayer in consequence of such danger. Let not love of Country make your love to God and your gracious Saviour the less fervent. Immense as is this present earthly interest, it is only earthly. The infinitely greater interests of the soul and of the kingdom of God remain as paramount as ever. We counsel, not that you feel less concern for the former, but that you seek God's grace so to sanctify all its anxieties that it may constantly lead you to Him for refuge, and rest, and peace; making you only the more earnest to secure, in exchange for this sinful and troublesome world, that inheritance which is incorruptible, that better country where "sorrow and sighing flee away."

And we also charge you, brethren, that you watch and pray, lest during this unhappy strife you should allow any bitterness of spirit to dwell in you toward those who, from whatever cause, have brought on us this war, with its great injuries and calamities, or who are now waging it against us. To hate rebellion, so uncensored, is duty; but to hate those engaged therein, is the opposite of Christian duty. Nothing can release us from the charge of our blessed Lord to love even our greatest enemies; do good to them that hate us, and pray for such as despitefully use us and persecute us. In this temper of mind let us be followers of Him who, when we were enemies, died for us.

We are pained to learn, from the reports of committees of our General Missionary Society, to what extent the means of pursuing their great work have suffered by reason of these times. We are aware how much of the contributions of our people have gone to the relief and consolation of our brethren who, in exposing themselves to the dangers of battle for our defence, have fallen under wounds or sickness. We rejoice in all that is done for them; and it is a vast relief from the horrors of this war to see what a spirit of self-denying and devoted benevolence has appeared all over the land, in men and women of all conditions, banding them together in labors of love, or scattering them abroad over the field of suffering, on errands of compassion and tender ministrations to our sick, wounded, dying soldiers. God be praised for all this! It goes far to comfort us in the great tribulation. But the claims of the kingdom of God are not diminished. The calls for the labors of men of God to preach the Gospel in destitute places are as loud as ever. And we believe that while the ability of many to contribute of their substance to the missionary work has been greatly impaired and almost taken away by our national troubles, that of many others is not so diminished or so drawn upon by objects peculiar to these circumstances that they may not enlarge their gifts to the work of missions, and greatly supply what is lacking by the disability of others. We pray them, and all our brethren, seriously to review their duty in this respect. The missions in Africa and China are afflicted at the prospect of being painfully reduced for want of means to sustain them as they are. In the domestic field, the absence in missionary stations of the labors of the Minister of the Word and Sacrament, is even a greater evil in such times than when no great national affliction carries its sorrows and clouds into every village of the land. Let us seek God's blessing upon our country's cause, by seeking to promote His kingdom and righteousness in all our borders.

But it is not merely for the support of our missionary work that we are concerned at this time. The ability of many a faithful parish Minister to continue his labor of love among a people beloved, is greatly endangered at this time for lack of the most slender pecuniary support: so that by the additional cause of Ministers feeling it their duty to see to the spiritual wants of our soldiers and taking service as chaplains in the army, we are increasing the number of vacant congregations to an alarming extent. We must therefore exhort our brethren to take heed and to do their utmost in their several parishes, that the blessing of a settled Minister be not lost for lack of the needed pecuniary support. If such privation, in ordinary circumstances, be of great detriment; much more is it so in days of affliction such as we have never known before. Never was it so important to all individual, domestic, and social interests, for the light of every household in a day of darkness, and the strengthening of every heart in a season of manifold burdens, that the lamp of the sanctuary should be trimmed and burning; that the precious "comfort of the Scriptures," through its appointed Messenger, should not be removed; that the soothing, purifying, governing, elevating influences of the public means of grace, under the hand of God's Minister, should be regularly enjoyed in the congregation. But if such cannot be the privilege, then we exhort vacant congregations that instead of forsaking the assembling of themselves together, as if, because they have no pastor, they could have no worship, one with another, they will take advantage of the great privilege of having our Book of Common Prayer, whereby a Church without a Pastor may still have its public worship and the Word of God, in purity, in fitness, and in power. Meet together regularly, brethren; have the Morning and Evening Prayer, and some approved published sermon, read by one of your number. You will thus have much to enjoy, though not all you need and desire. Lose it not, because you cannot have more.

And now, praying a merciful God and Father soon to restore to our beloved country the blessings of peace, under the banner of our honored national Union, and with our wholesome laws and righteous liberties more than ever strengthened, defended, and established; praying that those who have sought to depart from us may speedily and happily be reunited with us in the bonds of Christian, as well as national, fellowship; and that all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking may be put away from us and them "with all malice;" that we may "be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another even as we hope that God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven us," we affectionately "commit you to God and the word of His grace." May the blessing of God so abide on you, beloved brethren, in all your families and congregations, that "your faith may grow exceedingly," "that your love may abound more and more," "that you may walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work and increasing in the knowledge of God;" "to whom be glory in the Church, throughout all ages, world without end."

CHARLES PETTIT McILVAINE, D. D., D. C. L.,
BISHOP OF OHIO,
Presiding in the House of Bishops, pro tem.

PROTEST OF BISHOP HOPKINS.

October 16—Bishop Hopkins read a protest against the Pastoral Letter adopted by the House, which he requested might be entered on the minutes. Bishop Kemper moved that the request be granted. On motion of Bishop Whittingham, it was received, and placed on file among the documents of this House.

The Protest of Bishop Hopkins, and his proposed Pastoral Letter, are subjoined:

PROTEST.

To the House of Bishops in General Convention assembled:—

RIGHT REVEREND BRETHREN,—It is with much regret that I find myself obliged to enter my solemn protest against the political aspect of the Pastoral Letter which your venerable Body has adopted, and to withdraw from the final act of its public delivery. On minor topics of opinion, during my Episcopate of thirty years, I have never departed from my obligation to preserve the unity of this House, to the utmost of my small ability. But this action, in my judgment, involves a fundamental principle in our ecclesiastical position. We stand opposed, in this country, to any Union between Church and State. In our individual capacity, as citizens, we are bound by the plain precepts of the inspired Apostles, to bear true allegiance to "the powers that be"—the earthly government under which the Providence of God has placed us. For that, our system sets forth an ample arrangement, in the Homily against rebellion, in the catechism appointed for the instruction of youth, in the Lessons of Scripture, in our Litany, and in the Prayers for the President and Congress, to say nothing of the special supplications set forth for the present national troubles, all uniting in the most positive testimony to the duty of Christian loyalty. But beyond this, I cannot allow that this House of Bishops, assembled in our official relations to the Church of God, has a right to go, by expressing any judgment on the measures of secular government. Under the American Constitution, the State has no right to declare its sentence on the legislation of the Church, so long as we do nothing to impair this duty of loyalty. And, under our Apostolic Constitution, the Church has no right to utter her sentence upon the legislation of the State, so long as it forbears to assail our Christian liberty. Their respective functions are distinct. The Almighty Ruler of the world has committed to the State the wide sphere of temporal interest, and He has committed to the Church the far higher sphere which embraces the interests of eternity. Each has its own allotted orbit, and I cannot comprehend how any reflecting and intelligent man in our Communion should desire that those orbits, in the present condition of mankind, should come together. I know, indeed, that this conjunction was attempted, though in different forms, by Popery and Puritanism. I know that it exists, to some extent, in the Establishment of England. But I also know that the primitive Church spread her triumphs throughout the earth, in total independence of the State, and that all our clergy have been educated to regard the union of Church and State as a mistake and a calamity.

Maintaining this as a fundamental principle of our ecclesiastical position, from which I cannot justify any departure, I proceed to show how the Church has acted with relation to the policy of war, along the main track of her history, even under the disadvantages of her secular connections.

From the period when Christianity became established in the old Roman empire, there were many insurrections, and intestine as well as foreign wars, but I can call to mind no instance, in all the councils, where the justice or the injustice of those wars was made a topic for ecclesiastical consideration. In the civil wars of England, which were numerous before the Reformation, I think it will not be found that the Church committed herself, by any formal and united action, either to the one side or to the other. In the great rebellion against Charles I., I am not aware that the Bishops were assembled to set forth any sentence on the political right or wrong involved in the conflict, although it threatened, and, for a season, accomplished, their own official downfall. And when the American Colonies revolted, and the Rev. William White became the first Chaplain to the Revolutionary Congress, I do not see the slightest movement in our Mother Church to condemn his course, or that of the ministers who acted with him. The Bishop of London was the Diocesan of all the clergy in the Colonies, and had the undoubted right to suspend or to depose them, if the act of secular rebellion had been a proper ground for ecclesiastical denunciation. But that, in every age, has been regarded as a subject for the action of the State, and I doubt whether an instance can be found in the whole range of the Church's history, where an ecclesiastical court has tried a man for secular rebellion. If the Church of England had held it to be her duty to adopt the principle which this House of Bishops has laid down in the Pastoral Address, the Rev. William White and his colleagues could hardly have been accepted as fit subjects for Episcopal consecration, and the whole character of our ministerial succession would most probably have passed away, forever.

It is due to the solemn responsibility under which I present this Protest, that I should enforce its positions by the citation of some high authorities.

Thus the general principle is set forth by the learned Palmer (London edition of 1830, vol. 2, p. 96):—

"In maintaining the right of the Church," saith he, "to judge in controversies, it is necessary to limit her authority to its proper object. It is not, then, supposed by any one, that the Church is authorized to determine questions relating to philosophy, science, legislation, or any other subjects beyond the doctrine of revelation. Her office relates entirely to the truth once revealed by Jesus Christ."

I need hardly remind my respected brethren of our XXth Article, in which it is declared that "the Church hath authority in controversies of faith;" excluding, by fair implication, controversies of secular policy.

The proper objects to be secured by the meetings of ecclesiastical Councils are thus set forth by Field, in his well known Treatise (p. 643):—

"The causes why General Councils assemble," saith he, "are three: 1st, the suppressing of heresies; 2d, a general and uniform reformation of abuses crept into the Church; and 3d, the taking away of schisms about the election of pastors and rejection of intruders. And the causes that were wont to be examined in the meetings of the Bishops of the Province (p. 514) were the ordinations of Bishops when any churches were void, and the depriving and rejecting all such as were found unworthy—and, in a word, any complaint or wrong done in any church was then to be heard."

To these I shall only add some interesting statements of the faithful and laborious Bingham (B. XVI., ch. 2, vol. 2, p. 580, of Bohn's London edition):

"The power of the Church originally," saith this author, "was a mere spiritual power, her sword only a spiritual sword, as Cyprian terms it, to affect the soul and not the body. Hence the ancient Bishops were accustomed to plead with the magistrates and the emperors, to save the lives of those who were condemned to death by law."

The writer proceeds to quote S. Augustine's language to an African judge, as follows:

"I know the Apostle says 'ye bear not the sword in vain, but are ministers of God to execute wrath upon them that do evil.' But the cause of the State is one thing, and the cause of the Church is another. The administration of the State is to be carried on by terror, but the meekness of the Church is to be commended by her clemency."

"These men, with the sword of unrighteousness, shed Christian blood: do you withhold even the lawful sword of judgment from being imbrued in their blood."

"It was also thought some cruelty," saith Bingham elsewhere (2 vol. p. 1055), "or at least a very improper and unbecoming thing, for any clergyman to be concerned in judging or giving sentence in cases of blood. The laws allowed them to be chosen arbitrators of men's differences in civil causes, but they had no power at all in criminal causes except such as were purely ecclesiastical, and least of all in such criminal causes where life and death were concerned. Therefore there are many Canons forbidding this under the highest censure of deprivation. The Council of Tarragon universally forbids the clergy to sit as judges in any criminal causes. The Council of Auxerre more particularly enjoins presbyters not to sit in judgment when any man is to be condemned to die. The fourth Council of Toledo allows not priests to sit judges in cases of treason, even at the command of the prince, except the prince promised beforehand upon oath that he would pardon the offence, and remit the punishment. If they did otherwise, they were to be held guilty of bloodshed before Christ, and to lose their order and degree in the Church. And the eleventh Council of Toledo goes even further, refusing them lay-communion, until they were at the point of death."

These quotations might be greatly multiplied, but they must surely be sufficient to prove the broad distinction between the duty of the State and the office of the Church, at all times, but especially when wars and rebellions, which demand so large and awful an amount of bloodshed, are concerned. The great and glorious object of the divine Head of the Church was "not to destroy men's lives but to save them." And if the voice of His Church is to be lifted up at all, with reference to the avenging sword of earthly government, it would seem to be only when she is prepared to urge, for Christ's sake, the blessed work of peace and conciliation. If she may not, with propriety, do this, under the existing condition of our country, she is at least bound to abstain from any act which would make her a party in the mournful task of slaughter.

On the whole view, therefore, which I have been able to take of this deeply important question, I am constrained, however reluctantly, to stand entirely aloof from the novel movement, which pledges the Church to the State in its merely political administration. To that, as individual citizens, we owe all lawful obedience and support. But here, acting as Bi-shops in the Church of Christ, we have no right to pass beyond the circle of our spiritual functions, nor to express any opinion, direct or indirect, upon the measures of our secular government.

In the world, we are all ready to render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. In the Church, we must confine ourselves to our higher duty of rendering unto God the things that are God's.

The adoption of any other principle, in my humble judgment, can only lead to strife and confusion. Nor, if we claim the right to applaud the course of our secular government when it pleases us, we must also claim the right to condemn its measures when they may happen to be unacceptable. And the inevitable result must be that the clergy would have the warrant of our example to discuss every political movement in the House of God, and thus degrade our high and spiritual standing to the temporal uses of party and popular excitement.

In conclusion, I desire to say that I yield to no man in my loyalty as a citizen, in my attachment to the Federal Union of the States, or in my deep sorrow that any even should have occurred by which that Union could be endangered or destroyed. But my duty as a citizen is one thing, and my duty as a Bishop is another. By the first I hold a relation to the State, under the laws and the Constitution. By the second, I hold, however unworthy, a high office in the kingdom of Christ, which is not of this world. And while I maintain a just allegiance to the State, I am bound to maintain the infinitely more solemn and sublime allegiance to my omnipotent Lord and Master in such wise, that I may not confound the lines of demarcation which He has placed between them. I claim no influence, however, for my humble judgment over any other mind, and am perfectly aware that I am personally of too little importance to expect it. But I am compelled to act on my own conclusions of duty, knowing, as I do, that they have been formed on the widest examination in my power, against my personal sympathies and interest, and solely from my conviction of their truth. I deny not the same claim to conscientious sincerity, on the part of my respected brethren from whom I differ. I shall withdraw myself from any participation in the Pastoral Letter, with the kindest feelings of fraternal affection towards all my colleagues, without exception. And I trust, by the mercy of God, that I shall be allowed to meet them at a future day, under happier circumstances, when we may assemble together again in a true union of sentiment and action.

JOHN H. HOPKINS,
Bishop of Vermont.

NEW YORK, HOUSE OF BISHOPS,
October 15, 1862.

THE PASTORAL LETTER REJECTED BY THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS.

For the first time, beloved brethren, since the separate organization of our American Church, your Bishops are called on to issue a Pastoral Address, under very mournful and depressing circumstances. Our country, so lately flourishing in prosperity and peace, lies bleeding under the terrible affliction of the bitterest national warfare. Thousands upon thousands have fallen upon the field of battle, and no one can estimate the desolated homes, the broken hearts, the misery of the widows and the orphans, the poverty and wretchedness, the woes and agonies, which have marked the awful conflict. The Church of God, in all our borders, mourns over the tremendous sacrifices of the deadly strife, and beholds in the sad spectacle of our diminished numbers, and the dark clouds which hang over our future progress, the dreadful results of disunion. The Lord of heaven and earth, whose chastening rod has been so sorely laid upon us, is the only power on whose favor we can depend for our deliverance, and we have sought, on our appointed day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer, to deprecate His wrath and implore His mercy. May our humble confession of sin be accepted at His throne of grace. May our penitent supplications be answered in the plenitude of His goodness, through the all-prevailing intercession of that divine Redeemer who atones for the transgressions and bears the sorrows of His people. And may He, in whose hand are all the hearts of men, turn away from us the bitter cup of our national calamities, and restore the land to unity and peace!

On the political questions which have been, in the eyes of the world, the instrumental causes of this mournful conflict, your Bishops have no wish to enter. As citizens, you have all formed your own conclusions on the secular aspect of the times, and with those conclusions it is not our province to interfere. We address you as the chief officers of the kingdom of Christ, which is not of this world. Our divine Master, when His enemies sought to entice Him into an avowal of His opinions on the right of the Romans to hold Judea in subjection, rejected the temptation, and gave them the admirable and comprehensive precept, "Render unto Caesar the things that be Caesar's, and unto God, the things that be God's." And the inspired S. Paul, faithfully following his Lord's example, declined all expressions involving the character or the measures of civil government, while he laid down, with clear precision, the rule of Christian duty: "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. For there is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist, shall receive unto themselves damnation." Here then we have at once the warrant and the limitation of the doctrine, which the Church has always maintained. As followers of the blessed Apostles, we desire to tread in the same path, and presume not, in the exercise of our solemn office, to go one step beyond them. Leaving, therefore, the secular aspects of this awful war to statesmen and to politicians, to whom they properly belong, we confine ourselves to the religious character of our national afflictions, and proceed to place before you the primary cause to which, according to the principles of our sacred faith, we are compelled to ascribe the distracted condition of our country.

No truth is more plainly taught in the Bible than this: that the nations of the world depend on the government of heaven for all their peace, their honor and prosperity. Their rise, their progress, their wars, their victories, their decline, and their destruction, are all allotted to them by the judgment of God, in accordance with the measure of their loyalty to His government, or their rebellion against His sacred law. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is the reproach of any people;" not always in the judgment of the world, but in the judgment of Him who rules the world, that glorious and divine Redeemer, who has all power, both in heaven and on earth, the King of kings, the Lord of lords, the Almighty Master of the universe.

The government of earth is a divine institution, essential to the peace, good order, and civil rights of every organized community. A loyal submission to it is therefore enjoined by the Gospel as a branch of Christian duty, and rebellion against its lawful authority is a sin against the ordinance of God. But we know, from the history of Israel, that the government of earth may set itself against the government of heaven, to which it owes its own existence, and may thus incur the heavy chastisement of the Almighty. We know that the chosen nation which was distinguished above all others by the favor of the Lord—and amongst whom He had graciously established His peculiar dwelling place—fell away from their spiritual allegiance, and forfeited all their glorious privileges. We know that the revolt of the Ten Tribes against the lawful authority of Rehoboam was decreed by the express judgment of the Most High; in punishment of the idolatry introduced by the wise and famous Solomon, through a weak indulgence of his favorites. We know that this heavy punishment failed to reclaim them, and that wars and insurrections succeeded, through a long course of years, until at length the inhabitants of Samaria were led away into captivity, and the same destiny was afterwards appointed to rebellious Judah, while both of these events are recorded as the decrees of heaven on their iniquity. And we know that after the temporary restoration of Judah, their awful rejection of the Son of God was visited by their extinction as a nation, and that the posterity of Jacob have been for eighteen centuries scattered abroad, without a country or a government which they could call their own.

Nor is this the whole. The Bible declares that the fate of all nations depends on the same divine appointment. The Lord setteth up one, and putteth down another, according to His righteous will, and prophecy and history concur to prove the absolute power of His dominion. From the whole, therefore, of this sacred record, given for the instruction of the Church to the end of the world, we learn the solemn truth that rebellion against the government of heaven may be fearfully chastised by rebellion against the government of earth, and by every other form of human calamity, in just fulfilment of the judgment pronounced by the Almighty Himself on the sins of the nations.

No Christian man can doubt that such is still the principle on which the Lord administers His government, and such it must continue to the end, for God is the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever. If we look at the changes amongst the nations of Christendom in modern times, what do we behold but war after war, rebellion after rebellion, revolution after revolution, and no warrant for security or stability to any government under heaven, because there is no nation under heaven free from the plague of rebellion against the supreme government of their Creator and Redeemer—the King of kings.

On these manifest grounds of Scripture and History, it is easy to determine the religious aspect of our own national calamities, and therefore we are compelled to recognize the Divine judgment in the terrible scourge under which our once peaceful and united country now lies bleeding. Raised by the hand of Omnipotence to a state of marvellous prosperity; placed high amongst the powers of the earth by a career of advancement rapid and extraordinary beyond all example since the days of ancient Israel; the home of liberty and equal rights; the asylum of the exile, the persecuted, and the poor; the land of perfect Christian toleration; what region in the world had so many and such precious privileges conferred upon it by the favoring Providence of the Almighty? And if we have proved unthankful, proud, and faithless, towards our divine Benefactor; if we have given to our heroes and our statesmen the praise which was due to Him; if we have put our trust not in His favor but in our own enterprise, and strength, and courage, and sagacity; if we have made popularity and wealth the objects of our idolatry, and taken the voice of the people instead of the voice of God; if we have worshipped our political Constitution, while we despised and practically rejected the government of heaven; if even professing Christians themselves presumed to set up a higher law than the Bible, and established new terms for the communion, and made their modern notions of philanthropy the rule for their brethren, against the plain allowance of the inspired Apostles; if the great majority of our men stood aloof from the Gospel in contempt of the declaration of Christ when He said "He that is not with Me is against Me;" if the Lord's day was made a time for worldly amusement, and His churches were neglected as the houses of prayer, and only thronged when they were used for political denunciation or theatrical display; if infidelity and immorality were rewarded with public trusts and honors, and the mass of the people lived as if they had no God to obey, no souls to save, and no immortal happiness to secure; if all this and much more of bold and habitual rebellion against the government of heaven could be truly laid to our charge, why should not the judgment of the Lord fall on our nation, even as it had on others, and chasten us sorely for our sins?

And—painful as the acknowledgment must be—we cannot deny the truth of the accusation. On the contrary, beloved brethren, we are compelled to add yet more to the reproach which the Redeemer may most justly lay upon our people. Rebellion against Him has raised its front with brazen audacity, by direct assaults on Christianity in many quarters. "Oppositions of science, falsely so-called," have been received with general approbation. Infidel societies using the Lord's day for meetings to denounce and ridicule the Gospel, have become, in some cities, regular institutions. Necromancy, under the name of Spiritualism, has run like wild fire through the land, deluding multitudes to condemn the Church, in all its varieties, as the teacher of falsehood and superstition. The guardianship of the Bible over the oath of office has been openly and altogether disclaimed, and the delegates of polygamy, from the territory of Mormonism, are admitted side by side with the members of our Congress. The Chinese in San Francisco are even allowed to erect a pagan temple to their idol Buddha, thus publicly proclaiming to the world that our nation, once supposed to be Christian, is prepared to tolerate all the abominations of absolute heathenism. And how have the laws of morality been heeded in the oldest and best established portions of the land? Bribery in our elections, bribery in our legislatures, bribery in Congress itself; frauds in public contracts, falsehoods and deceits for party purposes, the rapidly increasing recklessness of human life, and the fearful growth of youthful licentiousness,—all concur to prove our mournful degeneracy. Alas! rebellion against the government of God has been at work for years in our once favored country, and we have no reason to wonder that it has at length brought down upon us the judgment of His righteous indignation.

We are far, however, from applying this statement to the whole. We are well aware that many wise and thoughtful men are scattered throughout the land who foresaw the approaching danger, and raised their warning voice in vain. We doubt not that there are thousands upon thousands who could not be justly accused of any share in the prevalent delinquency. But the character of nations, as such, is determined, in the sight of God, not by the comparative few, but by the immense majority. And linked together as we are by our social connections in this present life, it must needs be, to a large extent, that the innocent will suffer with the guilty.

The period in which we live, beloved brethren, is called in Scripture "the last days" preceding the second advent of the Lord to judge both the quick and the dead, and we confess, with sorrow, the application to ourselves of the description set forth by S. Paul when he saith that "in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, Without natural affections, truce-breakers, false accusers, incourtney, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." (2 Tim. iii. 1-5)

All this, sad as it is, has been mournfully exemplified in the growing degeneracy of Christendom, and we have traced it, to a large extent, in the condition of our own land. But while we confess, with humility and contrition, our share in the general declension of our age and country, we desire to render our fervent thanksgiving to God that the principles of the Church are the same as ever. Preserved to us, through the special blessing of His Providence, by that primitive and Scriptural Liturgy in which we never fail to hear the pure instructions of His Word, and in all of whose regular offices we have the constant recurrence of the primitive creeds to guard our faith, and the prayers of the ancient saints and martyrs to guide our devotions, we enjoy the inestimable privilege of a high and holy standard displayed continually before our eyes to keep us in the path of divine truth, and protect us against the errors of popular delusion.

As individuals, we deny not our liability to be affected by the spirit of the age. We deny not our personal defects. We seek not to extenuate or excuse our personal transgressions. We claim no superiority to ourselves over other Christian men, in wisdom, strength, or piety. But we acknowledge, with humble gratitude to our Almighty Lord and Master, the superior advantages which He has bestowed upon us, in the system of His Apostolic Church, and to that, through His blessing, we ascribe the precious peculiarity of our position, in relation to our present national calamities.

The doctrine of the Church proclaims complete and unswerving allegiance, first, to the divine Redeemer who has all power in heaven and in earth, and secondly, to the government under which His Providence has placed us. With respect to this we have already cited the language of the inspired Apostle: "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." No government on earth could frame so sure a guaranty of loyalty.

These principles, delivered to us from the Holy Spirit, have always been, and we trust will always be, the standard of the Church. They are the only unfailing warrant of that high Christian allegiance which rests obedience to the lawful authority of earth upon the paramount duty of obedience to the supreme authority of heaven. The Church knows nothing of that delusive "higher law," which presumes to set at naught the plain instructions of the Word of God, in subservience to a weak and visionary philanthropy. Faithful to the Constitution of His government, as contained in the holy Scriptures, faithful to the letter and the spirit of the Constitution of the land, faithful to the decisions of the Federal tribunals which that Constitution has established, the Church stands pre-eminent before the world, not in numbers, and far less in the work of party-strife or political agitation, but pre-eminent nevertheless, as the Church of unity and peace, of law and order. We speak not of all its members. Exceptions there are, and must be, to every general rule. But we can confidently say—and we bless God for it—that as a whole, these are the principles which have guided our course. Our clergy have fulfilled their sacred office in preaching Christ and Him crucified, without falling into the dangerous error of mixing politics with religion. Our laity have desired no minister of God to entertain them with party diatribes instead of the Gospel. Our Conventions have adopted no resolution that was foreign to the proper duty of the Church. And no candid and intelligent mind can doubt that if every other religious body in the United States had been governed by the same principles, and had adhered with equal fidelity to the Word of God, we should at least have been saved from the miseries of this mournful war, and been allowed, for many years, to enjoy the temporal blessings of peaceful and fraternal union.

Your Bishops, beloved brethren, in compliance with your express desire, proceed, in conclusion, to address a few words of affectionate and pastoral counsel to all the clergy and the laity, who are placed, by the law of the Church, under their official supervision.

To the clergy we would strongly recommend the firm adherence to the same course, which we rejoice to say they have thus far generally pursued, and which is laid down, with such solemn plainness, in the office of Ordination. You cannot, reverend brethren, maintain your proper influence over your flocks, by descending from your high and sacred position as the ministers of Christ, in order to gratify the political feeling of the day, or by lowering the spiritual dignity of the sacred desk, under any pretext, to the level of a secular platform. As citizens of our great Republic, you are as free as all others to form and express your individual opinions. But take heed, we pray you, how you exercise even this liberty, to the prejudice of your sublime vocation. Remember that you are bound to be the ambassadors of Christ. And, in humble imitation of His example, let no earthly strife and no promise of earthly advantage draw you away from the great warfare against sin, the world, and the devil, or from the steadfast labor of making a rebellious generation lay to heart the supreme necessity of securing the kingdom of God and His righteousness, by the submission of their souls to their gracious Redeemer. In gentleness, in meekness, going in and out amongst your people, sympathising in their joys and especially in their sorrows, instructing the ignorant with patient kindness, guarding and teaching the young with solicitous affection, rebuking sin with mild firmness, preaching in public, with all authority, the terrors of the law, and the surpassing love and mercy of the Gospel, and showing, in all your deportment, that your own hearts are set upon the glorious inheritance of immortality, you will be enabled, by the blessing of God, to make full proof of your ministry, and in despite of all your difficulties and discouragements, the pleasure of the Lord will prosper in your hand.

To our beloved brethren of the laity we would say that the success of all ministerial work, and the pure consistency of all ministerial character, must depend, to a large extent, on your faithful co-operation. We are all men of like passions with yourselves, and you cannot expect us to be entirely exempt from the influence of social opposition, or social sympathy. O forget not that the Church is instituted for you and your children, that the clergy are ordained to be your servants for Jesus' sake, that it is for you they pray and study and labor and toil, in order rightly to divide the word of truth, and give to each his portion in due season. Tempt them not, we beseech you, to leave their sacred office, in the service of worldly strife, or political agitation. Sustain them in their proper work by a punctual and reverent attendance on their ministrations. Set to your families, and especially to your sons, the pure example which you know they ought to follow, and fall not into the too common error of supposing that a trifling contribution to the treasury of the Church is enough for the worship of God, while the whole practical influence of your life is openly given to the worship of Mammon.

We lament the sad decline of the Missions of the Church, both foreign and domestic, since the commencement of our national troubles. But is this consistent with Christian principle? Doubtless the burdens of public necessity are heavy, and your Bishops are ready to applaud the zeal and generous liberality with which you, our brethren of the laity, have so well sustained them. Yet, although the display of your patriotic feeling is worthy of commendation, and the universal effort to supply the wants and alleviate the sufferings of the army, is especially deserving of all praise, we would affectionately ask you whether these duties should be allowed to diminish the slender support of your ministers, or the missionary enterprises of the Church of God? Shall the soldiers of the Republic be tenderly supported, and shall the soldiers of Christ be neglected or forgotten? We do not see that the pressure of the times prevents the lavishing of a countless amount upon worldly pleasure and amusement, and shall that pressure be an apology for lessening the support of the everlasting Gospel? Surely, surely, these things ought not so to be. The salaries of the clergy should rather be increased in proportion to the increased price of the necessities of life, and all the missions and institutions of the Church should be sustained more zealously than ever, for the very reason that the discipline of the Lord is resting on the land in punishment of our iniquities. For this proof of your devotion would go far to show your earnest desire to deprecate His wrath, and invoke His mercy, and would manifest your sincerity in the acknowledgment that the safety and prosperity of our government on earth depend on the blessing of that Saviour who is the Supreme Governor of earth and heaven.

We have only to add the expression of our humble and fervent hope that His goodness will be displayed in the speedy restoration of peace and unity, that our national distractions will cease, and that the terrible conflicts and sufferings of this tremendous warfare will prove to be, not a judgment sent to destroy our national Government, but a salutary chastisement from His fatherly hand, to purify us from corruption and impiety. We trust that it will impress upon the great body of our people the solemn truth, which so many profess while so few realize it, that the favor of God is essential to our earthly prosperity, and that rebellion against the authority of heaven is sure, sooner or later, to call down His righteous wrath and indignation. Happy shall we be if the inhabitants of our land, admonished by this severe discipline, submit themselves to the divine Redeemer, with deep repentance for their past transgressions of His laws, and with earnest resolutions of obedience, in faithful reliance on His grace for the time to come. Happy if we remember that fleets and armies can be no effectual substitute for the favor of the Lord of hosts. Happy if we truly learn that the hearts of men are in the hand of God, and that He alone can preserve our country in the enjoyment of peace and unity.

And now, beloved brethren, we bid you, one and all, an affectionate farewell. May the blessing of the Almighty accompany you to your homes, and protect you and yours from every danger. May you all—clergy and laity—the teachers and the taught—be guided by the sacred rules of living faith and grateful obedience, under the banner of that Saviour whose name is love. May every soul contribute by his personal example to make the Church of Christ a burning and a shining light, in the darkness of a sinful world. And may we all be united in the advancement of her sacred mission, proclaiming, with one heart and voice, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men!"

REPLY OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN TO THE PASTORAL LETTER.

RIGHT REVEREND AND DEAR SIR: The copy which you sent me of the "Pastoral Letter of the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America," has been submitted to the President. He authorizes me to assure you that he receives with the most grateful satisfaction the evidences which that calm, candid, and earnest paper gives of the loyalty of the very extended religious communion over which you preside, to the Constitution and Government of the United States. I am further instructed to say that the exposition which the highest ecclesiastical authority of that communion has given in the Pastoral Letter, of the intimate connection which exists between fervent patriotism and true Christianity, seems to the President equally reasonable and unanswerable. Earnestly invoking the Divine blessing equally upon our religious and civil institutions, that they may altogether safely resist the storm of faction, and continue heretofore, as heretofore, to sustain and invigorate each other, and so promote the common welfare of mankind, I have the honor to be, right reverend and dear sir, faithfully yours,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

To C. P. McILVAINE, D. D., D. C. L.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CONVENTION OF THE DIOCESE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

At Pittsburg, May 26, 1864:

Resolved, That we hereby declare our unflinching allegiance to the Government of the United States, and that we pledge it our willing devotion and service; and that, as a body of Christians, we will ever "pray that in God's own time and way this rebellion may be put down; that oppression and slavery in all its forms may be done away; that freedom of body and mind, political and religious, may everywhere prevail; that the emancipated negroes, whom God, in His providence, is committing to our care, may be the objects of our liberal and Christian regard and instruction; that war may soon cease throughout all our borders, and that our now lacerated country may again be so united that from the lakes on the North to the Gulf on the South, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, there shall be but one Union, one Government, one flag, one Constitution, the whole culminating in that higher glory which shall make this nation Emanuel's land—a mountain of holiness and a dwelling place of righteousness."

This resolution was adopted as a substitute—yeas 125, nays 93—for these, (the latter offered by Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Philadelphia; the former by Rev. Mr. Van Deusen, of Pittsburg:)

Whereas there exists in this country organized and armed rebellion, whose purpose is the destruction of our national Union and the perpetuation of negro slavery; and whereas this rebellion has more and more assumed a character of barbarous fanaticism and murderous ferocity, on the part of the enemies of the nation; therefore, in view of the cause and character of the struggle,

Resolved, That this convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the diocese of Pennsylvania, as a body of Christian men, pledge the Government of our country our prayers, sympathy, and support in this war for existence, Union, liberty, and peace.

Resolved, That the authors and abettors of this rebellion, wherever they are found, are alone guilty of all the bloodshed and desolation on either side, entailed upon the North and South, now or hereafter.

Resolved, That, in the long delay of success in crushing this monstrous rebellion, we see wonderfully manifest the hand of God, training by His severest chastisements this reluctant people to do justice and show mercy to a long-oppressed and outraged race.

Resolved, That, under the present circumstances, the National Government, whether executive, legislative, or judicial, is, in our judgment, solemnly bound to use all its power and employ every authorized and constitutional means for the speedy and total abolition of slavery throughout the land, and that, as patriots, freemen and Christians, we shall hail with jubilant gladness and devout gratitude to God the day of its final extinction.

Subsequently, the preamble above recited was prefixed to the resolution adopted; and the resolution and preamble adopted with but one dissenting vote.

PROTEST OF PENNSYLVANIA EPISCOPALIANS AGAINST BISHOP HOPKINS'S DEFENCE OF SOUTHERN SLAVERY.

The subscribers deeply regret that the fact of the extensive circulation throughout this Diocese of a letter by "John Henry Hopkins, Bishop of the Diocese of Vermont," in defence of Southern slavery, compels them to make this public protest. It is not their province to mix in any political canvass. But as ministers of Christ, in the Protestant Episcopal Church, it becomes them to deny any complicity or sympathy with such a defence.

This attempt not only to apologize for slavery in the abstract, but to advocate it as it exists in the cotton States, and in States which sell men and women in the open market as their staple product, is, in their judgment, unworthy of any servant of Jesus Christ. As an effort to sustain, on Bible principles, the States in rebellion against the Government, in the wicked attempt to establish by force of arms a tyranny under the name of a republic, whose "corner-stone" shall be the perpetual bondage of the African, it challenges their indignant reprobation.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1860.

May 1—The body met in Buffalo, N. Y.

May 2—The following Committee on Slavery was appointed: Calvin Kingsley, Daniel Wise, Joseph Brooks, Nicholas J. B. Morgan, Isaac S. Bingham, Edward Bannister, Michael Marlay, Hiram M. Shaffer, James S. Smart, George Hildt, John M. Reid, Ammi Prince, James M. Fuller, Peter Cartwright, Hayden Hays, Thomas E. Corkhill, Levin B. Dennis, William H. Black, Charles C. Cone, Resin Sapp, Benjamin F. Crary, Joseph H. Hopkins, John S. Porter, Erastus O. Haven, Lorenzo D. Barrows, Samuel Y. Monroe, Morris D'C. Crawford, Daniel Curry, John B. Birt, John P. Kellam, Richard Hargrave, James M. Jameson, Daniel W. Bristol, Alvin F. Waller, Andrew Magee, Pennel Coombe, Charles A. Holmes, Luke Hitchcock, Fernando C. Holliday, William Cliffe, Andrew Witherspoon, John C. Ayers, Andes T. Bullard, James Drummond, John L. Williams, Wessen G. Miller, John J. Pearce.

May 16—Mr. Kingsley, from the majority, made a report, concluding with these resolutions:

Resolved, 1. By the delegates of the several Annual Conferences in General Conference assembled, that we recommend the amendment of the General Rule on Slavery, so that it shall read: "The buying, selling, or holding of men, women, or children, with an intention to enslave them."

2. That we recommend the suspension of the 4th Restrictive Rule, for the purpose set forth in the foregoing resolution.

3. By the delegates of the several Annual Conferences in General Conference assembled, that the following be and hereby is substituted in the place of the seventh chapter on slavery:

Question. What shall be done for the extirpation of the evil of slavery?

Answer. We declare that we are as much as ever convinced of the great evil of slavery. We believe that the buying, selling, or holding of human beings as chattels is contrary to the laws of God and nature, inconsistent with the Golden Rule, and with that rule in our Discipline which requires all who desire to remain among us to "do no harm, and to avoid evil of every kind." We, therefore, affectionately admonish all our preachers and people to keep themselves pure from this great evil, and to seek its extirpation by all lawful and Christian means.

Mr. Porter, from the minority, made a report, concluding with these resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That the Methodist Episcopal Church has in good faith, in all the periods of its history proposed to itself the question, "What shall be done for the extirpation of the evil of slavery?" and it has never ceased openly before the world to bear its testimony against the sin, and to exercise its disciplinary powers to the end that its members might be kept unspotted from criminal connection with the system, and that the evil itself be removed from among us.

2. That any change of our Discipline upon the subject of slavery in the present highly excited condition of the country would accomplish no good whatever, but, on the contrary, would seriously disturb the peace of our Church, and would be especially disastrous to our ministers and members in the slave states.

3. That the Committee on the Pastoral Address be instructed to state our position in relation to slavery, and to give such counsel to our Churches as may be suited to the necessities of the case.

May 24—John P. Durbin, for himself, Henry W. Reed, John C. Ayers, and Philo E. Brown, presented a substitute, concluding with this preamble and resolutions:

Seeing, then, that our uniform testimony, and our practice also, have been opposed to the traffic in slaves, and that the spirit of the provision in the Discipline is, and has been opposed to slaveholding for selfish or mercenary purposes, and that we have faithfully borne this testimony and applied these provisions in the administration of Discipline as far as a due regard to the laws of the several states have permitted in which the cases have arisen; therefore,

1. Resolved, That the administration of Discipline should be made faithfully to conform to the foregoing declaration of principles, so far as the laws of the several states will permit in which the cases may arise.

2. That in view of the clear declaration of principles and advice in regard to the administration of Discipline, as set forth in the preceding report and resolution, we judge that great moderation should be observed in the public discussion of this subject, constantly maintaining the true anti-slavery position of the Church.

On motion of Daniel Curry, the last named substitute was laid on the table—yeas, 135; nays, 85—as follows:

The amendment was then agreed to.

Mr. Durbin moved to consider his substitute; but the motion was lost.

Mr. George Hughes moved the following substitute:

Whereas a change of such magnitude as is now proposed should not be made without the sanction of the laity as well as the ministry; therefore,

Resolved, That we believe that the buying, selling, or holding of human beings, to be used as chattels, is contrary to the laws of God and nature, inconsistent with the Golden Rule, and with that Rule in our Discipline which requires all who desire to remain among us to "do no harm, and to avoid evil of every kind," we, therefore, affectionately admonish all our preachers and people to keep themselves pure from this great evil, and to seek its extirpation by all lawful and Christian means.

THE BALTIMORE CONFERENCE, 1861.

The Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in session at Staunton, Virginia, adopted resolutions declaring the immediate separation of the Conference from the jurisdiction of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, on account of the new chapter on slavery adopted last year. The vote stood for immediate separation eighty-two, declining to vote forty-four. Bishop Scott, the presiding officer of the Conference, refused to put the question on the adoption of the resolutions, and entered a protest against the action "as a violation of the order and discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church." The resolutions were:

1st. Be it resolved by the Baltimore Annual Conference in Conference assembled, That we hereby declare that the General Conference of the M. E. Church, held at Buffalo, in May, 1860, by its unconstitutional action, has sundered the ecclesiastical relation which has hitherto bound us together as one Church, so far as any act of theirs could do so; that we will not longer submit to the jurisdiction of said General Conference, but hereby declare ourselves separate and independent of it, still claiming to be, notwithstanding, an integral part of the M. E. Church.

2d. That nevertheless, in, in accordance with the spirit of the foregoing preamble, three-fourths of the several Annual Conferences, to be held prior to the next session of the Annual Conference, seeing the great wrong and injury done to the Baltimore and other Border Conferences, shall disavow the act of their delegates and the action of the late General Conference on the subject of slavery, and shall unite in a demand that the most thorough and satisfactory redress shall be given, and shall instruct their delegates so to vote in any Convention that may be called for the purpose of a more perfect union—First, by abrogating the new charter; second, by transferring the subject of slavery to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Annual Conferences, where it exists; third, that a fair proportion of the periodicals of the Church be placed under the charge and direction of said Conferences—then, and not until then, will we reunite with them in the organization of another General Conference.

3d. That this Conference has taken the action expressed in the above resolutions, after much long suffering and reproach, to give freedom to our preachers in the discharge of their duties in our territory, and cannot refrain from expressing the hope that the day may speedily come when agitation and strife shall have ceased among us, and the great Methodist family—East, West, North and South—be again united in the common effort which engaged the hearts and lives of our fathers, that of spreading Scriptural business all over the land

4th. That a committee of seven, consisting of S. Register, J. S. Martin, S. S. Roszel, E. R. Veitch, W. G. Eggleston, N. Wilson, and T. H. W. Munroe, be appointed to prepare a Pastoral Letter for our people, setting forth the grounds and aims of the action.

The following is the protest of the minority of the Conference:

We, the undersigned, members of the Baltimore Annual Conference, differing with a majority of our brethren in regard to the mode of obtaining relief from the evils which have been entailed upon us by the action of the late General Conference upon the subject of slavery, protest against the course which they have adopted—

1st. Because it is an appeal to revolution for redress, before the constitutional means have been tried, much less exhausted.

2d. Because it shapes our course without consultation with other non-concurring Conferences, all of whom have strong claim upon our fraternity, and some in slave territory will be materially affected, and probably prejudiced, in their interests thereby.

3d. Because the act is done, and announced, within the bosom of two States which are now the custodians of the Federal Union, and will strengthen the hands of political secessionists, and carry dismay to the hearts of all who would preserve our national inheritance.

But it is the mode of obtaining relief from our troubles alone in which we differ with our brethren.

We, too, protest against the "new chapter." We protest against the continuance of the subject of slavery as a question of legislation in the general councils of the church. And we ask a call of an extra session of the General Conference in 1862, and an expression by the Annual Conferences of their approval or disapproval of the terms of relief which our circumstances demand; and assure our people that, by the tone of that response and that of our sister sympathizing conferences, especially in slave territory, our course at our next session shall be controlled, whether it be further negotiation or immediate separation.

In Christian hope that these assurances will bring rest in the churches against the present year, we are, &c.

[Signed by some thirty names.]

The Western Virginia Methodist Episcopal Conference, at its annual session at Wheeling, in March, 1861, adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas the General Conference at its late session at Buffalo has inserted a new chapter in our Book of Discipline on the subject of slavery; and whereas there exists some difference of opinion as to its meaning, and whereas uniformity in administration and harmony among ourselves are very desirable: therefore

1. Resolved, That we deeply regret the action of the General Conference changing the chapter on slavery, we regarding such action as unnecessary.

2. Resolved, That, in our judgment as a Conference, the new chapter is not to be regarded as a law; that no administrative or judicial action can be had under it against any member or minister; and that we are left under it to be governed by the Scripture, amenable as individuals for our administration only to God and our annual Conference.

3. Resolved, That we utterly condemn any attempt, in any way whatever, to interfere with the legal relations of master and servant, and that we will seek to promote, as did our fathers, their best interests by preaching to them the unsearchable riches of Christ, and by teaching them their reciprocal duties as taught in the Holy Scriptures.

REPLY OF THE PRESIDENT TO THE RESOLUTIONS OF THE EAST BALTIMORE METHODIST CONFERENCE OF 1862.

REV. I. A. GERE, A. A. REESE, D. D., G. D. CHENOWETH:—

GENTLEMEN:—Allow me to tender to you, and through you to the East Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, my grateful thanks for the preamble and resolutions of that body, copies of which you did me the honor to present yesterday. These kind words of approval, coming from so numerous a body of intelligent Christian people, and so free from all suspicion of sinister motives, are indeed encouraging to me. By the help of an all-wise Providence, I shall endeavor to do my duty; and I shall expect the continuance of your prayers for a right solution of our national difficulties, and the restoration of our country to peace and prosperity.

Your obliged and humble servant,

A. LINCOLN.

GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1864.

May 2—The body met in Philadelphia.

May 7—The Committee on Slavery were instructed to inquire into the expediency of so altering the General Rules as to prohibit the buying, selling, or holding persons as slaves.

ACTION ON SLAVERY.

May 17—The Committee on Slavery—consisting of B. F. Crary, E. P. Phelps, E. C. Bruce, H. C. Benson, A. Magee, A. Nelson, M. Dustin, J. S. Smart, J. S. Murray, F. G. Hibbard, G. D. Strout, R. A. R. Brown, R. M. Hatfield, J. V. R. Miller, G. W. Breckenridge, G. M. Boyd, T. C. Golden, B. N. Spahr, E. G. Andrews, T. H. Pearne, George Barton, D. L. Dempsey, D. Wise, W. T. Harlow, W. Terrill, A. B. Nisbet, O. Gregg, G. Clifford, W. D. Malcolm, S. Haines, J. W. Reger, J. Lawson, C. D. Pillsbury, H. R. Clark—made a majority and a minority report, as follows:

THE MAJORITY REPORT.

The long contest on the subject of slavery seems drawing to a close, and no doubtful tokens indicate the will of God, and point unerringly to the destruction of a system so inhuman.

The sufferings to be endured cannot be as great as those we have passed, and the heroism of the hour is adequate to bear the burdens which may be imposed upon us.

Patriotism and piety lead us to the conclusions to which we have arrived, and, aside from all questions of expediency, impel us to adopt the policy so strongly urged in the Episcopal Address.

We rejoice that we have from the beginning been foremost among American Churches in the contest against slavery. Slavery has nothing to commend it to our forbearance; on the other hand, it has inflicted upon us injuries we cannot forget. It has rent the Church in twain, and seeks to divide the nation.

It has kindled the fires of inextinguishable hatred along an extended border, and brought indescribable distress on our brethren who have labored there. These brethren we not only admire and love, but we pledge ourselves to share with them in all that is possible or necessary in the labors of the future.

The question has reached its present status not so much through our efforts in this behalf as through the guidings of the Divine hand, whose power we reverently behold in the grand movements of our times.

The proposed new rule is only an expression of a conviction long entertained by the majority of the Church, the utterance of an edict which conscience dictates, and the teaching of God's Word approves. Abhorrence of slavery has increased with the progress of the people in moral and religious knowledge, showing that morality and religion are against the system. The voices of our common humanity protest against its longer existence, and this judgment is God's decision, for nature is true to her Author.

Your Committee could not do otherwise than give expression to the truth which more than ever affects the Church and the nation, and array the moral forces of Methodism on the side of emancipation. The great families of Methodism throughout the world will rejoice that we have taken a step which wipes out the imputation of complicity with this evil, and gives us the decided advantage of leading still in the question which has so long perplexed the Church.

We feel that no answer is needed to the pleadings of expediency once so powerfully and eloquently urged. The grandeur of an overwhelming moral conviction uttered by the whole nation and Church, should not be impaired by answers to logic which the course of events has shown to be fallacious. So far as we are concerned, then, the question, "What shall be done for the extirpation of slavery?" shall be answered by a rule uprooting it and forbidding it forever. Local difficulties and special cases will adjust themselves, and we shall be untrammelled in our future operations in territory blighted by this departing curse. Relying on the promise and mercy of God, as far as we can we "proclaim liberty throughout all the land to all the inhabitants thereof."

Loyalty to the Government leads us to accept emancipation whenever and wherever the President proclaims it, or the States decree it, and devotion to truth, and to God impels us to bring the controversy to an end in the Church by adopting a rule which casuistry cannot distort into a license for slavery.

While reviewing the past, we gratefully acknowledge the goodness of God in guiding us so harmoniously to these conclusions, and with firm trust in Him, commit our work to the judgment of the Church and of mankind.

We recommend for adoption the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1. By the delegates of the several Annual Conferences in General Conference assembled, that we recommend the amendment of the General Rule on Slavery so that it shall read: Slaveholding; buying or selling slaves.

2. That we recommend the suspension of the 4th restrictive rule, for the purpose set forth in the foregoing resolution.

3. That the bishops be requested to submit the foregoing resolutions to the Annual Conferences at their next sessions, and if the requisite number of votes be obtained, to report to the Book Agents, who are hereby instructed to insert the new rule in all subsequent editions of the Discipline.

THE MINORITY REPORT,

Signed by E. P. Phelps, L. M. Reeves, and J. W. Reger, is as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Slavery beg leave to say that they have not been able to concur with the majority in the conclusions reached by them. For good and sufficient reasons, as they think, it would not be proper to change the general rule on slavery so as to exclude all persons sustaining the relation of master from the Church; they therefore respectfully submit the following as a substitute for the general rule on slavery reported by the majority, namely:

The selling of human beings, or the buying or holding them, except for reasons purely humane.

After debate, the majority report was adopted—yeas 207, nays 9, as follows:

INTERVIEW WITH THE PRESIDENT.

Bishop Edward R. Ames, Rev. Joseph Cummings, D. D., Rev. George Peck, D. D., Rev. Charles Elliott, D. D., and Rev. Granville Moody, were appointed a Committee to present to the President the action of the Conference, with this address, unanimously voted by the Conference:

*To his Excellency Abraham Lincoln,
President of the United States:*

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, now in session in the city of Philadelphia, representing nearly seven thousand ministers and nearly a million of members, mindful of their duty as Christian citizens, takes the earliest opportunity to express to you the assurance of the loyalty of the Church, her earnest devotion to the interest of the country, and her sympathy with you in the great responsibilities of your high position in this trying hour.

With exultation we point to the record of our Church as having never been tarnished by disloyalty. She was the first of the Churches to express, by a deputation of her most distinguished ministers, the promise of support to the Government in the days of Washington. In her Articles of Religion she has enjoined loyalty as a duty, and has ever given to the government her most decided support.

In this present struggle for the nation's life, many thousands of her members, and a large number of her ministers, have rushed to arms to maintain the cause of God and humanity. They have sealed their devotion to their country with their blood on every battle-field of this terrible war.

We regard this dreadful scourge now desolating our land and wasting the nation's life as the result of a most unnatural, utterly unjustifiable rebellion, involving the crime of treason against the best of human governments and sin against God. It required our government to submit to its own dismemberment and destruction, leaving it no alternative but to preserve the national integrity by the use of the national resources. If the government had failed to use its power to preserve the unity of the nation and maintain its authority it would have been justly exposed to the wrath of heaven, and to the reproach and scorn of the civilized world.

Our earnest and constant prayer is, that this cruel and wicked rebellion may be speedily suppressed; and we pledge you our hearty co-operation in all appropriate means to secure this object.

Loyal and helpful in national adversity, in prosperity thankful, we most heartily congratulate you on the glorious victories recently gained, and rejoice in the belief that our complete triumph is near.

We believe that our national sorrows and calamities have resulted, in a great degree, from our forgetfulness of God and oppression of our fellow-men. Chastened by affliction, may the nation humbly repent of her sins, lay aside her haughty pride, honor God in all future legislation, and render justice to all who have been wronged.

We honor you for your proclamations of liberty, and rejoice in all the acts of the government designed to secure freedom to the enslaved.

We trust that when military usages and necessities shall justify interference with established institutions, and the removal of wrongs sanctioned by law, the occasion will be improved, not merely to injure our foes and increase the national resources, but also as an opportunity to recognize our obligations to God and to honor his law. We pray that the time may speedily come when this shall be truly a republican and free country, in no part of which, either state or territory, shall slavery be known.

The prayers of millions of Christians, with an earnestness never manifested for rulers before, daily ascend to heaven that you may be endued with all needed wisdom and power. Actuated by the sentiments of the loftiest and purest patriotism, our prayer shall be continually for the preservation of our country undivided, for the triumph of our cause, and for a permanent peace, gained by the sacrifice of no moral principles, but founded on the word of God, and securing in righteousness liberty and equal rights to all.

Signed in behalf of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

PHILADELPHIA, May 14, 1864.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S REPLY.

GENTLEMEN: In response to your address allow me to attest the accuracy of its historical statements, indorse the sentiments it expresses, and thank you in the nation's name for the sure promise it gives.

Nobly sustained as the government has been by all the Churches, I would utter nothing which might in the least appear invidious against any. Yet without this it may fairly be said that the Methodist Episcopal Church, not less devoted than the best, is, by its greater numbers, the most important of all. It is no fault in others that the Methodist Church sends more soldiers to the field, more nurses to the hospitals, and more prayers to heaven than any. God bless the Methodist church! bless all the churches! and blessed be God! who in this our great trial giveth us the Churches.

THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

May 27—The Committee on the State of the Country—consisting of Messrs. Joseph Cummings, J. Lanahan, I. S. Bingham, J. T. Peck, O. S. Munsell, L. B. Gurley, G. Moody, T. C. Gardner, T. M. Reese, A. C. George, G. D. Strout, J. W. Lowe, J. B. Wentworth, A. S. McCoy, G. W. Walker, W. F. Cowles, H. D. Fisher, L. M. Reeves, J. Colby, T. H. Sinex, D. Cobb, S. Huffman, J. G. Miller, Nicholas Vansant, James Pike, Charles H. Whitecar, J. B. Wakeley, G. W. Woodruff, O. V. Lemon, E. Thomson, G. M. Boyd, C. Hobart, J. W. White, W. H. Olin, T. H. Pearne, W. M'Combs, J. Henderson, D. Patten, W. F. Stewart, G. C. Smith, N. E. Cobleigh, J. E. King, R. W. Keeler, W. D. Malcom, S. Haines, J. W. Reger, J. Lawson, C. O. Pillsbury, H. R. Clark—reported an address and these resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, 1. That in this hour of the nation's trial we will remember the President of the United States, all other officers of the government, and our army and navy, in never-ceasing prayer.

2. That it is the duty of the government to prosecute the war with all its resources of men and money till this wicked rebellion shall be subdued, the integrity of the nation shall be secured, and its legitimate authority shall be re-established, and that we pledge our hearty support and co-operation to secure this result.

3. That we regard our calamities as resulting from our forgetfulness of God, and from slavery, so long our nation's reproach, and that it becomes us to humble ourselves and forsake our sins as a people, and hereafter, in all our laws and acts, to honor God.

4. That we will use our efforts to secure such a change in the Constitution of our country as shall recognize the being of God, our dependence on Him for prosperity, and also his word as the foundation of civil law.

5. That we regard slavery as abhorrent to the principles of our holy religion, humanity, and civilization, and that we are decidedly in favor of such an amendment to the Constitution, and such legislation on the part of the states, as shall prohibit slavery or involuntary servitude, except for crime, throughout all the states and territories of the country.

6. That while we deplore the evils of war that has filled our land with mourning, we rejoice in the sublime manifestations of benevolence it has developed, as seen in the Sanitary and Christian Commissions, and in the associations formed to aid the vast multitudes who have recently become freedmen, and that we pledge to these institutions our hearty co-operation and support.

THE PASTORAL ADDRESS.

May 27.—The report of the Committee on the Pastoral Address to the Members of the Church—Jesse T. Peck, D. D., Joseph Castle, D. D., L. B. Gurley, E. Adams, N. E. Cobleigh, W. H. Ferris—was adopted. These extracts relate to public questions:

We have held our session in the midst of the fearful agitations and struggles of war. Our nation has reached a most eventful crisis. Ambitious and wicked men have led the people and States of the South into a most cruel and unprovoked rebellion. The Government has been compelled to resist this rebellion by force, and the delegates of all the Annual Conferences, in General Conference assembled, have solemnly recognized this stern necessity. Our reports, resolutions and acts, of which you have been already apprized, all sustained by unanimous votes, will show the Church and the world how heartily we are identified with the nation in her struggles, with our beloved army and navy in the deadly conflicts of this war, with the President and all other officers of the Government in the grave responsibilities of their present position, and with surviving sufferers, whether bond or free.

We call your attention to the fact that slavery is the evident and guilty cause of this terrible war, and express to you our deliberate opinion that there will be no peace or safety to the Republic till this vile usurpation is utterly destroyed. We have, therefore, resolved not only to sustain the Government most heartily in the struggle against treason, but in the high purpose to extirpate the guilty cause of the rebellion. And, in consistency with these resolutions, as well as under the highest sense of imperative duty, we have determined that the Methodist Episcopal Church shall, with the least possible delay, be delivered entirely from this enormous evil. We have, therefore, proposed to the Annual Conferences such a change in the general rules as will henceforth leave no occasion for misunderstanding or controversy. Providence has at length mysteriously led us through the struggles of ages to the highest unity in the assertion and vindication of the highest right. Let us give the glory to God alone.

The war is not yet over. We can have no adequate idea of the wrongs yet to be endured, of the valuable lives yet to be sacrificed, before the nation's new life shall be placed beyond the reach of the bloody hands which seek to destroy it; but we state to you calmly and solemnly, that, in our judgment, all true patriots ought to regard their lives and treasures, without reservation, as subject to the exigencies of this conflict, until it is honorably and triumphantly ended.

And especially do we urge you to obey, at all times, the great law of love; to pray for your unnatural enemies, as well as their surviving victims; extending your most active sympathy to our numerous families and friends who mourn the loss of brave husbands, fathers, brothers, sons, by this dreadful war. You will, we trust, on no account relax your efforts for the relief and Christian education of the multitudes of freedmen now appealing to your humanity. We do also most earnestly commend to your devoted attention our suffering soldiers, and urge you to enlarged liberality in the support of those humane institutions, the Christian and Sanitary Commissions.

METHODIST PROTESTANT.

GENERAL CONVENTION OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, 1862.

November.—The body met in Cincinnati, and unanimously passed the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, Our country continues to be involved in all the horrors and dangers of a civil war unparalleled in the history of the world, alike in its gigantic proportions and in the vital interests which it shall affect for good or ill: and

Whereas, We cannot be cold spectators of the scenes occurring around us, because they appeal to our sympathies and our principles as patriots, as Christians, and as philanthropists: and

Whereas, We deem it our duty to our country, to the world at large, and to our God, to utter our sympathies and sentiments in this hour of danger to the country and to civil liberty: therefore Resolved, 1. That we cling with fond affection to the institutions bequeathed to us by our Revolutionary sires, and that we infinitely prefer them to any other that ever have been, or that may be, proposed as a substitute for them.

2. That we therefore sanction, with all our hearts, the prosecution of the current war for their maintenance, and we recommend that this war be pushed with the utmost energy and to the last extremity: because in its successful prosecution alone we see the prevention of anarchy and misrule, of wide-spread dissensions, and mediæval tyranny and vassalage, of universal distraction, contentions, and bloodshed, more fearfully desolating and terrible than anything that can now result from the course that we thus recommend.
